The room in the new school building which has hitherto been vacant, will be occupied. Under this arrangement the new building can be made to accommodate all the school children of the town. As a measure of economy, therefore, the ward building will be closed for the present, and the children who formerly attended there will now go to the new building.

In next week's paper notice will be given concerning the rooms to which the several grades will be assigned.

The Butler Record says, "while Captain Franks and his lady were attending a funeral on last Sunday, an unknown person entered his house, two miles west of town, and carried off a new suit of clothes belonging to the captain. He proceeded to the woods south of the house and changed suits, leaving his old clothes in the woods and converting Cap's. new ones into an every-day suit. This is not just the purpose for which Cap. bought them, as they were the best that could be had, but then, we presume, it suits the man that changed."

Kendalville Standard: "The First National bank of this city, bought ten or fifteen thousand dollars worth of Mexican and Trade dollars, and paid them out as money, at $1 each, flooding the country; but now that they begin to return to the bank, it refuses to take them for more than 90 cents each. The bank made a speculation by paying them out, and now it wants to make a speculation by taking them back. That is one way to do business. What do you think of it?"

Jail Delivery.

[Steuben Republican.]

Last Saturday evening about 8 o'clock two prisoners who were incarcerated in the county jail some two months ago for stealing Ancil Ward's team of horses, made their escape, and at this writing nothing has been heard from them. Their names are Emery Wooley and John Benfrew; they are about 23 years old, with fair complexions, black curly hair, and about five feet ten inches in hight. Benfrew had a scar on the right temple, and at the time of his escape wore a small black mustache. They had on black clothes, striped calico shirts, and were without vests. The circumstances of their escape are substantially as follows:

They had been confined in the lower tier of cells on the north side, and, as is the custom with all jailers, the prisoners were given the liberty of the corridor during the day-time, and at night they were locked in their cells. This privilege they took advantage of to make their escape. By some outside aid the prisoners got hold of a common case-knife which was converted into a saw, with which they succeeded in cutting off one of the bars of the corridor. This was accomplished last Saturday, while jailor Hathaway was absent attending the funeral of his mother, in York township. On account of the funeral Mr. Hathaway did not reach home until nearly dark, and soon after with lamp in hand he went to lock the prisoners in their cells. All was quiet, and not seeing the men out in the corridor, as usual, he called to them to know if each one was in his place. Receiving no answer he walked down the north hall in front of the cells, where he at once discovered that a bar had been sawed off. Instantly the thought struck him that the prisoners had already escaped into the street through the window above him, and in looking upward the chimney fell off the lamp which he carried and he was in darkness. At the same instant the two men sprang from their hiding place, in the south hall, to the door, and leaped out into the street. They then ran east to the end of the street, jumped the fence and struck out for the woods, across A. W. Henry's farm. The plot for their escape was evidently a well planned one. Each man carried in his hand a weapon of defence, one having a bar of iron and the other a heavy chair arm. These weapons they purposed using in the event of their interception on the way out of the jail, or in case they were overtaken in their flight to the country. A reward of $50 is offered for their capture, or delivery at the Angola jail; or $25 will be paid for the detention or delivery of either one.—Some inconsiderate persons, as is usually the case in all emergencies, are inclined to censure Mr. Hathaway.—This we think they do without knowing the facts, or if knowing the circumstances, without a fair, candid consideration of them. A horse thief by the name of Johnson, escaped last year, in the month of July, from the LaGrange jail, by way of means similar to the above.

—Byron will play with the bees and the bees will sting, consequently can't see.

—Wm. H. Dills, of Auburn, paid his brother, J. W. Dills, a visit over Sunday.

—Fred Meyers and wife, of New Haven, Ind., were visiting friends here the past week.

—A war on a small scale was indulged in on Saturday by Joe. and Dan., but resulted pleasantly for both parties. No blood spilled or bones broken.

—Rhodebech has completed his cider mill and is now ready to manufacture apple juice in any quantity. Bring along your apples and make the old gent happy.

—When Dan H. starts on his Sunday night visit, those unacquainted with him might think he was after a doctor, rather than going to see his fair one. He goes so fast.

—Instead of taking unto himself a wife as reported a few weeks ago, James will sail for Paris, France, in a few days, the company of the widow becoming monotonous. It seems the world's fair has just sprung new attractions, especially for Jim.

—A few walnut logs have been a great source of trouble to Dan of late. He succeeded in getting a few logs on the railroad, hardly large enough for good walking sticks, and has had every lumber man far and near to look at them. Saturday a sale was made at $30.00. A good price for a dozen or more canes.

Spencerville Items.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains.

We again assert that we sell not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max.

An extra force of salesmen in attendance at the Star Clothing House.

As we have stores in all the principal cities in the west, we have facilities for buying that small dealers do not possess.

8 oz. Duck Overalls for 40c at the Star Clothing House. They are selling at 75c elsewhere.

A German friend of ours who has the misfortune to be in the same business as we are in, stood in front of the Star Clothing House, threw up both hands, and exclaimed, "Mine Gott, vat a crowd of beoples!".

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

The Atlantic coast from Connecticut northward was swept by a furious tornado on the 9th inst. At Wallingford, Ct., it was attended by a distressing loss of life and property. Ninety buildings were leveled to the ground, twenty persons killed, and about forty more or less injured. At Watertown, N. Y., a vast amount of property was destroyed by the sudden rising of the waters. On the Connecticut coast a vessel was struck by lightning, split in two, and sunk instantly. Hundreds of buildings in the line of the storm were struck by lightning, and many people killed by the electric fluid. The damage to farm property is described as simply appalling. Barns, fences, etc., were swept away like chaff, and the growing crops of grain leveled to the ground. Altogether it was the most violent and destructive visitation of the kind that has ever been experienced along that coast.

A terrible explosion in a steam sawmill, at Shamokin, Pa., last week, caused the instant death of three persons, and the fatal wounding of three others.

The funeral of twenty-five of those killed by the tornado in Wallingford, Ct., took place on Sunday, the 11th inst. Ten thousand people were present, and fully 2,000 carriages. The jam was immense, and the scene one of great sadness. The cemetery was surrounded by the local company of National Guards, and 125 special officers. The interments were made in fifteen graves.

Work on the big East River bridge, connecting New York and Brooklyn, has been suspended for want of funds, and 500 men discharged.

John R. & George W. Cecil, bankers and brokers, New York, have gone into bankruptcy. Liabilities about $200,000; assets nominal.

The dead and bloated bodies of millions of fish have been lately found in the rivers and lakes of Northern New York, supposed to be from the effects of Paris green which has been used to destroy potato bugs, but has been washed off by the rains and carried to the rivers. Many of the fish have been opened and found to be bloated about the stomach, especially when partly-digested potato bugs were found in them.

THE WEST.

Considerable excitement has been created at Cincinnati by the development that a manufacturer in that city is engaged in the manufacture of a large quantity of hand grenades, presumably for the Communists.

An extremely malignant type of hog cholera prevails in Green county, Wis. Nearly 600 head of swine fell victims to it in two weeks.

The express train bound from Omaha to St. Louis was robbed between Winthrop Junction and Sugar lake, on the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs railroad, 150 miles south of Omaha, early on the morning of Aug. 13, by a party of masked men, who rode on horseback to Winthrop, and there boarded the train. They secured $5,057 from the United States Express car, and escaped. There were four men engaged in the robbing. The entire work was done in less than five minutes. The train was filled with passengers, but none knew of the robbery until the robbers escaped. The thieves were cool and collected, showing no signs of timidity, and went to work like old, experienced hands. None of them were masked.

The people of Cincinnati have voted an additional loan of $2,000,000 to aid in building the Cincinnati and Southern railroad. Including the new loan and the interest already paid, the city has put over $20,000,000 into this enterprise.

The Chicago Daily Commercial Bulletin has crop reports from 261 counties in Illinois, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Missouri, Colorado and Utah, which indicate that the increase in the acreage of spring wheat is 34.81 per cent., and the average yield per acre, 12.25 bushels, against 17.93 bushels last year; aggregate yield, 122,000,000 bushels, against 128,587,000 bushels last year.

THE SOUTH.

There has been a sudden and terrible outbreak of yellow fever at Grenada, in the northern central section of Mississippi. The place is remote from New Orleans, and has undoubtedly been infected by railroad passengers fleeing from the plague in that city.

The streets of Edgefield, S. C., were the scene of a bloody affray, one day last week, the culmination of an old feud between the Booth and Toney families. The result of the fight in casualties is as follows: Brooker Toney, James Booth, and Thomas Booth, killed; Benjamin Booth, mortally, Mark Toney and W. L. Coleman, seriously, and S. Booth, D. Sanders, S. Ryan, and Clarence Seigler, slightly wounded. Several of these were innocent spectators, not at all concerned in the affray. All the persons engaged in the encounter, and all the killed and wounded, were white men. They had gathered together to listen to a speech from Wade Hampton.

Wilson Childress, Fountain Banks, Octave Louve, and Aaron Carter, all colored, were hanged at Donaldsonville, La., on the 14th inst., for the murder of Narcisse Arroux, a white man, in December, 1876.

The August returns to the Department of Agriculture show an average condition of the cotton crop in the ten cotton States of 95, a decline of 4.

The reports from the yellow-fever infected towns of the South are truly distressing. The disease has become alarmingly epidemic at Memphis, and the citizens are fleeing from the plague as fast as they can get away. The Collector of Internal Revenue and the Postmaster have appealed to the Secretary of War for tents and rations for the poor. Nearly all the towns in all directions are quarantined against the city. The ravages of the epidemic at Grenada have been truly appalling. The acting Mayor of the town telegraphed North last week that the town was almost completely deserted—only 800 people left, and half of them down with the fever.

THE PRESIDENTIAL INVESTIGATION.

The Potter Investigating Committee met at New York, and resumed taking testimony, on the 13th inst. W. H. Roberts, editor of the New Orleans Times, was the first witness called. He said he was selected to go to Ohio and see Gov. Hayes, in the interest of the Nicholls Government, shortly after the Returning Board met. He called on Murat Halstead, of the Cincinnati Commercial, as he passed through Cincinnati, and told him that he had come on for the purpose of learning Gov. Hayes' views in regard to the South, and what policy he would adopt in the event of his being counted in as President. The witness, in the course of his conversation with Halstead, told him that what could be done would be done to save the State, remarking to him that "whatever horse loses, our horse wins." Halstead gave him a sealed letter of introduction to Gov. Hayes, the contents of which he was ignorant. His interview with Gov. Hayes was of an exceedingly pleasant character, and he learned that the Governor entertained the most friendly feeling toward the South. The witness told him that the State must be saved, at all hazards, to the Democrats, and that whatever he threw over would in that respect be of the least value to them. He also told the Governor that they could establish or show a vote of 18,000. Gov. Hayes told the witness that he had no desire for the Presidency unless he were counted in fairly. He spoke very kindly and courteously of the South. Witness detailed, at length, the conversations he had at various times before the matter was definitely settled with Mr. Lamar and others. Witness said, from conversations with various Republican leaders, he understood if Louisiana and South Carolina were counted for Hayes the government of those States would be given to the Democrats. They proceeded on this assurance, and the assurances were carried out. Witness said he understood from Hayes' manner and conversation that Nicholls' Government would be given a chance to establish itself. Witness said he was offered the position of Naval Officer at New Orleans, but recommended that it be given to a "nigger." He would not take any such position where he would be obliged to take care of Kenner, of the Returning Board.

William H. Roberts was further examined by the committee on the 14th. Question by Gen. Butler—When did you first hear of the appointment of the MacVeagh Commission? A. About the 20th of February, I think. I was speaking with several parties—Mr. Foster among others—and the question of letting down the Packard people easily came up. Then the commission, with a majority of Republicans on it, was suggested. Maj. Vining and others said it was a "capital idea." The idea was that the commission, sanctioned by the President and Secretary of State, would make the Republicans in Louisiana yield and give the State to the Nicholls Government. It was well understood that the commission was under official instructions. Q. By Gen. Butler—Then you looked on the commission coming down there as a farce? A. Well, not exactly. Q. But, no matter what the evidence and state of facts were, the commission had to come to a predetermined conclusion? A. Yes, sir; we understood so. Q. It was determined that one government was to be let down easy? A. That's it, exactly. The witness said the only assurances they received that the Packard Government would be let down easy were from Matthews, Foster, Garfield, Denison, and perhaps Evarts.... John E. Leete, a former tax collector under Kellogg's administration in Louisiana, was the next witness. He testified that in the census of 1875 it was deemed advisable by the Republicans to swell the census of colored people as high as possible, so that the basis of registration could be as high, as every colored man was understood to be a Republican. The Democrats ignored that census as a fraud. Witness was told to find a large Republican census, meaning a large colored contingent. They told me, said witness, to find them, no matter how I did it. I refused to do so.

The examination of John A. Leete was continued on the 15th. He said: "When Anderson called on me, after coming from East Felicians, he told me that he had carried out the programme, as was well understood between Kellogg, Anderson and myself. The programme was to keep the colored Republicans from voting. It was thought best to exclude the colored Republican vote, so that the Returning Board could throw out the whole Democratic vote, of the parish if necessary. Anderson went back to East Felicians, and a peaceable election was held. Anderson told me that he did not mean to make any protest until he found out where the land lay. Kellogg urged me to do what I could to get Anderson to make the protest. In an interview with Kellogg, he said that, no matter what Anderson would do, he would count the State in for Hayes. We agreed to Kellogg's plan to count in Hayes. Anderson told me that he and Weber had an interview with Sherman, and that Sherman had promised them everything. I told Anderson that he was an unmitigated lunatic to believe in anything but a written contract. Another day he called on me, and said: "I've got it." I replied, "What have you got; more taffy?" He said, "No, sir; I've got them fixed." He pulled out a letter and said it was from John Sherman, and was a letter giving him the Naval Office. He showed me John Sherman's name at the foot of the letter, but refused to let me see the remainder of the letter. I had a talk with Darrall and Kellogg about that letter. Kellogg said the letter was only a general one and non-committal. Kellogg and I considered the count of votes finished before it was begun. I spoke with Darrall about the Sherman letter, and he said it gave no grip to Anderson on the statesmen.

GENERAL.

The Bankers' National Association has just held its annual session at Saratoga, N. Y. Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was chosen President for the ensuing year.

The Orange Young Britons and 'Prentice Boys of Ottawa, Canada, celebrated the relief of Derry on the 12th inst., by a procession and picnic. About 100 Young Britons of Montreal came up and took part. Much feeling was roused in the Catholic section of the city, and the Montreal Britons had to walk three miles from the city to take a train for home, in order to escape the violence of a mob of about 300 at the depot. When the city Britons returned from the junction, whither they had accompanied the Montreal party, they proceeded to the lower town and attacked a number of Catholic houses, firing their revolvers indiscriminately into every crowd they met. A number of people were wounded, and the police made many arrests.

The thirty-second annual session of the Supreme Council of the Templars of Honor was held at Janesville, Wis., last week. A large number of representatives were present from various parts of the country.

A decision has been rendered by Attorney General Devens and sent to the Secretary of the Interior, involving an important legal question in granting letters patent. It is to the effect that wherever letters patent are given out in the names of several individuals, when in fact but one is the inventor and the others hold only an interest by assignment, they are absolutely void, and cannot be rendered valid by any act of the parties or the Patent Office. This opinion is of great importance to patentees and manufacturing companies under what they believe to be exclusive privileges, for when a grave error of this character occurs at the outset, and a period of two years intervenes before the defect is discovered or a correct application for a patent is submitted to the Patent Bureau, the invention becomes public property.... Murat Halstead, of the Cincinnati Commercial, has sailed for Europe.... The first National Microscopical Congress ever held in this country convened at Indianapolis last week. About 100 delegates from different parts of the country were present.

POLITICAL.

The Texas Greenbackers met in State convention at Waco on the 8th inst. and nominated Gen. W. H. Hamman for Governor.

Gen. Banning was defeated for a renomination for Congress in the Second Ohio District.

Private Dalzell has issued the following card, which fully explains itself: "I have withdrawn from the Congressional race in the Thirteenth Ohio district, though I was sure of a nomination on the 21st inst. But I have no money. How could I hope to win against a man willing to spend a million? I dare not try. The system is wrong. A poor man should be as eligible to Congress as a rich one. The man who buys an office will sell it. I will keep clear of the dirty business."

The Michigan Prohibitionists met in State Convention at Lansing, Aug. 13th, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, Watson Snyder; Lieutenant Governor, J. W. McKeever; Secretary of State, Traverse Phillips; State Treasurer, D. H. Stone; Attorney General, E. G. Fuller; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Samuel Dickey; Land Commissioner, Wm. G. Brown; Auditor General, L. T. Farnsworth; Member of the State Board of Education, Charles Latour. In the convention there were many ladies, some of whom were delegates, and who exercised their rights as voters with grace.... The Greenbackers of Connecticut have nominated Charles Atwater, of New Haven, for Governor.

The Nebraska Greenback State Convention was held at Lincoln, Aug. 14. L. G. Todd was nominated for Governor, and J. W. Davis for Congress.... The Louisiana Republican State Committee met at New Orleans last week, and, after a long discussion, voted to call a State Convention Sept. 18, and maintain a vigorous campaign.... Alex. H. Stephens has been renominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Eighth Georgia district, and Judge William D. Kelley has been nominated for reelection by the Nationals of the Fourth Pennsylvania district.... The State Greenback Convention of Colorado met at Denver last week, with representatives from all the counties of the State, and nominated Dr. R. G. Buckingham, of Denver, for Governor, and a full State ticket.

WASHINGTON.

At a Cabinet meeting the other day—a Washington dispatch reports—it was resolved that hereafter the rights of American citizens on the Mexican border must be respected, or blood will follow. The Secretary of War was instructed to notify Gen. Ord that his duty in the future will remain the same as in the recent past—to pursue and punish marauders from Mexico, no matter where found.

A daughter of Gen. Twiggs writes to the Secretary of the Treasury protesting against the three valuable swords of her father being given to the lady in England who claims that they were given her by Gen. Twiggs after he left New Orleans. In a letter, which she produces, Gen. Twiggs' daughter says that this claim is preposterous, and that her father provided for the disposition of the swords in his will. The Treasury Department has sent for a copy of the will.

President Hayes has accepted an invitation to attend the Minnesota State Fair, to be held at St. Paul.... It is the intention of the President to visit his home in Fremont, Ohio, the last of this month, and then go to St. Paul via Chicago on the evening of the 3d of September.... Webb C. Hayes, son of the President, will be married, early in the fall, to a young lady of Fremont, Ohio.

A Washington dispatch says: "All the members of the Cabinet, except the Secretary of War, will be absent from the city before the close of the week. Secretary Schurz will be absent a week, and Secretary Thompson and Judge Key about a month. Judge Devens leaves to-night for a ten-days' visit to Massachusetts. The impression remains strong that he will succeed the late Judge Shipley."

Postmaster General Key started, last week, on an extended tour to the Pacific coast.

FOREIGN.

A severe battle was fought between the Austrians and Bosnians Aug. 8, in which the former were victorious. The loss of the Austrians was fifty killed and wounded. The Bosnian forces numbered about 5,000, and included artillery and a large force of Turkish regulars led by regular officers. Four hundred of the latter were captured.... A Trebizond dispatch reports that the native tribes are gathering in great force in the defiles leading to Artvin, determined to oppose the carrying out of the decisions of the Berlin congress. It is estimated that their numbers will reach 15,000 men.... An explosion in the mines or magazines of the fortifications of Kars, recently, caused the destruction of the principal part of the town by fire.

The American officers in the Egyptian army have all been discharged except Gen. Stone.... A Paris dispatch says Lewis Baker, who shot Bill Poole in New York in 1855, died in that city. Baker lived in Paris under the assumed name of Jackson.... A London dispatch says there is a strong reason for believing that the English Government intends to gain a footing on the main'and of Asia Minor. The Scanderoon port of Aleppo is named as the probable objective point.... At Odessa, in Russia, sentence of death was passed upon one of the Nihilist agitators, and four others were condemned to hard labor. In the excitement which followed, the crowd fired upon the troops, wounding four. The fire was returned, and two rioters were killed.... Large concessions are promised by the Sultan to the Cretans, and it is supposed there will be peace and contentment in the island when these reforms are secured. But it has been determined in Constantinople to reject the demands of Greece, which are considered unreasonable.

The Russian troops are being withdrawn from Constantinople, San Stefano and Gallipoli. The Turkish troops will occupy the positions immediately. Adrianople will be evacuated by the Russians in six weeks, and Erzeroum and Bayazid will be evacuated as soon as the British fleet is withdrawn.... An uprising of Mohammedan fanatics has occurred at Livnö, Herzegovina. The Turkish commandant was killed. The troops made common cause with the insurgents, and marched with them on Skoplie.... A Russian torpedo cutter exploded in the harbor of Nicolaieff, killing thirty-four persons.

Among the successful American exhibits in the Paris Exposition are McCormick's reaper and Pullman's palace car. Specimens of American coal and wheat receive gold medals.... The Under-Secretary for India, when introducing the Indian budget in the British Parliament, the other day, gave the official estimate of the number of deaths from famine in India at 1,850,000.... In the hope of putting an end to the rebellion in Bosnia, the Porte has appointed Mehemet Ali its Commissioner to that province.

A Paris dispatch says that of the eleven objects of art offered by the Agricultural Society of France for exceptional merit in agricultural machinery in the recent field trials, eight have been awarded to American inventions, and, independent of the Exhibition proper, the United States agricultural exhibit has received a diploma of honor, and the United States educational exhibit a gold medal.

The Danger of Boxing the Ear.

Scarcely a day passes, we believe, without some schoolmaster (or schoolfellow, in natural imitation of his master) giving a lad a smart "box" upon the ear. Few persons would be bold enough to choose the eye as a part upon which it was expedient to inflict a violent blow by way of moral education; but there is, apparently, no end to the numbers who select an organ upon which violence is liable to be attended with much more dangerous results. For not only is deafness caused by "boxes," which rupture (as they continually do) the drum of the ear, but the inflammation of the internal cavity, which is so frequent a result, may be followed years afterward, perhaps, by disease of the bone, giving rise to abscess of the brain, and having a fatal termination.

Medical men alone can be fully aware how fruitful a source of suffering and danger is represented by the box upon the ear. We are informed, for example, of two cases under observation at the present moment, in which schoolboys have been the victims of such an assault. Surely schoolmasters ought to have learned, long ere this, the danger of a mode of personal chastisement that has apparently usurped the place of others, which, if more disgusting, were not attended with an equal amount of peril.—London Lancet.

An influx of Mennonites is anticipated between this and 1880, in which year their exemption from military service will end in Russia, where they number 200,000.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

The Figures of the Fiscal Year Complete—A Balance of $261,744,080 in Favor of the United States.

Mr. Joseph Nimmo, Jr., the acting chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, has finally obtained the returns of the commerce for June from the Pacific coast, and has now completed a comparative statement of the imports and exports of the United States for the fiscal year ended the 30th of June, compared with like data for the corresponding periods of the year immediately preceding, specie values. The figures are corrected to Aug. 1, 1878. They make a remarkable showing, and are as follows:

MERCHANDISE.	For the twelve Months ended June 30.
1878—Exports, domestic	$680,683,798
Exports, foreign	14,300,403
Total	$694,984,200
Imports	437,051,540
Excess of exports over imports	$257,832,687
1877—Exports, domestic	$589,670,224
Exports, foreign	12,804,996
Total	$602,475,220
Imports	451,323,127
Excess of exports over imports	$151,152,094
GOLD AND SILVER—(COIN AND BULLION).
1878—Exports, domestic	$27,064,987
Exports, foreign	6,678,240
Total	$33,739,225
Imports	29,821,313
Excess of exports over imports	$3,911,912
1877—Exports, domestic	$43,134,738
Exports, foreign	13,027,459
Total	$56,162,197
Imports	40,774,414
Excess of exports over imports	$15,387,823
TOTAL MERCHANDISE AND SPECIE.
1878—Exports, domestic	$707,738,783
Exports, foreign	20,878,643
Total	$728,617,426
Imports	466,872,846
Excess of exports over imports	$261,744,579
1877—Exports, domestic	$632,804,962
Exports, foreign	25,832,495
Total	$658,637,457
Imports	492,097,540
Excess of exports over imports	$166,539,917

This is the most remarkable showing in American history. The exportation for the month of June, the figures for which have not heretofore been printed, was $46,745,286, specie values, and importation, $35,506,287. Of the total trade of $82,000,000, a little over $49,000,000 was transacted at the port of New York.

Real Brown Bread.

A writer in Nature discusses the comparative nutritive qualities of white bread, brown bread, and whole-meal bread. He says: We shall find it impossible to make, by means of leaven or yeast, a light spongy loaf from whole wheat finely ground, the so-called cerealin of the bran inducing chemical changes which results in a moist, clammy, denseproduct. Even whole wheat merely crushed into meal, and not ground, partakes of the same defect. Fine flour, on the other hand, yields a bread which is light enough before mastication, but which, when masticated, possesses a marked tendency to become compacted into dense lumps which may never be penetrated by the gastric and intestinal juices, and which are a frequent cause of constipation. Whole-meal bread cannot be charged with this defect; indeed, it acts medicinally as a laxative, and by reason of its mechanical texture is hurried rather too quickly along the digestive tract, so that the full virtue of such of its nutrients as are really soluble becomes in part lost. Yet there is no doubt that, for many persons, especially those who have passed middle age and are engaged in sedentary occupations, whole-wheaten meal, in the form of bread, biscuits, scones, etc., forms an invaluable diet. If we could reckon all the nitrogenous matter in whole-meal bread as equally effective with that contained in white bread, we should possess in the former a far more perfectly-adjusted food; for the ratio of flesh-formers to heat-givers is about 1 to 7½ in white bread, while it approaches 1 to 4, in some samples, at least, of whole-meal bread. Add to this the higher proportion of phosphates in the latter, and its chemical superiority over white bread becomes still more marked; its flavor, too, is far richer. Ordinary brown bread is a poor preparation at the best. By adding a hash of rather rough bran to flour we do not obtain a satisfactory or rich product; analysis demonstrates this fact clearly.

A Story That Hayes Narrowly Escaped Assassination.

While it is fresh in my memory, let me tell a story which came to me direct last night from a party who was interested in the matter. We were discussing the subject of the Lincoln assassination, and the avidity with which each particular of that crime was now devoured by the hungry public, and he told me how, by almost an accident, the life of President Hayes was preserved on the day of the inauguration. On the evening of the 3d a young man went to a Catholic priest in this city, and said he was in great trouble and had come for advice. With a few words of encouragement from the monk, he proceeded to state that he had met during the day an acquaintance, a gentleman from Chicago, who told him he was here for the purpose of shooting Mr. Hayes the next day while he should be delivering his inaugural address, adding: "I have known him for some time, father; he means what he says, and I really believe he has brooded so long over the election frauds that he will carry out his design. I am a Democrat. I do not want Mr. Hayes seated, but I cannot tolerate the idea of murder, nor do I better like the idea of betraying that man, who may or may not be sane. What shall I do?" "Do?" said the friar, "wait until I change my habit for my coat and I will tell you." He asked the young man to accompany him, and they went to the residence of McDevitt, a well-known detective, finding him at home. The priest told the man to repeat his story, and to show McDevitt where to find the would-be assassin. The father left them, and four hours later McDevitt came to his house and informed him he had gone to the hotel, found the gentleman in the midst of a perfect arsenal of weapons, put them and him in a carriage and conveyed both to police headquarters, where they were kept until the 5th of March, when the gentleman was sent with a nurse to his home. His mind was quite unhinged by political excitement, and he was in a condition most favorable to emulate the example set by that crazy actor, Booth.—Washington Letter to Cincinnati Enquirer.

American Cutlery Abroad.

Mr. Cowles, of the Cleveland Leader, crossed the ocean with Senator McPherson, of New Jersey, and relates that the latter gentleman, before leaving New York, was introduced to an English gentleman who was buying American cutlery to transport to Sheffield! The Senator said he was surprised at this; the idea of manufacturing cutlery in this country to send to Sheffield was more strange than that of sending coal to Newcastle, for anthracite could be sent at a profit to the latter place. The Senator, after being introduced to the English gentleman, inquired what in the world he would do with American cutlery in competition with the world-renowned Sheffield's at its own door. The Englishman replied that he had "contracted with a Connecticut manufacturing firm for $250,000 worth of cutlery goods, to be stamped with his Sheffield trade-mark, because he could get them delivered in Sheffield 10 per cent. cheaper than he could manufacture them himself!" "But," said the surprised Senator, "how about the quality of the cutlery you have contracted for; how does it compare with the celebrated cutlery of your city?" "Sir, it is, if anything, superior. You have the best steel in the world, and with your labor-saving machinery you can manufacture the best of cutlery cheaper than it can be done anywhere else. Your financial troubles, resulting in the cost of everything, including labor, being reduced to hard-pan, will prove, in the long run, to be the best thing that has happened to your country. You will soon be competing with Europe for the markets of the world, and the time is not far off when you will rank with England as a manufacturing nation."

Talk With Tom Thumb.

Tom Thumb is rather fat, bearded, and looks his age of 40 years, according to a correspondent of the Boston Herald, who visited him a few days ago at his home in Middleboro, Mass. His mother, and his married brother and sister live in the neighborhood. He showed a tiny coat that he wore over thirty years ago, when first exhibited, and said: "I used to slip into this easy enough, but now, why I don't believe an ordinary-sized man could more than squeeze two of his fingers into that sleeve. Those were the days when I was a little chap, and no mistake. I used to weigh only about twenty pounds, and measured an even eighteen inches high; but now," slapping his thigh, "I'm a portly old fellow of seventy pounds, and I guess I'm a little rising forty inches. I stopped growing tall—queer to speak about my being tall, isn't it?—when I was about 22 years old. Since then I've been maturing and getting stout." Tom denied Barnum's story about a rivalry between him and Commodore Nutt for the hand of Lavinia Warren. "Vina never looked on him except as a boy," he said, "he was so much younger than she." As to the reports of Nutt's marriage with Minnie Warren, who recently died, he said: "People fell naturally into the idea because they were of the same age—he was born in April and she in June, 1849—and traveled so much together. Sometimes hotel-keepers would tell us that such and such a room had been set apart 'for Mr. and Mrs. Commodore Nutt,' and they were surprised to learn that there was no 'Mrs. Nutt.' Maj. Newell, to whom she was married in July of last year, is 23 years old."

A Bloodless Duel.

A couple of colored gentlemen became involved in a quarrel on Wednesday of last week, at Simkins' livery stable, when Simkins suggested that they retire beyond the incorporate limits and fight it out in accordance with the code. The suggestion was promptly acquiesced in, and in a few minutes all preliminaries were arranged for a terrible death struggle. The location selected was the grove west of Dr. Taylor's residence; Messrs. E. B. B. and W. D. S. volunteered their services as seconds; Mr. J. F., provided with a carpenter's saw and rule, was selected as the surgeon; Mr. J. L. was to provide breech-loading rifles, and Mr. T. B. S. was chief director. The principals were posted, the seconds and surgeon assumed their respective stations, and the rifles, loaded with blank cartridges, were placed in the hands of the belligerents.

Principal No. 1 was cool and determined, and evidently meant himself, but No. 2 was nervous and excited, and, when his eyes rested upon the glittering barrel of his gun, he exclaimed: "Look here, gemmen, dis ere gun's too bright for me!" and attempted to leave the field. He was brought back and notified that, unless he "stood up like a man," his second would shoot him down, whereupon he dropped his gun, seized E. B. B. (his second) around the waist, and held him between himself and his antagonist. The barricade was speedily removed, when the courageous negro fled from the field like a race horse, thus preventing "murder most foul." Those who witnessed the burlesque on the code duello describe it as rich beyond description, and at least one of the principals is cured of his bragging propensities.—Monticello (Ga.) Constitution.

Newburyport, Mass., is almost under the shadow of Plymouth Rock. In old times it was a crime to swear on the street, and if the boys did not go to church the deacons hunted them up and drove them in. Things, however, have changed. On a recent Sunday six excursion steamboats were plying about the harbor; the preachers were all out of town enjoying their vacations, and a score of farmers, to save the tide, were mowing in the marshes.

"Och, Jamie, did ye niver hear uv my great speach afore the Hibernian Society?" "No, Pat, how should I? for sure I was not on the ground." "Well, Jamie, you see I was called upon by the Hibernian Society for a spache; and, be jabers, I rose with the inthusiastic cheers of thousands, with me heart overflowing with gratitude, and me eyes filled with tears, and divil a word did I spake!"

A husband applying for a divorce at Cardiff, Wales, lately, testified that his wife had not been sober for seven years.

A South African Diamond Mine.

From whatever direction one comes from the surrounding plain, the most prominent sight is the lofty range of sand mounds, rising up from out the center of the town, and over-topping everything. These are composed of earth from the original thirteen surface acres of the Kimberley mine, and thrown up around the edge of the gradually-deepening pit, just as the ant on a smaller scale piles up a circular ridge around its hole. By diamond "mine" in Africa is meant a pipe of several acres superficial area and unknown depth, running straight down through stratified layers of shale. Each pipe, and there are only four, is filled in to the level of the general surface of the plain with sand, tufa, and a diamond-bearing breccia or soft rock. The Kimberley pipe or mine has now been excavated to a depth of about 250 feet. Most of the streets of the town converge to it. We walk to the edge of rock which surrounds it, called the "reef," and before and beneath us extends an abyss—a huge, oval-shaped cauldron—open full to the skies. Over its ledge lies a sheer descent of 250 feet; across it, from side to side, a stretch of 1,000 feet, or a fifth of a mile. Coming even as one does from the life and stir of the town, the first look into the mine is a fascinating and bewildering one.

Little by little the facts unfold and steal upon the attention. One talks to his neighbor as to a deaf man, for a steady hum or roar fills the air, chiefly made up of human voices and the whir of buckets ascending and descending on their wire ropes. Ten thousand men are working below and around us, in the pit and around its edge. All is in plain sight, for there is no burrowing underground. Far below, little black pigmy men—so they seem in the distance—are moving about, but not singly or at random, for closer observation shows that they are working in groups, each group upon a certain well-defined square patch of solid earth, at which it is picking and delving, or walking to and fro over it, carrying little buckets of loosened soil. In their midst sits or stands a white overseer, or the master himself.

Spreading over the whole excavation or pit, cauldron, pot or basin, whichever conveys the clearest idea, like a spider's web on a dewy morning, run innumerable little white threads, so they seem as they glisten in the sun. Follow one such thread to our feet, and it will be found to be a shining wire rope, worn white with constant use. And here on the edge or brim, called, as we know, the "reef," we find a scene of life and labor even more animated than below.

All around, but chiefly on two opposite sides, is erected a strong framework of timber called the "staging," estimated to have cost $250,000. It is built in three tiers, like a three-story house, and each tier is floored to afford standing-room for laborers. Firmly set all along each tier of this staging are hundreds of wooden wheels, about four feet in diameter, with a crank on each side, to be turned by four Kaffirs. The iron ropes run from every part of the circumference, but differ greatly in length—some extending vertically down the reef, some far out into the center of the mine, and others to varying intermediate distances, but each to its own claim. Such a rope is stretched from the bearings of each wheel on the staging to its corresponding claim below, where it is made fast to a post sunk firmly in the ground. Thus a wheel, a wire rope and a "claim," be it only a sixteenth, are inseparable and equal in number. On these wire ropes the "blue stuff" is hauled in buckets, by aid of the windlass, up out of the mine.—Dr. Morton, in Scribner for August.

From the beginning of the reign of George III. to that of Victoria, upward of 200 duels were fought in England. In three, both combatants were killed; in eighty, one; and in all, 120 were wounded. Upward of twenty trials connected with duels occurred, in which four duellists were found guilty and two hanged. In the list of duellists occur the names of York, Norfolk, Castlereagh, Pitt, Fox, Sheridan, Grattan, Burdett, Canning, Peel and Wellington.

The Minnesota farmers have been obliged to go back to the old-fashioned grain cradle to cut their tangled wheat.

THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

A Secret Chapter of Political History—Letter from Manton Marble—Mr. Tilden's Relations to the Electoral Count of 1876—Facts that Have an Interest for the People.

In the recent correspondence between Henry Watterson and Abram S. Hewitt the former called upon Mr. Manton Marble, as the only personal witness of some of the facts in the history of the electoral bill and of Mr. Tilden's relation thereto, to publish these facts and put on record the whole of this important chapter in our political annals. Mr. Marble, in response, publishes in the New York Sun a paper setting forth these facts. He says that nothing Mr. Tilden did caused, and nothing was omitted by him to avert, the success of the plot which effected a revolution in the Presidential succession. Mr. Marble recites that after the election of 1876 had shown that Mr. Tilden was fairly elected to the Presidency, Zach Chandler instantly set in motion the plot which deprived him of it. The Republican Returning Boards of the three States were telegraphed to that all depended on them. Troops were sent to the three capitals, and the "visiting statesmen" were summoned. In two "interviews," adroitly timed, President Grant gave out that the Presidency would be turned over to Vice President Ferry in the event of a failure of a count, citing a statute which palpably refers to no such event as the expiry of his own term, and carefully neglecting to cite the constitution, where it provides that the House and Senate shall repair a default of election by the college. Now Ferry (writes Mr. Marble) was neither one of the two, nor one of the three highest candidates voted for, but he, too, put it about among the reporters that if "the two houses failed to agree" he would shirk "no responsibility." Burlesquing Lady Godiva in her long hair, when "clothed upon with chastity," he was ready to ride down Pennsylvania avenue in nothing but his beard and stolen magistracy.

When this flagitious complot was flagrant in all its parts, and while as yet no Republican hierarch, from Prof. Woolsey to Mrs. Jenks, had challenged the conspirators with a

Stand thou on that side, for on this am I;

it is no secret that Mr. Tilden, comprehending its scope, its dangers, and his own responsibility as well, in the primacy of leadership to which he had been newly chosen by his party and elected by his countrymen, matured and determined upon a plan to encounter and defeat the cabal, and to maintain at once the Presidential succession and the public peace.

Forasmuch as the plot to filch the Presidency and the Government from the elect of the people, besides its two qualities of fraud and force, had two periods and parts, it is timely here to observe just where Mr. Tilden abstained from encountering it, and just at what period and part he planned to destroy it. All of the "visiting statesmen" summoned by Grant were, by a singular coincidence, Republicans and special friends and private agents of Mr. Hayes. It is now proven and notorious that they it was who worked out the primary part and fraudulent ground-work of the conspiracy, directing if not devising the perjuries, forgeries and paper fabrications of the local and county officials, or pretending their regularity and legality before the State canvassers. To hear Noyes defend the Alachua frauds and forgeries before the Florida board with gushing eloquence and the fabricated testimony of 228 affiants, all by an extraordinary coincidence writing one and the same hand, would have given that canting hypocrite, Pecksniff himself, a moral vomit. These agents from Ohio were also the systematic suborners of the inferior officials, of their accomplices and their false witnesses, in multifarious crimes. They promised the official trusts of the Government as bribes for the commission of high criminal offenses. In so many instances as to be past counting, their promises have been adopted and performed by Mr. Hayes. The local election officers, etc., now hold minor civil trusts under the Government, by Hayes' recommendation, but the real principals in the crime were rewarded by the gift of the highest trusts in the administrative and diplomatic service.

It is anybody's secret that the certificates of these three State Canvassing Boards were for sale. Already it is proved that two were actually purchased. Probably it will yet appear that the third was likewise obtained. They were bought by promise of office, or by money, or by both. McLin, an ague-stricken pariah of Florida, did not scruple, if his own mendacity be trusted, to put a pecuniary value upon his official duty to certify the official counting returns. Maddox, the agent of Madison Wells, went to Washington, stated to Grant and Cameron the price of his chief, and threatened to sell out to the other side. He sent his agent, Pickett, to New York to make offer at a reduced price to the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, who, scouting it, said that it was the third such offer to him of the certificates of the Louisiana Returning Board. It is certain that such offers to Democrats were not mere snares. The intimacies and confidences of these corrupt men for an easy sale were all, of course, among their fellow-partisans on the Republican side. But, while they could enhance their own value by the threat as well as by the reality of offering their wares to the Democratic side, yet offices were then but promises only. Cash down was their bird in hand, worth any two in the bush.

Any one of the venal crew acting separately could himself alone deliver what he deemed a conclusive title to the Presidency.

But it was not there and thus that Mr. Tilden ought to compass the defeat of the Republican conspiracy. Whatever the wish, or the less absolute integrity, or the more customary morals, of any devoted adherent, no such transaction would he consent to, nor connive at, nor permit.

A few thousand dollars—a market for the wares of just one Madison Wells, just one McLin, only one—paid for doing the bounden duty and mere justice he had sworn to do, and the whole atrocious conspiracy would have been bursted like a puff-ball and blown away in dust.

But I apologise for the suggestion.

First, I apologise to Gov. Tilden for confronting his character with the morally impossible.

Next I apologize to all his Republican calumniators for confronting their characters with the morally incredible.

But it was necessary to mention just where Mr. Tilden did not attack the Republican conspiracy.

"Mr. Tilden," says the writer, "took immediate pains to advise his friends foremost in the House of Representatives that the final success of the low plot was impossible if that House would stand firmly and immovably on the unbroken series of precedents formed by the twenty-two Presidential counts from 1793 to 1872. He demanded that they expose and combat in full debate the threatened usurpation by the President of the Senate of the right to count the votes and to select the votes to be counted. Upon this issue Mr. Tilden counseled many of his friends in the leadership of the House not only to stand, but to force the debate first in the House, then in the Senate. He accepted all responsibility for the outcome. He assured them that were their temper stiff and resolute, the conspiracy would break down in process of execution." After dwelling at length on the earnestness with which Mr. Tilden tried to push the fight on this plan, Mr. Marble gives a history of the electoral scheme and proceeds: "He would not be drawn into the slightest expression of personal sanction to the electoral scheme, which was adopted on the 17th of January with unanimity by the Democratic members of the committees of both houses. Mr. Tilden, in his interview with Mr. Hewitt, on the 14th, did not withhold the grounds of his objection to the bill. Expressing some surprise at the fact that the Democratic Senators had already determined upon their course, whatever his advice or wishes might be, and some surprise at the secrecy which had shrouded the gestation of their project, Mr. Tilden observed that secrecy in respect to any plan implicating the rights and interests of so many was a mistaken and unfortunate policy. He recommended the widest publicity, the fullest discussion, and the freest consultation. Mr. Tilden's criticisms of the details of the bill, of which in no shape could he approve either the policy or the substance, exemplify the political sagacity of the statesman:

"'If arbitration is to be adopted the tribunal ought to be fixed in the bill itself, and not left to chance or intrigue. If an arbitration is to be adopted, the duty of the arbitrators to investigate and decide the case on its merits should be made mandatory and not left a question of construction. With both the vital points left at loose ends, you cannot succeed. You can exact, first, the selection of good men to compose the tribunal, which is the controlling point; and, second, the nature of the function to be performed by the tribunal, which is next in importance. Fix these two points, good men, explicit powers, and you might possibly get through. Leave them doubtful, and it is happy-go-lucky, the shake of a dice box.'

"The scheme which Mr. Hewitt had brought contained in its first draft a provision by which six judges were to be described in the act, one of them then to be eliminated by lot. To this Mr. Tilden's objection was peremptory. Said he: 'I may lose the Presidency, but I will not raffle for it.' He was pressed to say that if the bill could be modified so as to fix the five judges by a positive provision he would give it his approval. He firmly declined. The measure itself was not one as to which Mr. Tilden's action was or could be hesitated for a single instant. His practical objection deserves as much weight as any argued objection then or since, namely, that 'so great a stake as the government of 45,000,000 of people with an immense civil expenditure, and 100,000 officeholders to be disposed of by a small body sitting in the capital, the judge of its own powers, would become the sport of intrigue or fraud.'

"The next day, Jan. 15, Mr. Hewitt having returned to Washington, telegraphed thence to Mr. Edward Cooper, of New York:

"'To E. C.—The Senate committee will probably reject the five and report the six-judge plan immediately. The Senators feel committed to concur. The House committee will not concur, and, for the present, will probably not report.'

"Mr. Tilden's answer was as follows:

"'New York, Jan. 15, 1877.

"'To A. S. H.:

"'Procrastinate to give a few days for information and consultation. The six-judge proposition is inadmissible. E. C.'

"The next day Mr. Hewitt telegraphed again:

"'Washington, Jan. 16.

"'To E. C.:

"'After protracted negotiations the Senate committee has receded from the six-judge scheme, declined the five-judge and offered the four senior Associate Justices, who are to choose the fifth judge, excluding the Chief Justice. Our Senate friends earnestly favor acceptance, because they do not believe it possible to pass over ——. The Democrats on the House committee believe this is the last chance of agreement. We cannot postpone beyond 11 to-morrow, and if we decline the Senate committee will report their original plan, to which our friends are committed. Telegraph your advice.'

"Mr. Tilden sent the following answer:

"'New York, Jan. 16.

"'Be firm and cool. The four-judge plan will not do. It is, perhaps, worse than the six. Complaints are likely to arise of haste and want of consultation with members, and embarrassment in the exercise of their judgment after the plan is disclosed, by the premature committal of their representatives. There should be more opportunity for deliberation and consultation. Secrecy is dangerous. It is probably a mistake in itself, and if it results in disaster, it would involve great blame and infinite mischief.'

"The night that the foregoing telegram to Mr. Hewitt was sent, the undersigned had called upon Mr. Tilden and found him in his library with several other gentlemen. The telegraphic correspondence given above was read, and the situation freely canvassed. In their presence Mr. Tilden dictated and sent the following telegram for transmission in cipher to Washington through the National Committee rooms, not having been sent to or seen by Mr. Hewitt. It is not pertinent to any controversy concerning him. Indeed, by the time it had arrived and been deciphered the business was done, but it has value now as a fuller written record of the same points covered more briefly in the telegrams to Mr. Hewitt:

"'New York, Jan. 16.

"'No need of hot haste. But much danger in it. Some days' intervals should be taken. The risk of publicity is harmless. There is no information which could justify abstinence from condemning such an abandonment of the constitution and practice of the Government and of the rights of the two houses and of the people. Nothing but great and certain public danger, not to be escaped in any other way, could excuse such a measure. We are overpressed by exaggerated fears, and forget that the other side will have greater troubles than we unless relieved by some agreement. They have no way out but by usurpation. They are bullying us with what they dare not do, or will break down in attempting. So long as we stand on the constitution and settled practice we know where we are. The consequence of the new expedient has not been enough considered. The only way of getting accessions in the Senate is by the House standing firm, and judicious friends believe that in that case we will go safely through. Opportunity to consult such friends should be given before even tacit acquiescence by the House committee, if that is contemplated. Though details may be properly discussed, the final committal by the House committee should be firmly withheld.'

"His magnanimous silence, the foregoing telegrams, and the preceding interview have now disclosed all that has not hitherto been of public record in respect to Mr. Tilden's judgment, action and advice on the Republican conspiracy. He has since maintained an absolute reserve on the subject, even when reproached for a responsibility which he did not share. His only utterances have been the expression of a deep solicitude as to how the imperiled rights of the people may be vindicated against a precedent fatal if condoned. While no well-informed and competent critic of that compromise can ever question the high and patriotic purpose of the pure, the able, the admired Democrats who were its parents or sponsors, yet it is submitted that these proofs of the contemporaneous judgment, attitude and advice thereon of the elected Democratic leader could not in the present currency of a false belief and of partisan misrepresentations be withheld from the Democratic party."

ELIZA PINKSTON'S FIRST STORY.

What She Told the Physician Who Dressed Her Wounds—Negroes the Criminals.

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal.]

Island Dessaired, Ouachita Parish, La., July 24.

As Eliza Pinkston has been again brought before the public, and as there is this time some truth in her statement, I deem it a fit time for me to state a few facts never before made public.

Early the morning after her husband was killed and she wounded, I was sent for to see her in haste. Arriving at the place, I found her in a negro quarter, lying on a pallet, much excited and alarmed. Before examining and dressing her wounds, she told me Henry Pinkston had been killed, and that she was badly wounded, and believed that she was going to die. I said to her that I wanted her, before I did anything for her, to tell all about it, and tell me the truth, and who they were that did it. She told me she would tell me the honest truth; as she did not expect to live, she would tell me the "solid truth."

She said: "Fifteen or twenty negroes came to our house some time before day this morning and killed Henry and wounded me, as you now see." She said she was positive that it was none but negroes that did it all. When she said this a negro woman in the quarter said to her that she wished they would come back that night and finish her, and that she herself had a good mind to take up something and kill her as she lay there. Eliza said to me, "See there; they want to kill me because I will tell the truth and say it was negroes that killed Henry."

I examined and dressed her wounds, finding but one wound on her person that was, or might become, serious. She remained in the neighborhood several days, walking about from place to place until she was carried to New Orleans. I state in all candor, as a physician and surgeon, that there was nothing in her case that would necessarily prevent her from going where she wished, or that would confine her to a room. I make this statement in as brief and simple a manner as possible, saying nothing about how she was wounded, as this is not the proper place to do it. I am a physician of nearly thirty years active practice, and am well known in a large portion of this State. Can give the best of references in this State as to my integrity. I refer to the Hon. R. L. Gibson, the Hon. Lewis Bush, the Hon. S. F. Goode, Bishop Cener, the Rev. Linas Parker, D. D., Judge Robert Ray, the Hon. C. B. Wheeler, and to the entire community in which I live.

Alexander Hamilton's Last Night.

Among the noted guests at the Howland hotel is an old gentleman with a nose so boldly aquiline as to be almost square, a pair of small, black eyes, with hazel lights in them, and short, white hair, giving with the nose an aged gladiatorial look to this generally moving figure. He suggests in a slight degree the well-known appearance of the late Reverdy Johnson, a Roman firmness marking his mouth and profile. He is not more than five feet six or seven in height, in that respect, as well as in the face, suggesting his distinguished sire. It is the son of Alexander Hamilton—John C. Hamilton. He was born in 1792, and was in his 12th year when Aaron Burr killed his father. This event he has a tolerably distinct recollection of.

"I recall a single incident about it with full clearness," he said: "My father's residence was in the country, toward the north of New York island. His law office in the city was rather a shabby affair. The day before the duel I was sitting in a room, when, at a slight noise, I turned around and saw my father in the doorway, standing silently there and looking at me with a most sweet and beautiful expression of countenance. It was full of tenderness, and without any of the business preoccupation he sometimes had. 'John,' he said, when I had discovered him, 'won't you come and sleep with me to-night?' His voice was frank as if he had been my brother instead of my father. That night I went to bed, and in the morning very early he awakened me, and, taking my hands in his palms, all four hands extended, he said and told me to repeat the Lord's prayer. Seventy-five years have since passed over my head, and I have forgotten many things, but not that tender expression when he stood looking at me in the door, nor the prayer we made together the morning before the duel."—Long Branch Letter.

A risky experiment was tried in a Paris theater. In the ballet the leading danseuse came forward waving an olive branch. Then all the flags of the world were waved by the corps, excepting that of Germany. Then the premier danseuse displayed the German flag. The reception given it by the spectators was very cordial.

THE MONEY QUESTION.

Speech of Hon. Thomas L. Ewing, at McArthur, Ohio.

What is the money question? It is not whether we shall have coin or paper. There is no such issue, and never has been. Paper has long been, and must hereafter be, the great money factor in new and highly progressive countries. Gold and silver accumulate in countries which have approached or reached their zenith, where gathered wealth takes control of the productive forces and wage people toil for their existence. There, concentrated capital, low interest, and cheap labor, combine to make cheap products, and gold flows there to buy them. But in the United States, with our heretofore swift development, distributed wealth, and well-paid labor, we have never been able to get or keep enough gold or silver to be the chief currency, and have always relied and must hereafter rely mainly on paper money as the agent of industrial development. The practical money question in the United States is, therefore, not whether our currency shall be coin or paper, but who shall issue the paper money, and how shall its value be determined? And on the settlement of this question depends the solution of the chief political and social problems which now agitate the American people.

What is the cause, and what the cure, of the intolerable paralysis of business, destruction of values, and the degradation of labor, which now oppress and alarm our people?

The cause, fellow-citizens, I still insist, is the impracticable attempt to force specie payments. It was perfectly apparent from the outset, to every well-informed and reasoning man, that the scheme involved this distress, as inevitably as the amputation of a leg involves a serious shock to the nervous system. We have too little coin, and too little power to keep it, to make permanent resumption possible, without an enormous contraction of our paper currency. We have experienced a contraction of about $70,000,000 by cancellation, and much more than that by hoarding, through fears of capitalists as to the effect of the Resumption law; and this contraction has resulted in an enormous fall of prices, ruin of debtors and taxpayers, profitless business, bankruptcy, pauper wages, want of employment, starvation, raggedness, beggary and crime.

But, we are told there can be no further contraction, because Congress has forbidden the destruction of the greenback currency, and required the Secretary of the Treasury to pay it out when redeemed. But that law is a dead letter on our statute books, except for the moral effect of the declaration that the greenback shall not utterly perish. The Secretary, in his telegram to the Hon. William A. Phillips, of Kansas, of June 17, 1878, which you will find in McPherson's political manual for this year, declares that he "will keep in circulation all the United States notes that can be maintained at par with coin." That means that he will hoard all the redeemed greenbacks, if necessary, to maintain resumption. The law of Jan. 14, 1875, permanently appropriates for resumption purposes "all surplus moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated." When the greenbacks shall be redeemed, after Jan. 1 next, they will become at once appropriated by the law to resumption purposes; and the Secretary avows his intention to hold and hoard them, as far as he thinks necessary, for those purposes. In other words, he thinks that the recent law prohibiting the destruction of greenbacks, and requiring them to be paid out again, only requires him to pay them out in obedience to appropriations, and that the sweeping appropriation for resumption purposes of all greenbacks that may come in by redemption puts the reissue entirely at his discretion, to be made only if, and when, the needs of resumption demand. What difference will it be to the business of the country whether greenbacks are destroyed or only hoarded and held fast in the treasury? Mr. Sherman has repeatedly declared, and everybody who has studied the subject knows, that a large contraction of the paper currency is necessary to maintain resumption. So that, after the 1st of January next, contraction will go on with all its calamitous consequences precisely as if no law had been passed forbidding the destruction of greenbacks.

Because of this construction by Mr. Sherman of the Resumption law in connection with the law forbidding the cancellation of greenbacks, I resisted and was instrumental in defeating, on the 18th of June last, a motion to concur in the Senate substitute for the House bill to repeal the Resumption law. This substitute proposed to strike out all of the House bill repealing the resumption scheme and insert in lieu thereof a provision making greenbacks receivable for customs and also receivable for 4-per-cent. bonds. It was a drag net devised by Mr. Sherman to haul in the greenbacks in payment for bonds, and thus make them so scarce that few would be presented for redemption. Three days later the House passed a bill making greenbacks receivable for customs but not for bonds. That bill will probably pass the Senate next session. Meantime the House bill to repeal the Resumption law, with Mr. Sherman's substitute, lies on the Speaker's table; and I hope the people this fall will tell the House and the Senate in thunder tones that the Resumption law shall be repealed, without substitute or compromise.

Nothing is more certain than that a further large contraction of the paper currency is indispensable to the maintenance of resumption. Our paper currency is from two to three times greater than all the coin in the limits of the United States. No nation on earth ever maintained a redeemable paper currency equal to the amount of coin in such country. In fact, no great debtor nation ever maintained specie payments at all. England, France and Germany, the chief creditor and specie-paying countries, have three times more coin than redeemable paper. Before the war, when we had a paper currency spasmodically redeemable, we never had a volume of paper equal to the amount of coin in the United States. How can we now expect to maintain resumption with less than $300,000,000 of coin in the country, and near $650,000,000 of paper—loaded down as we are with enormous foreign debts and expenditures which in any year may drain away every dollar of our coin? It can't be done. The only possible way to maintain specie payment is by extinguishment of our annual foreign tribute, and by a sweeping reduction of our paper currency, entailing far greater business calamities than we have yet endured.

The advocates of resumption rest their hopes on three fallacious assumptions.

First, they say the people of this country will not call for gold. Recollect that resumption means that every bank depositor or Government creditor shall have his free choice of gold or silver for his debt. There are about $350,000,000 of legal tender, and $300,000,000 of bank paper, and $2,100,000,000 of national and other bank deposits, every holder of which must be given gold if he demand it, before resumption can be regarded as established. Were the national banks—the right bower of the Treasury Department—to refuse to pay gold to either note-holders or depositors, the refusal would be interpreted to mean weakness at the treasury. Confidence would be shaken. The Secretary relies on confidence as a substitute for two-thirds of the coin needed. When that is shaken resumption dies. To maintain this confidence all national banks must pay gold as freely as paper or silver if demanded. Now, the people outside of the Pacific slope have no gold. They sold their hoards ten or fifteen years ago. Won't they want it? Of course they will. I venture the prediction that the gold the Secretary has hoarded at such effort and cost will not supply the home demand alone.

The second fallacious theory is, that the Secretary of the Treasury can refuse to pay gold and pay only silver for greenbacks, and that the banks, exporters and people will not want silver. But he will have but 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 of silver dollars. If he refuse to pay gold when demanded, he will advertise his inability to resume in gold. It will by that act be put at a premium; his barricade of silver will be drawn out to get at the gold, and resumption will collapse in a "black Friday."

The third fallacy of the resumptionists is, that the balance of merchandise trade for the past eighteen months is making the maintenance of resumption certain. But it brings us no gold—for the reason that we pay a tribute each year to Europe of not less than $200,000,000 for interest on American bonds and investments, expenses of foreign residence and travel, and cost of foreign shipping. That tribute far exceeds any balance of merchandise trade which it is possible for us to keep up. It has carried off more than the whole coined product of our mines since 1861—leaving us poorer in the precious metals now than then. This balance of merchandise trade has checked for the time being the export of gold, but brought us none. If it exceed our foreign tribute the balance is paid in bonds, not in gold.

This large balance of trade is not healthy or lasting. It is a spasmodic symptom of the prostration of our industrial system. The aggregate of our foreign trade, exports and imports combined, has fallen off largely since the Resumption law passed. The loss is in imports, because we are too poor to buy. Exports have increased, because home consumption has diminished, and our warehouses must empty on foreign markets at any price their glut of unsalable wares at home. A failing merchant who is forced to sell out below cost while his family is ragged and hungry, might as well brag of his large business as we of our increased exports. While this has been going on our foreign tribute is being paid in foreign goods at half price, instead of partly in gold, as heretofore. Hence the export demand for gold has fallen off, and its premium consequently is reduced to almost nothing.

Now, just as long as we are kept too poor to consume the usual quantity of our own and foreign products, and so long as raw material and raw products are kept at or below the cost of production, and labor is kept at starvation wages, we can undersell the world, pay our foreign tribute wholly in products, keep our gold, and enjoy the blessings of specie payment, provided our own people won't ask for gold.

The tremendous sacrifices which have nearly brought equalization, have not at all insured the maintenance of resumption. Approximate equalization has been forced by contraction and hoarding and consequent breaking down of prices below the gold level. Meantime the Government hoards gold, gathered from our mines and the banks, and don't pay out a dollar except for interest on bonds. But the day approaches when the treasury, instead of being the receiving reservoir, is to become the distributing reservoir, for all the banks, and all who want to ship, or hoard, or use, or speculate in gold. Success depends not only on attaining equalization before the outpour begins, but also on being able to supply all comers, at home or abroad, with all the gold they want for greenbacks.

If the Secretary should hoard all greenbacks redeemed, he will still further crush and destroy the business of the country, for the gold paid out will not move the currents of trade, as greenbacks do, but will largely settle in hoards, or reserves, or go abroad. And the country will rise in arms against such protracted pressure, and smash the machine. But if he should (as I believe he will not) pay out greenbacks as fast as redeemed, then the increase of currency, though it will not be large, will be enough to lift the screw-pressure from business, and it will revive, wages will increase, consumption of home and foreign products return toward a normal condition, and forthwith our boasted balance of trade will disappear, and our annual tribute to Europe will again be paid in part by an annual shipment of from fifty to sixty millions of gold as for twelve years before the Resumption law passed. Then the mad attempt to resume specie payments without a quarter of an adequate supply of coin, and under conditions of foreign debt which made success impossible, will collapse. The country will then shake off the rule of the usurers and theorists that have navigated it over Niagara; and the attempt will take its merited rank in history as a gigantic robbery of the people, and a high crime against civilization.

Our people are in debt at least $12,000,000,000 for Government, individual and corporate obligations. These debts represent an annual interest charge of $800,000,000 or $900,000,000 a year. Our Government taxes, national, State and municipal, are about $750,000,000 annually. Excluding the taxes for interest on bonds, the two sums together represent an annual charge of near $1,500,000,000 a year. This sum is about twice the amount of the annual increase of wealth in the United States, after deducting living expenses, and is equivalent to interest at 6 per cent. on a sum greater than the present selling value of all the property, real and personal, in the United States.

It is this condition of unparalleled indebtment and taxation which makes the question of the volume of money we are to have so transcendentally important. The volume of money determines values. The scale of present expenditures having been fixed, and the public and private indebtedness contracted on a basis of values more than twice as high as those of to-day, a restoration of values is demanded by every consideration of honesty and statesmanship. But there can be no restoration of values without the utter abandonment of resumption, and a restoration of the currency to its per capita volume when the Resumption law was enacted. To restore the paper currency to the per capita volume at which it stood in January, 1875, would require a new issue of greenbacks to the amount of $130,000,000. Let such issue be made and expended in purchasing for cancellation about $130,000,000 of our 6 per cent. bonds. That restoration of currency will not do full justice to debtors and taxpayers, for the immense contraction of interest-bearing money in 1866-'7 operated for years to steadily break down values; but it will restore prices to where they were when the scheme of resumption was inaugurated. And without such restoration I believe this crisis will end in a general ruin of the industrial classes, and in wide-spread repudiation of public debts.

The howl of "inflation" raised against all who resist contraction and lowering of values springs from the craft of the money power, and not from either honor or statesmanship. War necessity increased the currency and raised the prices. If some creditors were wronged, theirs were among the least of the inevitable sufferings inflicted by the war. That they suffered was not the fault of the mass of the people. On the basis of these prices the most of the great public debts were made and public expenditures fixed, and when fees and salaries are once fixed there is no such thing as lowering them. On a scale of prices greatly reduced by the destruction of the interest-bearing Treasury notes in 1866-'7, the private debts existing when the Resumption law passed were incurred. Honesty, honor and sound policy demand that, as the Government had no power to scale debts and expenditures, it should abstain from reducing the currency, and thereby the values of labor and products with which debts and taxes were to be paid. But such consideration of common honesty and sound policy are utterly ignored and spit upon by the "honest-money" men, who invented this subtle scheme to break down values and rob the masses of their labor and property. To repeal this most destructive and rascally law, and restore the prices of commodities to where they stood when it was enacted, is demanded alike by every consideration of justice and sound policy.

Can the country be harmed by such restoration of the currency and values to where they stood in January, 1875? Is it not rather now being destroyed by the opposite policy? Look abroad over the land from Maine to Florida, from Cape Cod to the Golden Gate. What do you see but ruin? Idleness, starvation, and beggary of labor; a pestilence of insolvency; business stagnant; enterprise dead; and all in the midst of every bounty a kindly heaven can pour on its favorite land. Even the blessing of invention—designated by God to alleviate the curse of slavish toil by substituting the forces of nature for the muscle of man—by the devilish alchemy of this scheme is changed to a curse. In ordinary times production, increased and cheapened by invention, is met by consumption increased by the lessened cost of products; and an equal amount of human labor, but less and less drudging, is required to fill the growing demand. But now the cunning of invention, forced by the abnormal fall of prices, is compelled to fill the shriveling markets by employing hands of steel instead of hands of flesh and blood, thus hourly swelling the ranks of the unemployed. So that, with invention stimulated and consumption stopped, our society drifts like a Mississippi steamer with one wheel broken and the other moving, while the heady current sweeps it helplessly along.

A restoration of the currency and consequently of prices to where they stood in January, 1875, means justice to debtors and taxpayers, public and private solvency, revival of business, increased production and consumption, with full employment and fair pay to labor, and the reawakening of every dormant energy of our industrious and progressive people.

The assumption that this great nation must be paralysed to keep it from rushing to a wild excess of paper money—must be crushed with doubled debt and taxes, and impoverished, by enforced idleness, so as to chain its currency to gold as the only method of saving it from illimitable inflation—is an error too monstrous and insulting to be tolerated by a self-governing people. If resumption could now be reached without costing another pang of hunger, or another groan from a broken heart, we would have paid for it a thousand times more than it is worth. Be it worth much or little, it is, under existing conditions, wholly unattainable, and the struggle for it must be indefinitely postponed.

Whether a currency kept by convertibility at par with gold were desirable, if practicable, is a question on which there is difference of opinion among the opponents of the Resumption law. For myself, I believe that a Government paper currency—full legal-tender except for pre-existing contracts, redeemable only by receivability for public dues, fixed in amount by constitutional provision, and increased each year in a ratio equal to the annual per cent. of increase of business—would be a far more stable measurer and exchanger of values than any currency which fluctuates in quantity with the fitful ebb and flow of gold, and tosses the business of the country up and down in a see-saw of alternate prosperity and panic.

In addition to the repeal of the Resumption law and the restoration of values to their status when it was enacted, the chief measures of currency reform are the full remonetization of silver and the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes. The partial remonetization of silver was the result of what I regarded, and resisted in Congress, as an unnecessary and inexpedient compromise with the money power. If that concession had not been made, and the force of public sentiment broken by it, I believe we would have to-day a complete restoration of our great product to its equal rank with gold as a money metal. The question cannot be settled until that act of justice is accomplished.

Hints on Horse Keeping.

The wide stall is a luxury, and ought to be six or even ten feet wide, if room can be spared. Loose boxes are important for horses of great value; in such stalls they can get perfect repose by changing their position, recover from the fatigue of a hard day's drive, and be ready for their task the next day. The food best adapted to the horse is oats and hay of the best quality, occasionally varied with a bran mash, with turnips or carrots as an alterative. The growth and development of bone and muscle depend greatly upon the food they eat. It is important to select such as contain all the elements needed to form the bone and muscle of the horse. It is self-evident that the nutritive matter supplied by the food must be equal to the exhaustion, or natural waste of the body, to keep up condition. Prof. Playfair has made some interesting and instructive experiments upon the nutritious matter contained in different kinds of food. He has demonstrated by analysis "that in 100 pounds of oats, eleven pounds represent the quantity of gluten wherewith flesh is formed, and that an equal weight of hay affords eight pounds of similar substance. Both hay and oats contain about 68 per centum of unazotised matter identical with fat, of which it must be observed that a vast portion passes off from the animal without being assimilated. By this calculation it appears that if a horse consumes daily four feeds of oats and ten pounds of hay, the nutriment which he derives will be equivalent to about one pound eleven ounces of muscle, and thirteen and one-half pounds of superfluous matter, which, exclusive of water, nearly approximates the exhaustion of the system by perspiration and the various evacuations." The horse that is about to be driven on a journey needs hardening by exercise—preparing by sweating out the body to purify and increase the circulation of the blood, and also by hand-rubbing the legs to make them firm and elastic—a preparation in some degree corresponding with that attained by a horse that is daily driven on the road for ordinary work. For one week previous to the start they need daily exercise, commencing with eight or ten miles, and gradually increasing to twenty per day. This exercise, with appropriate food, will harden their muscles, strengthen their limbs, and prepare them to perform their tasks without giving out on the road, materially declining in flesh, or seriously exhausting their physical powers. If we perform long drives, with horses accustomed to short work only, the sudden transition from indolence to great exertion will relax their muscles, weaken their joints, depress their spirits and break down their constitution. The leading cause of so many valuable horses being spoiled by long drives is from being short of work. They are not prepared for such severe exertion. Condition will prepare them to perform their work cheerfully, last out with sound limbs, and preserve their constitutional vigor for future usefulness.—National Live Stock Journal.

The Autocrat of the Sanctum.

There is nothing like being a bloated autocrat of the sanctum, while next door one hears the poor laboring man toiling at nine-pins in a bowling alley. The editor toils not, and neither does he spin, and yet Mrs. Jenks in all her glory is not arrayed like one of these. While all humanity is sweltering and swearing—and wondering where they can hang up the barkeeper for a glass of beer—the editor has nothing to do. Two or three columns of editorials to write, and no pitch hot; 200 or 300 of exchanges to read through; as many bores to bounce, letters to answer, manuscripts to read, till one cannot tell English from Sanscrit—this is mere bagatelle, when the thermometer is on the ragged edge of the nineties. As we said before, the editor heartily despises a man who works for a living, and listens with sardonic satisfaction to the sound from the bowling alley next door, where the poor man slaves and sweats. It makes such a contrast to his luxurious idleness.—Rochester Express.

Of One Opinion.

A little 3-year-old daughter of one of our citizens, while with her grandfather the other day, had been insisting on having something which the old gentleman did not think wise to give her, until finally, he remarked: "Why, I never saw such a grandchild as you are." Very sober and demure the little one looked up as she replied: "No and I never saw such a grandpa!"—Hartford Times.

The Trick Sherman & Co. are Attempting to Play Through the Nationals.

The Democrats of DeKalb county who are disposed to favor the National Greenback movement will please make a note of the following particulars in relation to the object of the defunct 25 cent per annum ADVOCATE, as explained by a correspondent of the Illinois State Register, as follows:

"In New York there was published a large seven column, eight page, weekly paper for 25 cents a year. Pomeroy's Democrat, the New Haven Union, Irish World and other reliable greenback papers say the paper was sustained and run in aid of John Sherman, in order, by stealth, to elect as many republicans as possible to the next congress, and while professing to oppose the policy of Sherman, doing all it could secretly to rivet it on the country.

I am reliably told that the office of the Advocate at Washington was in a building belonging to a brother-in-law of John Sherman, and a nephew of Sherman was one of the confidential clerks in the Advocate office in New York. I am credibly advised also, the Advocate has twice within three months announced that Sherman had agreed to all the currency reform that democrats wanted, and that pecuniary peace and prosperity would within 30 days be restored to the country, and that assurances were made to him and Peter Cooper to that effect—a statement, by the way, that Mr. Cooper denies.

The editor of the advocate says he and John Sherman have been friends, political and personal, for 30 years, and that he can not find it in his heart to say anything against Mr. Sherman or his policy; that Mr. Sherman is only carrying out what the law makes it his duty to do—forgetting that Mr. Sherman is more directly responsible for those laws than any half dozen men living. It was through Sherman that Wall street had its way in the senate, and enacted what laws it pleased.

The New Haven Union—the ablest greenback paper in New England, and one of the ablest in the country—of the 21st inst., shows up the entire intrigue in striking colors, and says:

The Irish World and Pomeroy's Democrat are inclined to think that the editor of the Advocate, Walter H. Shupe, is in league with John Sherman; that the United States treasury furnishes the money to run the paper, and that through it the national party is to be destroyed. Their plan being to publish a paper at such low rates as to kill off all other greenback organs, and then, a short time before election, let the Advocate collapse, thus demoralizing the party to such an extent as to leave the republican party free to elect congressmen who will back up Sherman's specie resumption scheme. As evidence of this we quote the Advocate: "That, whereas, there are to-day 8,000 papers in America which print in all about 4,000,000 copies a week, there will be then not 3,000 of the 8,000 in existence."

The Advocate paid General Cary, Jesse Harper, B. F. Trevellick, Chairman Sturgeon and others, salaries from $30 to $90 per week, in addition to what they may collect, to go about the country, and wherever a democratic greenbacker is nominated for congress, to have a greenback nominee put up against him, and thus elect John Sherman's republican nominee and friend.

The Toledo national convention was nothing but a republican side show, and almost as much of a humbug and imposition as Pomeroy's clubs. The first is an indorsement of the republican party which Sherman's fiscal policy excluded, an adventure about as absurd as playing Hamlet with Hamlet left out. The other is without sanction or indorsement from any organized body and has an existence only in the imagination of its inventor and Dr. Hooton, and perhaps that other congenial, political humbug and blatherskite, Kewannee Smith.

Of the executive committee appointed at Toledo, I think Alex. Troup, of Connecticut, is the only one that is not of strong whig and republican antecedents and I am not certain but Troup is also. Sturgeon, the president, is a bigoted Scotch covenanter and Calvinist from western Pennsylvania, and as narrow headed in his whig and republican notions as he is in those about theology. His idea of how to organize an efficient political party, is to copy after the covenanter's religious organization and supplement it with the masonic ritual, grips, pass words, etc. Any man that ever was a democrat, or of democratic antecedents is odious and offensive in his eyes. He is ignorant of the currency question and its bearings, and thinks the excitement growing out of its discussion will be over in 60 days, when John Sherman gets a little further along in developing his plans. Of the great question of money—of the amount needed to transact the business of the country and meet the wants of commerce; the great question of money—whether money should be issued from the national banks or direct from the government, what should be the proper standard of value of our coin, and of the numerous other questions relating to a circulating medium; he is as ignorant as he is of the Brahmin code or the Mahometan bible. He conceives himself to be a sort of political Joe Smith or Brigham Young, who has come forth to sway the great laboring masses and induce them to destroy the democratic party and all its teachings, and make his government a sort of Calvanistic heaven, to which "many are to be called but few chosen," and he being one of the elect, is to be chosen.

Whenever he can hear of the defeat of a democratic candidate for congress, and the election of a republican, he is delighted. This man Sturgeon and other members of the national committee, are, and have been, in close correspondence with John Sherman's office holders in Louisiana, North Carolina, Tennessee, Missouri Texas and other southern states, knowing the only effect of his movement could be to defeat democratic anti resumptionists, and elect republicans who are friends of Sherman's policy. There is no abler man in either branch of congress, nor one that is truer, than the Hon. John M. Bright, of Tennessee, on the currency question, nor on all other questions affecting the rights of the laboring classes, and yet I am advised this narrow headed bigot and his confreres are doing their utmost to get up a greenback opposition to defeat the strongest man the currency reformers have on the floor of the house. While such are the fruits of the incipient labors of the nationals, how can any democrat trust them when they get their plans matured and in successful operation.

Every thing will be done that can be done to defeat the return of Mr. Voorhees to the senate from Indiana, and the re-election of General Ewing to the house from Ohio, by running greenback candidates to throw off democratic votes, and greenbackers will be urged to re-elect Messrs. Phillips, of Kansas; Kelly, of Pennsylvania; Oliver, of Iowa and two or three other anti-resumptionists in congress. Every possible effort will be made to elect the resumption republicans in congress by giving them a clear field, and defeat the three anti-resumption democrats by running greenback candidates against them.

You know that for several years I have devoted much time to the cause of the greenback in this state. My zeal in that direction has not abated one jot or tittle; but when this most righteous movement is preverted to fasten upon the country federalism, centralization and monopoly, it is time to call a halt, and have the people look around them—especially democrats—and see whither things are drifting."

WHAT BEACONSFIELD SAID.

[From the London Times.]

On Saturday evening a magnificent banquet was given to the Earl of Beaconsfield, K. G., by a numerous body of Conservatives, Peers and members of the House of Commons, to testify their high appreciation and approval of the distinguished services of her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Berlin. The entertainment was given in the Duke of Wellington's Riding School, Knightsbridge, the only building in the West End that afforded accommodation for any thing like the number of Subscribers. The large hall was decorated with flags, banners, and conservative mottoes, conspicuous among which was "Peace with Honor." Covers were laid for 500.

The guests arrived soon after 7 o'clock, and were received by the noble Chairman, the Duke of Buccleuch, and Sir J. Mc. Garel Hogg, M. P. With exemplary punctuality, they took their places at the table precisely at 7:30, amid loud and contiued plaudits, the band playing 'See the Conquering Hero Comes."

The Right Hon. and Rev. Lord Plunket said grace before and after dinner.

The Chairman then arose and said: My Lords and gentlemen, I have now to propose to you a toast, the occasion for which has brought us together this evening [loud cheers], and I can only express my regret that the lot has not fallen upon some one more eloquent and more capable of doing justice to such a toast. We have met here to welcome home, after arduous and difficult duties, two noble lords, though on this occasion I shall refer only to one who holds the position of Prime Minister of this country. [Much cheering.] I propose now "The health of Lord Beaconsfield," and welcome home to him, welcome to him as the greatest conqueror who has vanquished war and brought us back to peace.

The toast was drunk with loud, long continued cheering, the company rising enmasse, and the band playing "Rule Britannia."

The Earl of Beaconsfield, K. G., who appeared in the ribbon of his order, and was received with great cheering, again and again repeated, said: My Lord Duke and Gentlemen: I am sure that you will acquit me of affectation if I say that it is not without emotion that I have received this expression of your good will and sympathy. [Cheers.] When I look around this chamber I see the faces of some who entered public life with myself, as my noble friend, the noble Duke, has reminded me, more than forty years ago; I see more whose entrance into public life, I witnessed when I had myself gained some experience of it, and, lastly, I see those who have only recently entered upon public life, and whom it has been my duty and my delight to encourage and to counsel [cheers] when they entered that public career so characteristic of this country, and which is one of the main securities of our liberty and welfare. [Cheers.] My Lords and gentlemen, our Chairman has refered to my career, like that of all public men in this country, as one of change and vicissitude; but I have been sustained, even in the darkest hours of our party, by the conviction that I possessed your confidence [cheers.] I will say your indulgent confidence [cheers], for in the long course of my public life, that I may have committed many mistakes is too obvious a truth to touch upon; but that you have been indulgent there is no doubt, for I can, I hope I may say proudly, remember that it has been my lot to lead in either House of Parliament this great party for a longer period than has ever fallen to the lot of any public man in the history of this country. [Cheers.] That I have owed that result to your generous indulgence more than to any personal qualities of my own [cheers and cries of "No, no!"] no man is more sensible than myself; but it is a fact that I may recur to with some degree of proud satisfaction. [Cheers.] Our noble Chairman has referred to the particular occasion which has made me your guest to-day. I attended that high assembly which has recently dispersed with much reluctance, I yielded to the earnest solicitations of my noble friend near me, my colleague in that great enterprise. [Cheers.] He thought that my presence might be of use to him in the vast difficulties he had to encounter [cheers]; but I must say now, as I ever shall say, that to his lot fell the laboring oar in that great work [cheers], and that you are, I will not say equally, but more indebted to him than to myself for the satisfactory result which you kindly recognize. [Cheers.] I share the conviction of our noble Chair man that it is one which has been received with satisfaction by the country [loud cheers]; but I am perfectly aware that that satisfaction is not complete or unanimous, because I know well that before eight-and-forty hours have passed the marshalled hosts of opposition will be prepared to chalenge what has been done and to question the policy we hope we have established. [Cheers.]

I was astonished to learn that the convention of the 4th of June [the treaty whereby England obtained Cyprus] has been described as an "insane" convention. It is a strong epithet. I do not myself pretend to be as competent a judge of insanity as my right honorable opponent. [A laugh.] I will not say to the right honorable gentlemen, "navigat anticyrum," but I would put this issue to an English jury—Which do you believe most likely to enter into an insane convention, a body of English gentlemen honored by the favor of their sovereign and the confidence of their fellow subjects, managing your affairs for five years, I hope with prudence, and not altogether without success [cheers], or a sophistical rhetorician, inebriated with the exuberance of his own verbosity [loud cheers and laughter], and gifted with an egotistical imagination that can at all times command an interminable and inconsistent series of arguments to malign an opponent and to glorify himself? [Continued cheers and laughter.] My lords and gentlemen, I leave the decission upon that convention to the Parliament and people of England. [Loud cheers.] I believe that in that policy are deeply laid the seeds of future welfare, not merely to England, but to Europe and to Asia; and confident that the policy we have recommended is one that will be supported by the country, I and those that act with me can endure these attacks. [Loud cheers.]

My lords and gentlemen, let me thank you once more for the manner in which you have welcomed me to-day. [Cheers.] These are the rewards of public life that never pall [cheers], the sympathy of those who have known you long, who have worked with you long, who have the same opinions upon the policy that ought to be pursued in this great and ancient empire. [Cheers]. These are sentiments which no language can sufficiently appreciate—which are a consolation under all circumstances and the highest reward that a public man can attain. The generous feeling that has prompted you to welcome my colleague and myself on our return to England will inspire and strengthen our efforts to serve our country [cheers]; and it is not merely that in this welcome you encourage those who are doing their best for what they conceive to be the public interests, but you tell to Europe also that England is a grateful country, and knows how to appreciate the efforts of those of her public servants who are resolved to maintain to their utmost the empire of Great Britain.

The noble Earl sat down, amid continued cheering.

RENO COUNTY, KANSAS, }
August 19th, 1878. }

EDITOR COURIER: Dear Sir:—Being a reader of your valuable paper, and a former resident of Auburn, permit me a small space in your columns as it may be of some interest to the Auburn people to hear from this part of Kansas. We are having a plentiful crop this year, the average of wheat per acre being 22 bushels, price 65c.; corn is now ripe and a good crop, in fact everything is prosperous and people are happy. Who would have thought this once great American desert would be so productive. Hutchison, the county seat of Reno, is situated on the bank of Arkansas river, has one county bank, six dry goods stores, twelve grocery stores, three hardware stores, three drug stores, two boot & shoe stores and three county papers, all doing a thriving business. There are several large brick blocks in the city and has a population of 3,000. But let this suffice, and in my next will give some details of the county and soil.
UPSIDE.

All Curse It.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The radical swindling apportionment act of 1873, the more it is discussed the more it is cursed. Democrats curse it, nationals curse it and honest republicans curse it. General Ben Harrison throught proper to say nothing about it in his Richmond speech. He knew of the swindle, but since the benefits all inure to his party, he could not have got a word of condemnation out of his throat if he had applied a pump worked by a thousand horse power engine and operated it day and night for a century. General Ben is as honest in such matters as J. Madison Wells.

A Challenge.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

Why don't the radical candidates, stump orators and organs attack the financial planks in the democratic platform? Come, you blatant yawpers, who favor large standing armies to bayonet states and legislatures, who apologize for radical theives and are willing to accept offices conferred by forgery and perjury, we challenge you to attack the financial doctrines set forth in the democratic platform adopted by the Indiana democracy in February last. Now come on with your squirt guns and pop guns.

Tilden Needs no Defense.

The Memphis Appeal, in declining to print Mr. Marble's letter, says: "As to Mr. Tilden, he needs no defence. But we repeat, his opportunity has passed. Brief as the time is since his day, new measures have been sprung upon the people, and the names of new men are being lisped as the successors to the leadership in the democratic party which he has lost.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

THE BEST COW IN PERIL.

Old farmer B is a stingy man,
He hoards all he gets and gets all he can.
By all his friends he is said to be
As tight as the bark on a young birch tree.
He goes to church and he rents a pew,
But the dimes he gives to the Lord are few.
If he gets to heaven with the good and great,
He will be let in at the smallest gate.

Now farmer B, besides drags and plows,
Keeps a number of fine calves and cows.
He makes no butter, but sends by express
The milk to the city's thirstiness.

"What do the city folks know about milk!
They are better judges of cloth and silk.
Not a man who buys, I vow, can tell
If I water it not or water it well—
If they do not know them where's the sin,
I'll put the sparkling water in."
Thus talked to himself old farmer B,
How mean he is, young and old can see.

One night it was dark, sir, fearfully dark—
The watch dog never came out to bark—
Old farmer B, in his bed did snore,
When rap, rap, rap nearly shattered the door,
And a voice cried out, in a hasty breath,
"Your best cow, neighbor, is choking to death!"

Clipping off the end of a rousing snore,
Farmer B bounded out on the bedroom floor,
And the midnight voice was heard no more.
He pulled on his pants he knew not how,
For his thoughts were all on the choking cow;
He flew to the yard like a frightened deer,
For his stingy soul was filled with fear;
Looking around by his lantern's light,
He found that the cows were there all right.

"I will give a dime," cried farmer B,
"To know who played that trick on me.
May the hand be stiff and the knuckle sore
That knocked to-night on my farm-house door."

And now a scowl on his face and a shaking head,
Farmer B again sought his nice warm bed.
No good thoughts came—they were o'erpowered—
The little good nature he had had soured.

When he went to water his milk next day,
The midnight voice seemed again to say,
As he pumped away with panting breath,
"Your best cow, neighbor, is choking to death!"
The meaning of this he soon found out,
For a stone was driven in the old pump's spout.

Old farmer B, when he drives in town,
Now meets his neighbors with a savage frown.
They smile, and ask, as they kindly bow,
"How getteth along the best cow now!"

WHO KILLED THE JUDGE.

A Mystery of Crime.

One raw morning in March the janitor of the Court House of B—— entered the Judge's private room for the purpose of making a fire, and was frightened almost out of his wits at finding the honorable dignitary lying motionless on the ground.

The janitor was about to retreat and raise the alarm by ringing the Court House bell, when he bethought himself that the Judge might have but a fit, and that he could render him the needed assistance. Therefore he hastened forward and tried to lift the prostrate man, who lay on the floor with one hand partially hidden in his bosom, while the other, lying near his head, held his pen-holder, the gold pen of which had its nib broken. But as the Judge was a large man, given over to some extent to obesity, and the janitor a cadaverous fellow, who had been denominated "Bones" by the attaches of the Court House, he found his attempt useless, and soon gave it up as futile.

The stare in the Judge's eyes and the ghastly hue of the skin told the janitor that life had departed, and a moment after this discovery the Court House bell was spreading wonderment throughout the town.

At that time an unusually interesting court was in session at B——, presided over by Judge Blakely. A large number of criminal cases had been disposed of, and but few remained which were of more than passing importance. The session just drawing to a close had attracted many people from the rural districts, and the several hotels were nightly taxed to their utmost capacity. Attorneys from a distance were in attendance, and many friends of the prisoners still remained in town.

Therefore the wild ring of the Court House bell, fully three hours before the opening of the court, startled everybody who heard it. There was catastrophe in its unwonted tones, and while Jabez Throck, the janitor, still held the rope he heard the patter of a multitude of feet in the stone corridor below. Releasing the rope, he planted himself at the top of the stairs and forbade the crowd surging up, saying that the Judge was dead and that the Coroner was needed.

The report of the Judge's death now spread like wildfire, and the Court House was speedily surrounded by the most excited crowd ever seen in B——.

After some delay, caused in a great measure by the extraordinary excitement, the Coroner, a slow but precise man, announced himself ready for business, and, accompanied by the Sheriff, several surgeons and the janitor, proceeded to the Judge's room, the door of which was locked behind them in order to keep intermeddlers out.

Judge Blakely was found in the manner in which the janitor had left him, and the examination was begun.

The surgeons, who had come beforehand to the conclusion that apoplexy had taken the Judge off, were forced to abandon such ideas, for a brief examination told them that an assassin had been there. A crushed skull over the left ear and four dagger stabs in the region of the heart were the proofs of the murder. Lying in its accustomed place by the coal stove was seen one of the instruments of death—a short iron poker, to which adhered both hair and blood. But the dagger was missing.

The assassin, whoever he was, had first struck the Judge from behind with the poker while he sat in his great arm-chair at his desk, as the position of the chair and body indicated, and then dealt the blows with the dagger.

In bearing off the sharp instrument of death it was at first believed that the murderer had left no clew behind, but after the surgical examination a discovery was made that startled every one.

Lying upon the desk, and almost entirely concealed beneath a mass of legal documents, was a piece of legal cap, upon which was traced, in a spasmodic hand, these words:

"Jason Bowers did this!"

Below this brief but startling sentence, which seemed at once to fix the identity of the assassin, was what appeared to be an attempt of the writer to affix a signature, but after a "J" the pen made a long mark, which the beholders could follow across the desk to the very walnut edging.

It seemed that death had suddenly stricken the writer in the act of signing his name, and the broken pen in the Judge's lifeless hand pointed almost positively to the writer.

There was such a man as Jason Bowers. He was not a resident of B——; for some time past he had been an inmate of the county jail—held there on a charge of forgery. On the day prior to the night of the Judge's murder, this man Bowers had been acquitted by the jury selected to try him, and, at the moment of the commission of the crime, he was a free man. He had never been heard to say aught against the Judge more than to remark that he thought that, in the charge to the jury, he (the Judge) had favored conviction. At home the young man had not borne an irreproachable character, having been engaged in affairs of questionable honor; but the trial for forgery was his first appearance before a criminal court.

Upon the evidence of the writing on the paper which was pronounced by all to be in the late Judge's chirography, and beyond doubt the last work of his life, the Sheriff resolved to take Jason Bowers into custody if he was still in town. The young man was not difficult to find, as he was in the crowd below, and on the charge of malicious murder he was forthwith arrested and lodged in jail.

We now come to the most mysterious part of our narrative.

At the Coroner's inquest but little light was thrown upon the crime.

Jabez Throck, the janitor, said that he found the outer doors of the Court House locked from the inside, and that he had been obliged to enter through the coal-cellar, of which he alone carried the key. It was not an uncommon thing for the deceased to remain in his room till 12 at night, during a session of court, and that upon such occasions he locked the Court House when he left for home. Upon the janitor's testimony, the theory that the murderer had been concealed in the building was started, but this was injured by the various county officers, who swore that they had locked the iron doors leading into their offices immediately after the adjournment of court, which gave the murderer no place for concealment but the stone corridors.

The Court House was on the second street running parallel with the river, and one of the town sewers connected it with the stream. There was a bare possibility that a small man might have obtained ingress into the building by the sewer, but an examination of its mouth dissipated this theory. The court-room was situated on the second floor. The murderer, to reach the Judge's apartment, was compelled to cross the court-room, which, when wrapped in darkness as it was when the murder was committed, was no easy task for one unacquainted with the arrangement of the furniture, etc. If the assassin had traversed the room just described he had failed to displace a single chair, several having been left in the aisles as the Sheriff testified; and the mode and manner of his exit were also left in the dark.

There was nothing to point to the evildoer save the piece of paper already twice mentioned, and by the major part of B——'s inhabitants it was regarded as conclusive. Jabez Bowers was abjured to confess, but to the surprise of all he protested his innocence, and declared that at the proper time he would prove an alibi.

A new Judge took Blakely's place, and the session was resumed. A new Grand Jury was summoned, which indicted Jason Bowers for willful murder, and, after the disposal of several grand larcenies, the young man was put upon trial for his life.

The District Attorney, a man who had won many eulogiums for his rigorous prosecution of criminal cases, was summoned to B—— to look after the interests of the State. After an investigation of the case he declared that the jury would deliver a verdict of "guilty" without leaving their boxes, and the trial was commenced.

It is called to-day "the great trial" at B——, though sixteen years have passed away, and the old Court House has given place to a new one.

Jason Bowers exhibited no signs of guilt when placed on the prisoner's stand and confronted by the crowd in which his friends might have been numbered by pairs. It was known that he hoped to prove an alibi, though few believed his ability to do so.

"If, gentlemen," said the District Attorney to the jury in opening the case, "we shall show that immediately after his acquittal of the charge of forgery the prisoner made threats against the deceased; that he was seen in the vestibule of the Court House at the hour of 10, or thereabouts, on the night of the murder; if, at the time aforesaid, he, standing on the stone steps, addressed one of the witnesses for the State in his own undisguised voice, so that the witness will swear positively concerning his identity, we shall present a case that will demand conviction.

"But, if we shall further show, gentlemen, that the prisoner carried to his washerwoman, at daylight on the morning after the committal of the crime, a shirt, the right cuff and bosom of which contained blood stains; if, proceeding further, we shall show that when the prisoner was arrested there was found upon his person a dagger whose blade fitted the several wounds in the deceased's breast; and if we shall make known the fact that the prisoner, after his acquittal, declared that he could traverse the court-room with ease after dark; and then if we offer in evidence the last words (written) of the deceased —words which he must have written after he had been left for dead by his murderer—we shall confidently expect a conviction, though we would wish to see the prisoner, if innocent, prove a satisfactory alibi."

The attorney's opening address created a profound impression; it seemed to seal the prisoner's doom. If the prosecution could prove what they said they could, from whence would the alibi come!

The defense relied mainly upon proving an alibi, as the prisoner's chief counsel stated in his response to the District Attorney. They stated that the blood-stains on the shirt, as well as the dagger on the prisoner's person, would be accounted for. His supposed presence in the outer vestibule on the night of the crime would be swept away by the oath of the most respectable citizens of B——.

We will not enter upon the details of the trial. The prosecution introduced proof bearing upon the several heads of the District Attorney's address. The man who swore to the prisoner's presence on the Court House steps was a person of undoubted veracity, and well respected in B——. He had known Jason Bowers previous to his arraignment for forgery, and could not have been mistaken in the voice that addressed him on that night. The figure on the steps corresponded with the prisoner's; but the face was concealed, as if purposely, by the slouching of the hat. This witness swore positively.

The prisoner's shirt, accompanied by his washerwoman's testimony, was exhibited in court. It produced a profound impression, for unobliterated stains of a dark color were visible on cuff and bosom.

The prosecution, ably and almost vindictively conducted, seemed to give the prisoner no chance for escape, and the defense was regarded frivolous before its turn came.

The fact that the doors leading into the Court House were found to be locked on the inside by Jabez Throck, the janitor, on the memorable morning, was commented upon with proof by the defense. It was furthermore proved that every window was found fastened, likewise on the inside, after the discovery of the Judge's dead body.

The defense admitted the prisoner's remark concerning his ability to traverse the court-room after dark, but said that he meant by it that his protracted trial had familiarized him with the room. The blood-stains on the shirt were accounted for by saying that the prisoner had cut his wrist on the night of the crime, and, in fact, when he was arrested his wrist was found to be bandaged by bloody linen.

The alibi which the defense had proposed to prove did startle everyone.

One of the most respectable grocerymen in B—— testified that Jason Bowers had been continually in his store from 9 to half-past 10, inclusive, on the night of the murder, and several creditable witnesses deposed to having accompanied him from the grocery to the hotel, which was reached at a quarter to 11. This damaged the testimony of the witness who had sworn to having encountered Jason Bowers on the Court House steps at 10 o'clock, or thereabouts.

On cross-examination, several of the prisoner's witnesses admitted that his manner was excited and strange; but the clerk of the hotel said that shortly after the prisoner's arrival he went up to his room; did not see bandage on wrist then; had loaned the prisoner the dagger shown in court; the prisoner had returned it just before retiring, but had got it again before breakfast on the following morning. The washerwoman, on cross-examination, said that the prisoner told her that he wished his shirt by noon, as he wanted to leave B—— at that hour; noticed bandage on his wrist.

The defense also brought forward witnesses to prove that the prisoner had expressed to several his intention of leaving B—— at the hour mentioned; but that he was prevented by his arrest for murder.

As the defense progressed the spectators looked perplexed. It was evident that a loophole for the prisoner's escape would be offered. The prosecution looked dumbfounded.

The Judge's charge was elaborate in its details; his Honor leaned to a belief in the prisoner's guilt, and the jury retired.

After an absence of four hours, during which time they sent for elucidation on several points to the court, the twelve returned with a verdict of—Not guilty!

No demonstrations of delight followed the announcement of the verdict. The accused bowed to the jury and was discharged.

That day he left B—— and died ten years later without unraveling, if he could, the secret of the Judge's death.

Years afterward, when the old Court House was demolished, a rusty dagger was found in the belfry, and the slats of the blind windows showed evidences of removal, as if to admit and let out a man!

The discovery renewed speculation on B——'s great murder; that was all.

The Patent Laws—Attorney General Devens' Decision.

The decision of the Attorney General regarding the preparation of patents and patent cases, says a Washington telegram, is regarded by Patent-office officials as of great importance, as it will affect more or less every manufacturing interest in the country. It renders void letters issuing to two or more persons when but one of them is the inventor. The law clerk of the patent office, Mr. Pierce, said to-day that manufacturers are often induced to buy a patent that is apparently valid, issuing under the seal of the Patent-office, without stopping to inquire very carefully whether all the requirements of the law have been complied with, presuming that they have been, or the office would not have issued the patent. It chances oftentimes that the office has no means of ascertaining whether the parties were properly joined in making the application. Probably one-third of all the cases issued by the Patent-office, averaging about 300 a week for years past, come under the head, and manufacturers purchasing patents are necessarily vitally interested. As a consequence the decision will be fought, and there is little doubt that a test of its validity will soon be made in the courts. According to the provision of the Patent law, when a period of two years elapses from the time of the discovery of a vital error in a patent it becomes public property. As a consequence this decision will work disaster to very many inventors and their assignees. The records of the patent office show that this decision, if sustained by the courts, will invalidate between 40,000 and 50,000 live patents. Mr. Pierce said that it had been pretty well known to the profession that a vital defect of that character existed. The only way, however, in which it could be fully established would be where there was a litigated case, when the patents would be examined, and the question of inventorship thoroughly ventilated. So there is no way of telling exactly what particular patents are affected until they pass under the test by litigation.

What Richmond Drinks.

The Moffett register tax for the month of July in Richmond, Va., was as follows: Two hundred and fifty-five alcoholic registers recorded 87,679 drinks sold, realizing a tax of $2,191.97; 186 malt registers recorded 161,294 drinks sold, realizing a tax of $808.48. Total alcoholic and malt tax, $3,000.45. To this must be added the gallon tax, which amounts to about $86 per month.

THE LITTLE GIANT.

An Appreciative Sketch by Henry Watterson.

(From the Louisville Courier-Journal.)

The unveiling of a monument to the late Stephen A. Douglas, at Chicago, recalls the memory of that extraordinary man. It is not so long since he quitted the stage of public action but that there are thousands of people who have a distinct picture in their mind's eye of the short, thick-set figure; the florid, agreeable countenance; the nervous, earnest manner which, whilst he lived, made him so attractive to friend and foe. They christened him—they who put him forward prematurely as a candidate for President—"The Little Giant."

It was in the winter of 1851-'52. The old Democratic Review had become the property of George Sanders, backed by the money of Arnold Harris. Sanders was a whimsical adventurer of distinguished lineage and curious resources. Harris was a rich, clear-headed and sagacious man of affairs. They got hold of a brilliant Irishman, Devin Reilly by name, one of the '48 men, and they began the Douglas crusade, before their hero was 40.

Reilly made things red-hot. He added the terms Old Fogy and Young America to our political vocabulary. Cass, Buchanan, Marcy and the rest were Old Fogies. "The Little Giant" was Young America. Under his eagles a progressive policy was to be inaugurated, and freedom guaranteed to a down-trodden world—Ireland, Italy, Hungary, Poland, and, in fact, all the struggling nations from China to Peru. The scheme was bold and showy, but it could not win. After a deal of wrangling, Pierce was nominated, and the filibusters dispersed. Sanders was sent as Consul to London. Reilly died. Douglas himself was conservative.

He became the main-stay of the administration, which, under the inspiration of Jefferson Davis, then Secretary of War, devised a measure for the repeal of the Missouri compromise. Away down at the bottom of the scheme lay a plan to make a territory west of Missouri, which would send old David Atchison, who had lost his seat, back to the Senate of the United States, in order that he might continue the agreeable game of whist and the somewhat prosy classic discussion which had been going on for years between him and old Mason, of Virginia, and that particular clique of ponderous respectabilities. It took an amount of hauling to drag Douglas in; but the united efforts of the administration and the urgency of Gen. Robert Armstrong, the owner of the Washington Union—a man of great personal influence and popularity in those days, and the father-in-law of Arnold Harris, Douglas' chief friend—prevailed. Being in, the Little Giant, with Alexander H. Stephens as his lieutenant in the House, made a great and successful fight, laying the foundation for the war of secession, and procuring his own political ruin.

The expected reward did not come in '56. The National Democratic Convention nominated Buchanan instead of Douglas for the Presidency. A breach soon followed the incoming of the administration. "I beg you to remember," said old Buck to Douglas in the outset of this, "the fate of Talmadge and Rives." "Sir," said the Little Giant with naive defiance, "I beg you to remember that Gen. Jackson is dead."

From that moment the battle raged. In '58 Douglas had to fight both the Republicans and the administration, with Lincoln leading the Republicans. He carried the day, but the victory was dearly bought. The administration forces, augmented by the secession element in the South, produced the fatal split at Baltimore, preparing the way for a Democratic defeat and the disruption of the Union. Amid the crash Douglas went down, a disappointed, broken-hearted man, who had fought a great but unequal match, losing all. He reached his home, where he died early in the spring of '61.

His career was a failure. Brief and brilliant, its mark was effaced in blood. It will live in history only as a half-told tale.

A more genial man than Douglas never lived. His capacity for both work and play was boundless. An illustrative story, bearing upon this point, is told of his seating himself in the lap of Beverly Tucker on a certain occasion, and exclaiming, in his impulsive way, "Bev, old boy, I love you." "Douglas," says Tucker, "will you always love me?" "Yes," says Douglas, "I will." "But," persisted Tucker, "will you love me when you get to be President?" "If I don't, may I be ——!" says Douglas. "What do you want me to do for you?" "Well," says Tucker, "when you get to be President, all I want you to do for me is to pick some public place, and put your arm around my neck, just as you are doing now, and call me Bev!"

As a debater in the Senate Douglas never had a superior. Always ready, always strong in the possession and use of facts—the chief ingredients to successful disputation—always good-humored and self-possessed, he was never beaten. As a stump-speaker he was copious, simple, lucid; a vein of homely humor running through his serious, argumentative style. His voice was commanding and melodious. His presence, notwithstanding his stumpy figure, did not lack impressment. He held a crowd excellently well, gauging its true inwardness with never-failing acumen, and hitting it with rare tact.

In money matters he was thriftless. He had a liberal spirit and a generous nature, and, though he made many profitable investments, he could never save, and was generally hard-pressed. He was not so potent a party leader as Morton, whose severity made him at times irresistible. But he was more ardently loved by his followers. Morton's asceticism kept people at arm's length. Douglas had nothing repellant about him. In his affections he was always a child. He was 48 when he died; but quite worn out. During twenty-five years there had been no halt or rest. It was go, go, go, all the time with him, night and day, year in and year out. He was so weak and nervous when he left Washington, though no one suspected his real condition, that the slightest touch made him cry.

He has been in his grave now a little more than seventeen years. Yet it seems an age since his name thundered through the land, the shibboleth of party warfare. The little group of friends who surrounded him are dead and gone. Sanders died in obscurity, almost, if not quite, in penury. George E. Pugh, his Senatorial Fidus Achates, is dead. His great Illinois rival—a man as genial and inoffensive as himself—fell by the hand of an assassin. Wm. A. Richardson, "Old Dick," as he used to be called; Arnold Harris, to whom he always came in pecuniary distress; Coolbaugh, who took his own life in Chicago not long ago, all gone. Forney survives, an exile, self-banished, in a foreign land. Beverly Tucker alone of the coterie still lives in hale and hearty manhood. Of his Senatorial enemies, Jefferson Davis, Robert Toombs, Judah P. Benjamin and David L. Yulee live. Wigfall, Green of Missouri, Bright, Mason and Slidell are dead.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

WORKING OFF SICKNESS.

It is a mistake to suppose one can work off sickness. If you feel ill, favor your body, and take the required rest which nature demands. Don't eat without appetite. Your stomach will indicate when it is time to take food, and then it will be prepared to digest it.

FOR THE TOOTHACHE.

The application of the following remedy for the toothache is said to be efficacious in the most desperate cases, provided it be not connected with rheumatism: Alum, reduced to an impalpable powder, two drachms; nitrous spirits of ether, seven drachms; mix them well and apply them to the tooth.

TO STOP BLEEDING AT THE NOSE.

The best remedy for bleeding at the nose, as given by Dr. Gleason in one of his lectures, is the vigorous motion of the jaws, as if in the act of mastication. In the case of a child, a wad of paper should be placed in its mouth, and the child instructed to chew it hard. It is the motion of the jaws that stops the flow of blood. This remedy is so very simple that many will feel inclined to laugh at it, but it has never been known to fail in a single instance, or even in very severe cases.

ONE WAY OF PURIFYING A SICK-ROOM.

I would like to mention to any among your readers who have charge of invalids or delicate children, or who are not able to go out during the hot weather, that the air of the room may be much improved by hanging thick towels dipped in cold water, with a little vinegar added, to the open window-sash, so that the air passing through is refreshed with moisture and becomes easier to inhale. This is in imitation of a custom prevalent in Calcutta, where the matting is kept sprinkled on the sunny sides of the houses.

A REMEDY FOR WEAK EYES.

A simple remedy for weak or sore eyes is recommended as follows: Get a 5-cent cake of elder flowers at the druggist's, and steep in one gill of soft water —it must be steeped in bright tin or earthenware; strain nicely, and then add three drops laudanum; bottle it tight, and keep in a cool place; then use it as a wash, letting some of it get in the eyes. Follow this, and relief is certain. If the eyes are painful or much sore, make small, soft compresses, wet in the mixture, and bind over the eyes at night. I can warrant the above as harmless and sure, having tried it in a number of cases where other skill and remedies had utterly failed. If the eyes are badly inflamed, use it very freely; and a tea made of elder flowers, and drank, will help cleanse the blood. Pure rock salt and water will strengthen your weak eyes if you bathe them daily in it. I would earnestly advise you to avoid mixtures or washes containing mineral or other poisons.—Doctor.

WHEN TO BATHE.

According to a medical journal, bathing should always be avoided under the following circumstances, viz.: "Within two hours after a meal; when exhausted by fatigue or any other cause; when the body is cooling after perspiration—the bath to be taken when the body is warm, provided no time is lost in getting into the water. Bathing in the open air should be avoided altogether, if, after having been in the water a short time, there is a sense of chilliness, with numbness of the hands and feet. Vigorous and strong persons may bathe early in the morning, on an empty stomach, but young persons and those who are weak are safer in bathing three hours after a meal, the best time for such a bath being two or three hours after breakfast. Those who are subject to attacks of giddiness and faintness, and those who suffer from palpitation or other sense of discomfort at the heart, should not bathe without first consulting their medical adviser."

A Deed of Daring.

A daring feat of heroism was recently performed by an attendant at the Insane Asylum, at Columbus, Ohio. A young-lady patient, of slight figure, had, in some unaccountable manner, worked herself between the iron bars, and, when discovered, was hanging on the outside of the window-sill, some fifty feet above the ground. To rescue the unfortunate woman from the outside by the use of ladders was the only hope, but there were none at hand which would reach above the second-story window. Charley Mardin, the attendant referred to, stripped off his coat and vest and ascended to the second story. By displaying the utmost nerve and endurance he finally succeeded in securing a hold on the window-frame above. With one hand he clung to the iron bars, and with the other grasped the poor unfortunate, just as she lost her hold of the casing above, and succeeded in seating her on the window-sill. At this crisis the lady's reason returned, and she begged her rescuer to save himself, and let her drop to the ground, some fifty feet below. Ropes were passed to Mardin, who secured them around the lady's waist, when she was lowered to the ground, Mardin being relieved from his perilous position in the same manner. Those who witnessed the heroic and successful effort pronounced it one requiring the utmost nerve, skill and bravery.

The members of a Massachusetts base-ball club are compelled, by its constitution, to be home every night at 11, to abjure the use of tobacco and liquor, and not to associate with people who bet on any games of ball.

DESERTED.

A briery lane, where wild-birds sing
  All through the summer day;
A beech-tree old, whose branches fling
  Long shadows o'er the way.

A nest, built up in the rustling boughs,
  Lined soft with moss, so green,
A tiny dwelling—a woodland house,
  With leaves for a sheltering screen.

Three delicate eggs, that pearl-like lie
  Beneath two brooding wings,
A mate that hovers all watchful by,
  Or sits beside and sings.

A careless boy, with a pitiless heart,
  That cares not for lovely things;
A bird that rises with timid start,
  On scared and fluttering wings.

A sorrowful note of plaint and woe
  Rings out on the quiet air,
And the pearl-like eggs lie crushed below
  On the beech-roots, old and bare.

And still, in the boughs of the old beech-tree,
  'Mid its rustling sprays of green,
The deserted nest you still may see
  Peep out from its verdant green.

But the bird, on its gay and gladsome wing,
  Returns to the nest no more;
And the mate, that would sit on the boughs and sing,
  His summer songs are o'er.

And naught can bring from the happy past,
  When light and love have fled
(Though the walls of the dear old home may last),
  But memories of the dead.

A Flea Trap.

We published, a few days ago, that a Cuthbert (Ga.) man had, with partial success, tried covering his limbs with varnish on retiring at night, and had captured forty-three. Another paper now gives the experience of a gentleman of its town who placed a plate of molasses under a house where the animals loved to congregate, drove a little stake on each side, and then fastened a sheet of writing paper in a vertical position over the middle of the plate. The fleas, true to their instinct to make for everything white, began to jump against the paper and to slip down into the molasses, from which they were unable to extricate themselves. The scheme was a success. The fleas were thinned out. —Savannah News.

SABBATH READING.

Thy Will Be Done.

I did not ask Thee, Lord, to give
This racking pain, these aching eyes,
This feeble flesh in torture's grasp,
This absence from the sunny skies;
I prayed for health, for bounding blood,
For joy beneath the glancing sun;
And Thou hast answered with this woe—
Thy will be done.

I did not pray, Oh Lord, for this;
That friends should leave me lone and drear,
That poverty should hedge me in,
That I should work in care and fear;
I prayed for home and wealth and bliss,
That what I toiled for might be won;
Thou hast denied the blessing still—
Thy will be done.

I did not seek, Oh Lord, for night
And sorrow darkening o'er my way,
That I should look into the grave
And all alone be turned to clay;
I prayed for light, that faces dear
Might greet me as the days went on,
And they have vanished like a cloud—
Thy will be done.

Thy will be done; Thy will be done;
I trust Thee, Father, Mother, God!
I trust Thee though my flesh grow faint,
Though I am buried 'neath the sod;
Still trust Thee, for in death's cold arms
Thy presence is a beaming sun,
All that is lost in Thee aye shines—
Thy will be done.

Negative Christians.

It would be a poor system of moral government which was made up merely of negations and prohibitions. And so he would be a poor Christian whose religion had nothing of a positive element. Many a man imagines he has built up a character, when it is simply a conspicuous absence of character, good or bad. His chief characteristic—if that which has no character can be said to have characteristics—is that of passivity. He may measure up to what St. Paul denominates "a righteous man"—just, unblamable—yet for whom one would hardly die; but is entirely lacking in those grand, positive features which make a man so greatly beloved and esteemed that his friends "would even dare to die" for him.—Watchman.

The Sermon on the Mount.

The most careless reader has probably been struck with the contrast between the delivery of this sermon and the delivery of the law on Sinai. We think of that as a "fiery law," whose promulgation is surrounded by the imagery of thunders and lightnings, and the voice of the trumpet sounding long and waxing louder and louder. We think of this as flowing forth in divinest music amid all the calm and loveliness of the clear and quiet dawn. That came dreadfully to the startled conscience from an Unseen Presence, shrouded by wreathing clouds, and destroying fire, and eddying smoke; and this was uttered by a sweet human voice moving the heart mostly in words of peace. That was delivered on the desolate and storm-rent hill, which seems with its red granite crags to threaten the scorching wilderness; this on the flowery grass of the green hillside which slopes down to the silver lake. That shook the heart with terror and agitation; this soothed it with peace and love.—Texas Baptist.

Art and Religion.

Bear us witness, ye poets and actors, ye painters and sculptors, ye singers and players upon instruments, that your art has not saved the most of you from becoming petty and selfish men and women. You are jealous of one another. You are greedy of praise and of the gold it brings. You know that there is nothing in your art that enlarges and liberalizes you, that restrains you from drunkenness and vices that shall not be named, that gives you sobriety and solidity of character, that enlarges your social sympathies, that naturally leads you into organizations for helping others outside of your own circle. Bear us witness that you are not the men and women who are relied on for performing the duties of society. If all were like you—if all were controlled by the ideas that dominate you—if all shirked the duties of social and civil life like you—if all were as much unfitted by their ideas and their employments as you are for carrying the great burdens of society, what do you suppose would become of the country, and what would become of the world?

Now, if there is anything in art that can take the place of religion, we should like to see it. If there is anything in culture that can take the place of religion, it has not yet revealed itself. Culture is centered in self. Self is the god and self is the model of all culture. Why should it not ultimate in selfishness? Culture assumes that what is present in a man needs only to be developed and harmonized to lift character to his highest point, and lift to its highest issues. It carries no idea of self-surrender, which is the first fact in practical religion of any valuable sort, and the first fact in all good development. Greece and Rome had plenty of culture, and are still our teachers in art, but the beauty that looked upon them from every hill and gate and temple could not save them from their vices. By-and-by culture will learn how powerless it is to make a man that shall be worth the making, and what poor instruments science and art are for uprooting the selfishness that rules the world. It is slowly learning this, and men who have bowed low to her have been touched with that divine discontent which nothing but religion can allay.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner.

A Woman's Fight with Bees.

Last Sunday two married ladies living on the West Side started for a drive to North East. When below Harbor creek they thought it would be refreshing to get a drink of fresh butter-milk, and for that purpose drove into a farmer's dooryard. One of the ladies immediately set out for the house, while the other proceeded to secure the horse. She had just got the animal tied when she was startled by a hum-hum-hum, and in an instant was surrounded by a swarm of bees that somehow got their dander up and were out for blood. The horse commenced to rear and plunge as the tormentors settled in squads upon his neck and head, and threatened to kick the carriage to pieces. The lady was in about as bad a fix as the horse, and was severely stung about the face and head, and her hands, which were the principal object of attack, were badly swollen. While fighting the bees she shouted desperately, "O! for a man, a man, to relieve me from these dreadful bees," but no man came to her rescue, and her companion, seeing the desperate state of affairs, started to her assistance, but was driven into the house by the bees, who made a bee-line for her. The farmer's wife came to the door and shouted that her husband was not at home, and that there wasn't a man on the farm. The woman who was out among the bees finally untied the horse and ran him into the road. She stuck her swollen hands in the first convenient mud-hole and drowned several bees. She was rejoined by her companion, who had made a circuit around the house, and the two headed for North East. Their trouble wasn't over. A good-sized squad of bees started after the carriage, and this well-nigh frightened them to death. They noticed a farmer coming up the road, and plied the whip vigorously, and requested him for heaven's sake to jump out and fight the bees. The Granger didn't care much about doing it, but said he couldn't resist the ladies' appeal, and he went for the bees and got the worst of it. The pests settled on his head, and were putting in lively work. He shrieked with pain, and in some way got off his coat, threw it over his head, and amid howls and curses whipped up his horse and drove on with the bees as company. We are ashamed to say it, but the women laughed heartily to see the fellow fight the bees.—Erie (Pa.) Dispatch.

A Candid Man.

If there is anything in the shape of a human being that is despicable, it is your natural-born liar; the man who would rather tell a falsehood, even if he had to go a mile out of the way to do so, than tell you the short, simple truth. Then there is another despicable creature, and that is your professional beggar, who always approaches you with a lie at the end of his slippery tongue. Then there is the Pharisee, who comes into our sanctum, and, under the pretense that he desires a notice of the proceedings of a certain church, manages to get his name woven into the notice so often that 99 per cent. of the article is a puff for himself and the balance for the church. Then there is that cheeky being who everlastingly dabbles in politics, much to the regret of a suffering community, and, as he is very seldom called upon to make a speech, manages by some hook or crook to get his political trash dead-headed through the columns of his party's organ. Give us the candid, straightforward man, be he ever so rough, ever so queer, just so he is candid, and then you can depend on his word. Such men are very rare and hard to meet, yet it was our luck to meet one yesterday, as we were strolling up East Friend street on our way home.

"Mister," said he, "can I speak to you a moment?"

"To be sure," we answered, "we are public property, and all have a perfect right to pump what they can out of us."

"Well, mister, I'm a poor man and I've been drinking a little too much until I've got horribly drunk. It has weakened me very much, I'm hardly able to stand up and am getting sick fast. Now, mister, will you give me a dime so that I can get something that will stimulate me, something fiery that will rouse up my drooping spirits? Mister, I'm a candid man. If I'd say to you that I was hungry and wanted a dime to buy a loaf of bread with for myself and a large family, you, no doubt, would not hesitate; but I want to tell you the truth. I do not want bread. I want something to stimulate me and warm me up, or I will go down, and perhaps ere midnight approaches, the police will drag me out of the gutter and throw me into the calaboose among the miserable and unfortunate. Now, mister, will you give me a dime?"

"Certainly," we answered, "but, as we haven't a dime to our name, just you stand here while we go around the corner and borrow a dime from a friend for you."

We left him standing there, but when we returned with the dime, an hour later, our candid man was nowhere to be found. Above all things, we admire the candid man most.—Exchange.

Marriage Customs in India.

Marriage customs and marriage mantras differ in some respects in different parts of the country. Thus, at the marriage of His Highness the Maharajah of Mysore, the following pretty recitation formed a portion of the ritual uttered by the bridegroom in musical Sanskrit:

"The bridegroom replies, 'Well be it,' and recites the following:

Who gave her?
To whom did he give her?
Love gave her!
To love he gave her.
Love was the giver.
Love was the taker.
Love! may this be thine.
With love may I enjoy her!
Love has pervaded the ocean.
With love I accept her!
Love! may this be thine.

Soon after this, the bride and the bridegroom proceed one or two steps forward, and the bride is thus addressed by the bridegroom:

"May the regions of space—may air, the sun and fire dispel that anxiety which thou feelest in thy mind, and turn thy heart to me. Be gentle in thy aspect and loyal to thy husband; be fortunate in cattle, amiable in thy mind and beautiful in thy person; mother of valiant sons; be fond of delights; be cheerful, and bring prosperity to our bipeds and quadrupeds. Soma first received thee; the sun next obtained thee; the regent of fire was thy third husband, and now a human being is thy fourth. Soma gave her to the sun; the sun gave her to the regent of fire; fire gave her to me. With her he has given me wealth and male offspring. May she, most auspicious cause of prosperity, never desert me."

These, and many others which were recited, contain much of exquisite poetry in theme. They are, to quote Max Muller, the simplest child-like prayers on record.—Jewish Times.

The Bicycle.

The fiery, untamed bicycle which infests England to such an extent latterly seems destined to run into the meshes of the law whichever way it turns. When one of them suffered from collision with a team and the owner brought suit for damages, and urged that the team was on the wrong side and wouldn't turn, it was decided that the bicyclist was only a foot passenger and his machine was not a vehicle, and hence the law did not apply. Since then another bicycle has been brought into court for running over people in the street, and when it was urged in its defense that it was not a vehicle and the rider was only a foot passenger, so that the law did not apply, it was decided that it was a vehicle and could not run over people with impunity.

BATTLING WITH A SHARK.

A Boy Terribly Bitten While Bathing in the East River.

Charles Gates, aged 14, and Arthur Cole, aged 16, had a novel and exciting encounter with a shark in the East river, the following account of which we glean from the New York Sun: They had hired a boat at the foot of Columbia street for the purpose of going on a crab-fishing expedition. They pulled slowly down the river until they reached the breakwater between Columbia and Hicks streets. Here Gates remarked to his companion that he would like to take a swim. Cole replied, "All right; peel off, and I'll remain in the boat until you return."

Gates undressed, plunged into the river, and swam several times around the boat.

Meanwhile Cole was engaged in attaching a rope to a large stone which he had on board, and which he meant to use as an anchor after they began to fish. Cole's attention was soon diverted from this work by a sudden and violent displacement of the water, which almost upset the boat. Almost simultaneously with the shock which was thus given him, he was startled by the screams of his companion, who loudly called for help. Cole concluded that Gates had met with some accident, and was about to leap into the water, when, looking over the side of the boat, he saw his companion struggling with a shark.

There was no time to be lost. The cries of Gates were growing fainter, and in a minute more his life must have been sacrificed. Cole bethought himself of the primitive anchor he had been making. He promptly seized the stone and with all his strength hurled it at the shark. Fortunately his aim was good, and the heavy stone struck the shark on the head.

Seemingly stunned by the blow for a second, the shark released his hold upon Gates. Cole seized this opportunity to rescue his friend, whose bleeding and mangled body was about to sink. Cole lay to his oars, and a few strokes brought him alongside of Gates, who was being swept along by the tide. He reached out his oar, but the drowning boy was unable to catch hold of it. At last a fortunate wave brought the boat and Gates' body close together, and Cole leaned over the side, and, seizing Gates by the head and shoulder, pulled him on board.

By this time the shark had partially recovered, and he began to plunge violently about in the water. The speechless and almost lifeless Gates was placed in the bottom of the boat, and Cole again lay to his oars, and pulled with all his strength in the direction of the boat-house from whence they had started. The shark seemed to have lost its reckoning when it missed its victim, and after making divers maneuvers it disappeared.

On reaching the shore it was found that Gates was terribly lacerated. His body seemed to be bleeding at every pore. He was exhausted from loss of blood, as well as from the effects of the terrible nervous shock he had sustained. An ambulance was telegraphed for. Dr. Cochran and an ambulance promptly arrived at McCuthry's boat-house, where the unfortunate boy had been provided with a blanket, and otherwise temporarily cared for.

After a cursory examination of Gates' wounds, the ambulance surgeon pronounced him to be in a most critical condition, and directed his immediate removal to St. Peter's Hospital. Here the wounds were closely examined by the resident surgeon. It was found that the boy's back and sides were horribly lacerated, and little if any hope is entertained of his recovery.

Cole, who is made the hero of the hour by his relatives and neighbors, is a lad of quiet demeanor, and has unusual intelligence for his age. He says that the shark was at least eight feet in length.

A Preacher Kills His Son-in-Law.

Information received here to-day gives an account of the killing of a prominent man, Maj. Andrew Scroggins, of Rutherford county, by his father-in-law, Rev. Dr. Wade Hill, of the same county, for maltreating his (Hill's) daughter. For some time past, Scroggins, with his wife, has lived in the family of the minister, and, when under the influence of liquor, the son-in-law on several occasions vented his spleen upon one of his sisters-in-law, and on yesterday he struck one of the girls. Dr. Hill, learning of this treatment of his child, went to his son-in-law and denounced his conduct in unmeasured terms. Bitter words passed between them. The reverend gentleman, losing his temper, struck Scroggins with his open hand. The latter walked out of the room at once, and dispatched a formal challenge to his father-in-law, which that gentleman declined to accept. The two met again, when Scroggins struck Hill with a heavy club, and left him upon the ground, swearing he would be fully revenged upon him for the insult he had heaped upon him, if he had to doctor his tea with strychnine. After the encounter just referred to the parties met again, both armed, Dr. Hill with a double-barreled derringer, and Scroggins with a navy revolver. The latter opened the fire, which was promptly returned by Hill, killing his antagonist at the first shot. Both of the parties to this affair are highly connected and well known. Dr. Hill is one of the most prominent Baptist ministers in the western part of this State.—Charlotte (N. C.) paper.

An Astounding Revelation.

Troy Dye, public administrator of Sacramento county, has made a full confession concerning the recent murder of a Mr. Tullis, on Grand island. He confesses to having instigated the murder for the purpose of getting control of the estate of the deceased. He implicates as the perpetrator of the deed, Edward Anderson, a Swede, formerly in his employ, and another party, name not yet ascertained. Anderson has also made a confession, corroborating that of Dye. Anderson was to receive $6,000 for the job. They had previously tried to kill Tullis by poison. They had also discussed the murder of other citizens. The details are replete with cold-blooded cruelty. Dye has heretofore borne a good reputation in the community, and his connection with the affair has created the utmost surprise and excitement.—San Francisco telegram.

A Healthy Body and a Clear Head.

If indigestion, constipation and biliousness torment the body, the head cannot be clear. These disorders react upon the brain most hurtfully, and produce a cloudiness in the organ of thought not experienced by a healthy man. Happily these brain-oppressing maladies may be entirely dispelled by that peerless alterative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which cheers, refreshes and invigorates the brain and nerves, while it regulates the organs of digestion, assimilation and bilious secretion. It expels the morbid humors which poison the system through the bowels and urinary passages, and exerts a powerfully invigorating influence as well. Its cathartic action is never irritating, violent or painful, but even, natural and progressive. As an appetizer and sleep promoter the Bitters is unrivaled; it mitigates the infirmities of age, relieves the ailments peculiar to the gentler sex, arrests premature decay, and builds up an enfeebled physique.

Palate and Stomach.

If you would have your biscuits, bread, rolls, corn-bread, cake—in short, all articles prepared from flour, thoroughly enjoyable and digestible, use DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER, which is not only free from adulteration, but wholesome, and makes food very nutritious. This Baking Powder is used by the most eminent chemists and physicians. Buy it only in cans, never loose or in bulk.

VOLUNTARY assertion should be considered as grand evidence of the merits of a remedy. Below is what one person thinks of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a cure for Heart Disease:

One evening in August, 1866, a pale, tall man, with cadaverous countenance, called upon Mr. Fellows, of St. John, N. B. After much exertion, between paroxysms of coughing, he asked "whether Mr. F. would recommend his Hypophosphites to him, a consumptive?" The reply was characteristic: "Were the case my own, I would try one bottle, and, if it proved useless, discontinue it; but if, on the contrary, it proved beneficial, I would persevere in its use indefinitely, feeling certain of curing the disease." One bottle was procured and used with good effect, a dozen was afterwards purchased, used consecutively six months, and Capt. Harris Coffil, of Windsor, Nova Scotia, was cured of Tubercular Consumption, and is to-day a healthy, vigorous man.

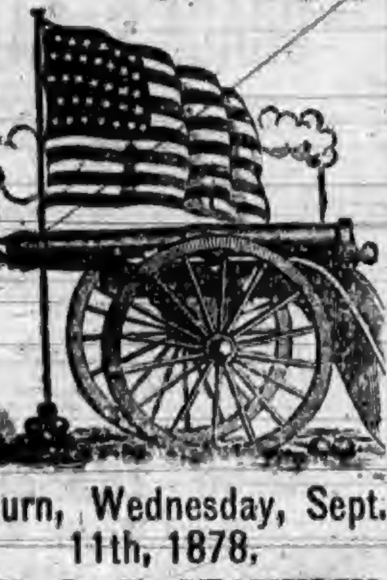
Public Speaking!



Auburn, Wednesday, Sept. 11th, 1878,

HON. J. G. SHANKLIN,

Democratic candidate for Secretary of State, will speak in German at the Court House at 7 o'clock P. M.

WATERLOO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 19,

At 2 o'clock P. M.

HON. D. W. VOORHEES.

Owing to short notice and the limited amount of advertising done for the Democratic meeting at this place last Monday, the attendance was not as large as it should have been, though fully as many were present as we expected under the circumstances. Gov. Williams made some very forcible and telling remarks in his plain, straightforward style which were very effective; his ideas are presented without flourish or eloquence and are easily understood by his hearers who will doubtless retain them upon their minds until they go to the polls in October, and an increased Democratic majority will be the result. Judge Gooding in his forcible and convincing manner had the closest attention of his hearers for about two hours, during which time he removed the political scales from the eyes of many, giving them a clear view of the surroundings, showing that the grounds on the Democratic side of the fence were clear of rubbish and inviting all who favor an honest and economical government. His argument on the subject of currency ought to satisfy every greenback man present that a vote against the Democratic party is a vote against the principles advocated by the greenback party, and indirectly in the interest of bonds, national banks, high interest and a final falling to pieces of the constitution which will result in a monarchy with General Grant at its head, which in our opinion is the very object of his extended visit and long absence in foreign countries at the present time.

True as Holy Writ.

[Logansport Pharos.]

The radical campaign of slander and vituperation will only increase the democratic majority.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

True as Holy Writ. The rank and file of all parties are honest, and the difference between the professions of republican leaders and their acts are becoming so disgustingly apparent that they are driving from them men who would support them if they could do so without loss of self respect. When a party sits itself up as a paragon of everything that is high and noble in manhood in its preachings, and lets itself down to everything vile in blackguardism in its practices, the voters whose high sense of right and justice overrides all mere party considerations leave it in disgust.

We advise democrats who have gone into the greenback movement to be on their guard; there are evidently Republicans in this county who are pretended greenbackers, but never expect to vote that ticket. Don't allow yourselves to be given away.

THURMAN.

Greenbacks vs. Bank Notes.

Our limited space will not allow us to publish as much of the Ohio keynote as we would like to, we can only make room for a few brief extracts from that part of Mr. Thurman's speech relative to National Banks and greenbacks, concerning which he says: "Shall our paper money be national bank notes or greenbacks? For several reasons, that I will briefly state, I think that the latter are preferable.

1. In the first place, a national bank currency means the indefinite perpetuation of the national debt. The national banks, so far as their circulation is concerned, are founded on that debt. It is the security for the notes, and whenever the debt be paid the banks must retire their circulation and cease to issue notes. In order, therefore, to perpetuate their privilege of issuing notes, they must strive to perpetuate the national debt. And you may rest assured that they will do so; and the influence of more than two thousand such institutions spread all over the country will be very powerful indeed.

2. A second objection to the national bank system is, that it tends to combine, concentrate, and intensify the money power. I shall indulge in no declamation against the money power. I seek to excite no passion, no prejudice. I wish to reason fairly, and I wish you to judge fairly. And I do reason fairly when I say that, in view of the undoubted fact that during the whole period of the unlimited sway of the republican party, the legislation of congress steadily favored the moneyed interest and thereby adding greatly to the burdens of the people, that the purchasing power of money has immensely increased while the exchangeable or purchasing power of everything else has remained stationary or has diminished; and in view of the further fact that the national bank system confers special privileges upon the banks that no other institutions and no individuals enjoy; that it combines more than two thousand institutions now, and, if perpetuated, may combine thousands more, in a common purpose, and with a common interest to maintain their power and prolong their privileges; that these institutions are scattered all over the republic, and, acting openly or in secret, are able to influence legislatures, congresses, and thousands of voters; it is not injustice, but, on the contrary, it is the expression of a wise anxiety to suggest that such a system is fraught with danger to the prosperity of the people and to the purity of their government. If, in the time of Andrew Jackson, the existence of the national bank with a capital of only $35,000,000, and a few branches here and there, was considered dangerous to the welfare and the institutions of the country, what shall we say of a widespread combination of 2,000 national banks, now weilding nearly five hundred millions of capital and destined if perpetuated, to vastly multiply in number, and to control thousands of millions?

3. A third objection to the national bank circulation is, that it is a special privilege that puts many millions of dollars annually into the pockets of the shareholders and takes many millions annually out of the pockets of the people.

The general rule is that a person pays interest upon what he owes; but in the case of a bank note this rule is reversed. The note is a debt due by the bank, but instead of paying interest upon it, the bank is authorized to loan it as money, and take interest upon the loan. It thus enjoys a privilege no one else enjoys. It draws interest upon its own indebtedness, and this privilege of the national banks brings them annual income of probably twenty millions of dollars. Their aggregate circulation is, in round numbers, three hundred and twenty-two millions. I think it may be reasonably assumed that three hundred millions of these notes are loaned at an average rate of interest of at least seven per cent. If so, the annual interest they receive from the loan, not of money, not of capital, but of their own indebtedness, is twenty one million dollars. And this sum is taken out of the annual product of the country, before that product is divided between labor and capital. The general rule is, that the product of human industry is ultimately divided between labor and capital; but when a bank note circulation is used the banks first step in, and, by virtue of their special privilege, take a large slice in the shape of interest upon their own indebtedness. In the case of our national banks this slice, as we have seen, amounts to twenty-one millions every year. Now, if there can be no sound paper currency but bank notes, then there is nothing left for us but to bear this burthen or try to reduce the amount of the exactions. But if the greenback is as good as the bank note, and nobody denies that it is, why should it not be substituted for the bank note, and an end put to the exaction?

And, consider further, that for every greenback it has issued, the government has received value. That greenback has paid for services rendered, or materials furnished, or it has discharged a portion of the interest-bearing public debt. There is thus a saving to the government, or to the people, of an amount equal to interest upon the outstanding greenback circulation; for had the greenback not been issued, the government would have had to raise the money, by loan or taxation, to meet its expenditures. If it raised it by loan it would, of course, have to pay interest upon the loan. If it raised it by taxation, the taxpayers lose the interest their money would have earned had they not been compelled to give it to the government.

The greenbacks now outstanding amount to $346,681,016. Computing the interest upon this sum at the lowest rate at which the government can borrow money, 4 per cent., and we have an annual saving to the people, resulting from the use of greenbacks, of $13,867,240. But if greenbacks were substituted for the 322,000,000 of national bank notes now outstanding, there would be a further saving to the people of 4 per cent. annually on that sum, namely, $12,880,000—making a total annual saving by the use of the greenback of $26,747,249. From this, however, deduct the taxes on this circulation paid by the banks, amounting to about three millions annually, and the net savings would be about twenty-three and three-quarter millions. Perhaps, in strictness, this deduction for taxes ought not to be made, for it is probable that the banks throw the burthen of the taxation upon their customers, who in turn shift it to the shoulders of those with whom they deal, until, like all other taxation, it finally falls upon the great body of consumers, the people."

Another extract from the same speech will be found on the inside of this paper.

St. Joe Items.

—A sister of Mrs. Al. Hall, from O. is visiting in town.

—Jacob Saylor, of Antwerp, O. gave us a call on Sunday.

—Mrs. J. D. Leighty visited her mother at Ft. Wayne the past week.

—Business around the elevator has been slack for the last few days.

—Twenty-three car loads of grain shipped during the two weeks just passed.

Produce buyers are paying 90 to 93c for wheat, 20 to 24 for oats and 38 for shelled corn

—Building in St. Joe has received a new start, no less than three having been commenced in the past three days.

—S. L. Widney, 1½ mile north of this place threshed from one and three fourth acres of ground, 67 bushels of wheat.

—Meeting at Sodom school house Saturday night and Sunday, Aug. 31st, and Sept. 1st. A Dunkard minister of Leo, Ind., officiating.

—The building formerly occupied by G. W. Woodcox has been rented by a Mr. Jaggers, of Metz, Ind., to be used as a residence for his family.

—J. W. Dills sold the past week, to a Chicago firm 20 acres of timber land for $1000. The timber, mostly oak, will be manufactured into lumber at the St. Joe mills and shipped to Chicago.

—Basket meeting in the grove near O. H. Widney's on Sunday September 8th. Services at 10, and half-past three o'clock. All are cordially invited to attend. The meeting will be conducted by the Rev. E. W. Eric, of Spencerville —Parties who wish to play cards for money, in other words, gamble—especially on Sunday, had better choose some secluded spot where people passing along cannot see and hear. We hear it said that some body will be returned to the grand jury if the thing is not stopped. A word to the wise is sufficient. We could give the place, (a public one), and name where money passed hands on last Sunday over a game of euchre, but we forebear for the present. For the good of the little ones who are in our town, let those who gamble, gamble no more.

The following letter from the king of Spain has been received at the department of state at Washington:

Don Alfonso XII., by the Grace of God Constitutional King of Spain, etc., to the President of the United States of America:

My Great And Good Friend—With a heart full of the deepest grief on account of the premature death of my very dear, well beloved and virtuous spouse, her Majesty Queen Maria de los Mercedes de Orleans y Borbon, which took place after a painful illness at 12:30 o'clock on the 26th inst., I inform you of this sad event, feeling certain that in view of the sentiments of sincere affection which you profess for me, you will share the grief which naturally oppresses me. On this sad occasion I reiterate to you the assurances of my particular esteem and of the unchanging friendship with which I am, great and good friend, your great and good friend.

Methodist Politicians.

[Chicago Times.]

Politics are noticing parsons this year. The nationals nominated the Rev. Gilbert De LaMatyr for congress in the Indianapolis district In Fifteenth Ohio, the same party have called upon the Rev. George W. Pepper to be their standard bearer. And in the Fourth Michigan district the democrats have universally called upon the Rev. A. N. Eldred to lead them. All of these gentlemen are Methodists, and each is supposed to sympathize heartily with the oppressed workingmen.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by McIntyre & Son's.

A Worthy Citizen.

We notice that Tom C. Mays has been placed upon the Democratic ticket, in DeKalb county, as a candidate for clerk of that county. Tom. came to this city in 1868, and until his removal to Auburn was city editor of the Sentinel. By his suavity of manners, genial ways and his well-known ability and enterprise, he became very popular, and has a legion of warm personal friends. He served in the army four years and three months; was wounded in the left shoulder at the battle of Murphysboro, Tenn. and again at the celebrated battle of Chicamaugua in the hand. We can speak for his honesty, his fine ability and feel that in his election the office will be worthily bestowed.—Fort Wayne News

Mr. G. S. McCord has his feather renovator in successful operation. He called our attention to a sample of his work which surpasses anything we have seen in that line. The fearthers are lighter and clearer after being renovated by this new process, than they are when first picked from the geese. Mr. McCord is an old resident and well known in this community, and the people can depend upon good work and square dealing. He is meeting with good success, having renovated 30 beds in the first 6 days after commencing business Give him a trial.

Through the kindness of Mr. J. L. Davis, we enjoyed a very pleasant ride through the country to the north-west last Monday afternoon. In the drive we took in the Farn and Asylum for the poor, and were really surprised to find an institution of that kind so well regulated and in such excellent condition. Superintendent Rummel escorted us over the farm giving us an idea of the vast amount of labor required in the cultivation of the various crops of roots, vegetables, tobacco, corn oats, wheat &c., &c., that appear in such abundant quantities. Our attention was called to a complete system of drainage now almost completed which will add largely to the production of the farm. We have the figures for an article showing the entire production of the year, and giving a general idea of the management of the institution, but have not had time to prepare it for this week.

School Notice.

Auburn public schools, in all grades below the high school, will open on Monday next for a term of sixteen weeks. The high school will open on Tuesday. Foreign pupils who have not been in attendance before, are requested to present themselves promptly at 9 o'clock for preliminary examination.

All pupils who formerly attended at the new building will go to the rooms in which they were last term, except the pupils of Miss Tower's school; they will pass up-stairs to the room formerly vacant. Pupils from the ward building will be directed to their rooms by their own teacher. Promotion cards will be immediately issued to all who passed their grade examinations in May, after which they will pass to their several grades, and be told what books they will need. The pupils of Miss Tower's school, however, will come prepared to pass an examination in arithmetic.

A NEW FEATURE.

THE OLD SETTLERS OF THE STATE TO MEET AT THE STATE FAIR. READ THE FOLLOWING PARTICULARS.

A number of the pioneers of the State having suggested that a meeting be held during the coming Indiana State Fair for the purpose of organizing a State Association, the Board of Agriculture granted every facility at their command to further proposed object. To that end, a committee of arrangements have been appointed to make all necessary preparation, and to secure a successful result.

Wednesday, October 2d, has been selected as the most suitable time, and the Music Hall on the State Fair Grounds as the most convenient place to assemble, which will be appropriately decorated for the occasion. It is specially requested that the pioneers and others bring such relics as are suggestive of the early settlements, and of days when pluck and undaunted courage were the crowning virtues.

It is hoped that this meeting will be the inception of regular annual meetings of the surviving pioneers of Indiana, where they who "tramped down the nettles" and laid the foundation for this great and growing state, will meet, and renew in spirit and feeling the scenes of early days, and inspire others who are following in their footsteps with gratitude to those who "blazed the way" and "cleared the opening" for the blessing we now enjoy.

It is specially requested that statements be made of any interesting incidents in connection with the early settlements, as all the proceedings of the meeting will be carefully prepared by a short-hand reporter and preserved with other records in the archives of the State for future reference.

All pioneers seventy years of age, who have been residents of the state for forty years, will be admitted free to the State Fair.

Arrangements are now pending to pass the "pioneers" free over the railroads one round trip, to attend the meeting, on presentation of proper certificate from the clerk of the county where such resides.

James V. Hazzard has filed his petition in bankruptcy. Liabilities $43,000. Assets, none.

Good Roads.

No better index of a thrifty and enterprising locality is needed than good roads. Where care and interest is shown in this direction, there you will find practical, successful farmers, good enterprising citizens. He who looks to the public need as well as to his own private interest, fills the measure of usefulness for which he was designed. Good roads are public blessings, where wheeled vehicles propelled by horse power are the only means of inter-communication. In some localities nature has done a great deal for a good road-bed, but in others she has signally failed to lend the least assistance. DeKalb county seems to be among the latter class, for there are but very few roads in the county naturally so good but what they need constant attention and repair. The mud blocade of last winter developed the fact that our system of constructing roads was a poor one.—The habit of dumping a few scrapers full of top soil on the wagon way has never been prolific of good, and a better system must be adopted if we desire better roads. We have no gravel nor stone with which to construct them, and earth is the only material at our command.

In communication with one of our experienced, practical, enterprising farmers the other day, he maintained that good roads could and had been built of the clay that is found in every road way in the country. We refer to John B. Boots, Esq., now supervisor of the south-east road district of Jackson township. In proof of this assertion he took us over about ten miles of road that had been constructed under his supervision, and we must confess that where his instructions had been carefully followed the road was excellent, and not a chuck-hole was to be found. He demands two things in the construction of his roads. First, that the road must be raised up out of the water and second, that the water must be drained from the road. In order to accomplish this he has raised the center of his road high enough to completely drain the water as it falls, carrying it to the sides away from the wagon track, and thence by good side drains as far away as convenient. During last winter part of his district roads were so constructed that not a chuck hold was to be found through all that muddy season.—There can be but one objection to this manner of constructing roads, and that is, during rainy spells they become slippy, and when two horses are used they are apt to slip on the incline where they are compelled to walk. But even this objection is unimportant as an hour after each rain is almost sufficient to dry it so that a horse will hold his footing, while the advantage of having good roads a greater portion of the time, over a few days of slippy going cannot be estimated. Mr. Boots carefully avoids the use of top soil or loam, and utilizes the clay which is plenty everywhere. In one day he built a mile of this road, now in excellent condition, with four scrapers, one plow and seven hands, and he is not a hard task master either. Raising the center of the road and lowering the sides to drains is all that is required. Mr. Boots makes the center quite crowning, and confines most of the work done to the width of one track. It looks pretty steep at first to the uninitiated but it generally wears away, and is soon in splendid condition. He has built about eight miles of road, and the following are the names of the parties and number of days of polls and poll tax put in on the work:

George Howey, 4 days; James Hursh, 4 days; Nicholas Goldsmith, 5 days; Daniel Houk, 5 days; David Grats, 4 days; Ira Bariger, 2 days; James Henderson, 7 days; John Henderson, 7 days; Abraham Furnish, 4 days; John McGilvery, 2 days; Peter Kinsinger, 2 days; John Steward, 4 days; James A. Boots, 6 days; James Furnish, 6 days; Samuel Foltz, Jr., 2 days; Samuel Foltz, Sr, 3¼ days; Andrew Wyatt, 2 days; Samuel Wyatt, 2 days; John Wyatt, 7 days; Andrew J. Shutt, 7 days; Charles Watson, 4 days; Samuel Watson, 2 days; Jessy Watson, 2 days; George Butler, 2 days; David Butler, 2 days; Wm. Watson, 3 days; Cyrus Sponhower, 4 days; Andrew Sponhower 2 days; Frank Sponhower, 3 days.

YUNO.

Fires.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock last Sunday night we observed from our bed-room window, a bright light in the sky, which we supposed was caused by a fire at Columbia city, we have since learned that the fire was at Pierceton, the particulars of which we find in the Fort Wayne Sentinel: "The blaze broke out about 11 o'clock and laid an entire block in ashes, including the hotel (Hayes House), three stores, a private residence, a restaurant and the postoffice. Nothing was saved, the town having no fire department, and the only apparatus available being a Babcock Fire Extinguisher, which was not equal to the emergency. Warsaw was telegraphed to for help, and after a long delay an engine was loaded on a car for shipment. The fire was then under contol however, and the assistance was not needed. The entire loss is estimated at $25,000 to $30,000; no insurance. The heaviest losers are Drs. Hayes and Matchett, and Mr. Graves. The origin of the fire is unknown. This is a severe blow to the little town of Pierceton.

THE FIRE AT ROME CITY.

The Sentinel of Saturday briefly mentioned the destruction of the Lakeside House, at Rome City, by fire. The fire occurred at 4:30 in the morning and was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary. The building and all the contents were entirely destroyed and the guests narrowly escaped with their lives.

The building cost $13,000 and was owned by S. R. Truesdale. Insured for $5,000 in the Ætna of Hartford, Niagara and Home of New York. The furniture was valued at $3,000, and was insured for $1,500 in the above companies. It was also owned by Mr. Truesdale. Mr. S. W. Dodge was landlord of the hotel.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains.

We again assert that we sell not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max.

An extra force of salesmen in attendance at the Star Clothing House.

As we have stores in all the principal cities in the west, we have facilities for buying that small dealers do not possess.

8 oz. Duck Overalls for 40c at the Star Clothing House. They are selling at 75c elsewhere.

A German friend of ours who has the misfortune to be in the same business as we are in, stood in front of the Star Clothing House, threw up both hands, and exclaimed, "Mine Gott, vat a crowd of beoples!"

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A POWDER-MAGAZINE containing 1,100 kegs of powder, was struck by lightning during a thunder-storm near Pottsville, Pa., last week. A terrible explosion followed, demolishing the magazine and scattering the debris in an easterly direction, making a gap in the neighboring woods fifty feet wide, and killing three of a picnic party, and more or less injuring several. Many houses in the neighborhood were badly damaged, and several cattle were so injured that they had to be killed.

JOHN E. LEETE, the New Orleans reporter who recently testified before the Potter Investigating committee, was attacked with a crazy fit in New York, and became so unruly that he had to be locked up in prison. He distinguished himself by discharging three pistol-shots through the door of a room on the second floor of the Astor House. One bullet narrowly missed the night-clerk of the hotel. Another grazed the side of a policeman who had been called to assist in arresting him. Leete is afflicted with the hallucination that he is followed by persons who desire to prevent him from making further revelations to the Potter committee.

A MEDICAL consultation at New York as to the mental condition of John E. Leete, the Potter Committee witness, resulted in the physicians pronouncing him insane, and he was transferred to Bloomingdale asylum.....At Mauch Chunk, Pa., Judge Dicher has overruled the motion for a new trial in the cases of James McDonnell and Charles Sharpe, convicted in April last of the murder of George L. Smith, and sentenced the prisoners to be hanged. Both men stoutly deny their guilt.

THE failure of H. F. Hills & Co., straw hat manufacturers, New York, is announced. Their liabilities are $200,000.

THE WEST.

AUSTIN, Nev., was recently visited by a cloud-burst, which flooded the business part of the town, doing damage to the amount of about $100,000. A man named Sparman was swept down a ravine and drowned. The Reveille office and many business buildings were wrecked.

HENRY FREUND, a traveling jeweler from New York, arrived at the Palmer House, in Chicago, about noon the other day, engaged a room on the ground floor, and, after seeing his valuable goods placed in the room, stepped out to the office. Returning in about twenty-five minutes he was dumbfounded to find that thieves had entered the room through the transom, broken open his trunks and rifled them of their valuable contents, consisting of $15,000 worth of watches, diamonds, etc. Chicago detectives claim that it is the boldest robbery ever perpetrated in that city. One of the thieves was subsequently captured and the plunder recovered....Charles W. Angell, of Chicago, Secretary of the Pullman Palace Car Company, has stolen $120,000 of the corporation's funds and fled to Europe. He was one of the most trusted men in the employ of the company, and the defalcation was a great surprise to his employers as well as to his friends and acquaintances. A woman is said to have been the inciting cause of the crime. ....Einstein Bros., boot and shoe dealers and manufacturers, of San Francisco, have suspended. Their liabilities are estimated at $800,000, half of which is due Eastern creditors.

A DISPATCH from Fort Custer, Montana, reports a big gold discovery on the North Fork of the Stinking Water river, 250 miles from Fort Custer. Three men in less than four months have taken out over 300 pounds of gold.

PRESIDENT HAYES will be one of the attractions of the Wisconsin State Fair, at Madison, on the 10th of September.

STRENUOUS exertions are being made by the authorities of the Pullman Palace Car Company to accomplish the capture of their fugitive Secretary, Charles W. Angell, of Chicago, and to recover from him the funds belonging to the company which he has with him, some $100,000. The facilities and resources of the company, both in America and Europe, are great, and no pains or expense will be spared to capture and make an example of the defaulter. It is believed that he has taken refuge in Belgium.

THE SOUTH.

A STARTLING tragedy was enacted in the city of St. Louis, last week. Col. J. P. Colcord, a well-known and brilliant attorney, and formerly a member of the Legislature, murdered his mistress and then killed himself, the inciting cause being whisky. Col. Colcord was one of the most promising lawyers in St. Louis, and during the progress of the Murphy movement in that city, several months ago, obtained considerable prominence as a temperance orator.

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch of Aug. 20, says: "Forty deaths yesterday from yellow fever, and 190 new cases reported. At least 1,000 people are now down with the fever. No further hope entertained of averting a terrible epidemic, which cannot culminate before the middle of September."....Reports from Memphis and Vicksburg, on the 20th represent the fever as increasing....A Grenada (Miss.) dispatch gives a distressing picture of the state of affairs in that ill-fated town: "The town is not merely desolate. It is so devastated that its condition is one of pitiful horror. No one is seen in the streets except the undertakers, physicians and nurses going on their hopeless and ghastly errands. In every house, almost, a body is waiting for burial—not that there is any ceremony. A man is taken with the fever, lies down exhausted, falls into a state of collapse or delirium, and in a few hours is wrapped in the blankets in which he died and hurried to the burial-place. The burial service is omitted, for the living have no time to think of other services than those to the sick."

REPORTS from the fever-scourged towns of the South, on Aug. 22, represent the disease as on the increase. There were over 100 new cases reported in New Orleans, and about fifty deaths. There was a large increase in the number of cases reported at Memphis, and the mortality was alarming. A dispatch says: "Aid continues to reach us from all parts of the country and is sadly needed. Destitution and suffering are increasing with the spread of the fever." A Grenada (Miss.) dispatch says: "Five per cent. of the whole population have died. Seventy-five negroes were taken down to-day. The New Orleans doctors are dumbfounded at the malignity of the disease. Our efforts are paralyzed for want of proper remedies. We are short of lemons, rice, beef, tea, and in fact all kinds of nourishment for the sick." Vicksburg reports fifty new cases of fever and twenty-four deaths. A wild panic prevailed at Jackson, Miss. People were fleeing from the pestilence in every direction. Business was suspended, and the city almost deserted. Memphis, Grenada, and other places have made piteous appeals for help, and the cry is being liberally responded to by Northern cities. New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Milwaukee, and other cities have forwarded liberal donations to the plague-infected districts.

INFORMATION having reached the ears of Gov. Miller, of Arkansas, that organizations are being formed with a view of depriving the colored men of the privilege of voting, he has issued an order directing that such organizations be immediately disbanded.

WASHINGTON

THE President, says a Washington dispatch, lives at the Soldiers' Home alone, all his family being away; drives to the White House about 10 in the morning, and leaves there about 3 in the afternoon, when he rides in the country until dark. He is the most lonesome man in Washington, now Devens is gone, and an office-seeker occasionally is a relief to him. His chief business at the White House is reading letters, of which he gets a great many, and dictating answers to them.

A TERRIBLE drowning accident occurred near Dubuque, Iowa, the other day. Seven young men of Moline, Ill., all Swedes, went out sailing. They were all poor swimmers, and managed the sails so poorly that a sudden gust of wind capsized the boat, throwing them all into the river. John and Adolph Swanson and Claus Aronson were rescued, but the other four were drowned.

IT is stated upon apparently good authority that the administration at Washington has settled upon the following policy as regards the Rio Grande difficulties with Mexico:

1. Raiders are to be pursued with increased vigor when they retreat to Mexican soil, and punished if caught. The troops engaged in these pursuing sorties will be increased from time to time.

2. The commanding officer of the pursuing columns will not seek a conflict with the Mexican regular forces, but will not avoid one if such forces interfere.

3. The utmost care will be taken to give no offense or cause of complaint to the Mexican authorities or people that may follow from the faithful and circumspect execution of their duties.

4. No offense is meant to the Mexican Government, the desire of the United States being simply to punish depredations upon the rights, property, and lives of its citizens.

5. Nothing which may occur on the south bank of the Rio Grande as a result of the execution of this policy will be accepted by the administration as an immediate cause of war between the countries, but if the Mexican regular troops shall cross the river in retaliation for these measures, a casus belli may be construed therefrom.

THE number of standard silver dollars coined up to Aug. 22 was 11,197,284. Of these there have been placed in circulation 1,110,780; remaining on hand in the treasury vaults, 10,086,504. The national banks, to whom the treasury recently offered to send silver dollars free of expense for transportation, have not made any considerable demands for them, and the treasury will be compelled to resort to a new expedient to place them in circulation.

THE Red Cloud Commission, consisting of Gen. Stanley, United States army; J. M. Hayworth, ex-Indian Agent of the Kiowas, and the Rev. Mr. Riggs, of the Santee Agency, have made their report to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The report shows that the commission has not been successful, and has practically surrendered to Red Cloud's wishes.

THE PRESIDENTIAL INVESTIGATION.

JOHN A. LEETE was again before the committee on the 16th. He read several letters from Kellogg, one of which is as follows:

> WILLARD'S HOTEL, Feb. 25, 1877.
>
> DEAR LEETE: I received your letter. It looks now as if the count would progress, and Hayes be declared President before the 4th of March. I noticed what you wrote about that "Times special." I immediately telegraphed a denial to the Times. Packard will be recognized, no doubt, by Hayes, if not by Grant before he goes out of office. I don't see how it can be otherwise, and all the leading Republicans here are of that opinion; and Louisiana's vote was counted, and she did become the corner-stone, so to speak. Such a wonder could only occur in such a wonderful country as this, and only once in 100 years. "All's well that ends well." Whatever betides, we have made a heap of history, such as it is. Whenever you go into another State Convention, vote right. W. P. KELLOGG.

Another letter was read, alluding to the witness, who said: "That applies to me. That was the time when I was detailed to watch you (Potter) when you were on that committee, when you got away with Phelps and Foster." Mr. Potter—I never met with two more honorable men in my life. Your statements are a mistake. Leete—Well, we thought they were very soft, and I was detailed to see after you and find out how you got around them.

NO WITNESSES were examined on the 19th. Gen. Butler called attention to the refusal of Stanley Matthews to appear and testify before the committee, and moved that the fact of his service with a subpœna and his failure to come before the committee be entered on the minutes, and that this committee report him to the House as being in contempt. The motion was unanimously adopted.

MAJ. E. A. BURKE, of New Orleans, testified before the committee on the 20th. He said: "I was charged with the registration and election matters in 1876, in New Orleans, as Chairman of the Central Committee and Registration Bureau. The highest Tilden electoral vote was 83,859, and the lowest Hayes elector received 75,240, a difference of 8,619. The witness could not give the vote for Nicholls exactly, but he had a majority of 2,000 votes. The Returning Board threw out some 10,000 votes to count in the Hayes electors." Witness said he religiously and sincerely believed that Hayes and Packard were defeated, and Tilden and Nicholls elected. He went to Washington as the agent for Nicholls to secure non-intervention by the Government troops with the State Government. Said he knew there was no possibility of counting in Hayes except under some arrangement with the Democrats of Louisiana. While in Washington he held conferences with John Sherman, Charles Foster, Stanley Matthews, and other prominent Republicans, the substantial facts of which are generally known. He also held interviews with President Grant. The latter intimated that he would do nothing to prejudice the Republican party, and would not act until the count was declared for Hayes. John Sherman participated in the negotiations, but hesitated about the unconditional recognition of the Nicholls Government, because it would insure the election of two Democratic Senators from Louisiana.

THE examination of Maj. E. A. Burke was continued on the 21st. Touching the alleged Hayes-Nicholls bargain, the witness said that "by mutual agreement the friends of Hayes were to visit Gen. Grant, with a view of ascertaining what his views were on the question of the establishment of the Nicholls Government, but there was nothing said, as far as I am aware, about any commission. I was assured by Mr. Hayes and others that all troops would be withdrawn." The witness read from some papers which he had in his possession the statement that there was a letter from Mr. Hayes to Mr. Foster, under date of Feb. 23, containing the basis of a guarantee and assurances and verbal guarantees given to Messrs. Sherman, Matthews, Foster, Dennison, and Garfield, both at the interview which was held in the committee-room of the Senate and at Wormley's Hotel. "This letter embraced all the guarantees and assurances we had," said the witness. "I never stated that I received any letter of guarantees or assurances from Mr. Sherman or others." At the conference, Maj. Burke said that to his knowledge there was no note or memorandum in writing.

THE committee concluded the examination of Maj. E. A. Burke on the 22d. Witness had an interview with James E. Anderson in New Orleans, on the 16th of November, 1876. Anderson told him the Returning Board were going to throw out a number of parishes. He said he could secure the parish of East Feliciana for the Democrats if they would pay him $5,000. "His proposition," said the witness, "was considered and accepted, as we didn't think there was any wrong in procuring evidence to show Republican frauds and rascality. His proposition would have been carried but for the fact that he had no money in it." Burke testified that, while negotiating for Nicholls in Washington, he had an interview with Secretary of War Cameron on Louisiana matters, and as to how the Nicholls Government might be allowed to maintain itself. He understood from Secretary Cameron that two Republican United States Senators would be exacted from Louisiana provided the Nicholls Government was recognized, yet there was no special pledge made, and the matter was deferred, and Columbus Delano went to Columbus, Ohio, in reference to the matter. Witness believed Mr. Sherman was acting with Mr. Cameron in the matter of the United States Senatorships. Burke related that about this time (February, 1877), Cameron went to the telegraph office and stopped an order issued by President Grant withdrawing the troops. He (Cameron) said he was Secretary of War, and would be d——d if he would let the order go; that he was Secretary of War, and the order should have gone through him....W. E. Howe, a Texas politician and lawyer, was called before the committee and interrogated as to the contents of certain communications that passed between him and Gov. Young, of Ohio, in February, 1877. The witness fell back on his professional prerogative, and declined to communicate information gained while acting in the capacity of legal adviser. Mr. Hiscock suggested that witness had had a conference with Gen. Butler and fixed up this programme of availing himself of his legal prerogative. Gen. Butler vehemently denied the soft impeachment. Mr. Potter suggested that Mr. Hiscock telegraph Gov. Young and see if he would release the witness from his professional obligations of secrecy toward him, and it was agreed to do so.

FAILURES: Bradley, Reis & Co., of Sharon, Pa., owning furnaces and coal mines in all parts of Western Pennsylvania, liabilities $1,500,000; the Bank of Millersburg, Ohio; J. C. & R. B. Cowdrey, bankers, Manomanie, Wis.; Ely & Stimson, pork-packers, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A DISPATCH from San Antonio, Tex., dated Aug. 19, says: "All of Mackenzie's forces have crossed the Rio Grande and proceeded from Newtown, immediately on the Mexican border, toward the interior, without opposition as far as heard from. The object of this invasion is to capture thieves and recover stock stolen and crossed during the early part of this week by bandits, of whom one Arcola is chief."

A SAN ANTONIO (Texas) dispatch states that "Col. Young, with a battalion of cavalry, crossed the Rio Grande, surrounded New Town early in the morning, and charged the town for the purpose of capturing the notorious stock-thief, Arcola, but he had fled, riding off bare-back sans clothing or arms. The Alcalde of New Town was interviewed and stated that Arcola stole the cattle from Texas, and had taken the stolen stock to Mexico, where he sold it, the regular Mexican troops being the purchasers, and the Mexican officers knowing the stock to be stolen."

POSTMASTER GENERAL KEY passed through Chicago the other day, en route to California....Grain in sight in the States and Canada: Wheat, 9,527,058 bushels; corn, 8,302,835 bushels; oats, 1,812,854 bushels; rye, 407,000 bushels; barley, 1,070,557 bushels.

POLITICAL.

THE Democratic Convention of Tennessee, after a session of two days at Nashville nominated Chancellor Marks for Governor.... Internal Revenue Agent Gavett has just returned to Washington from a tour through eight States, and finds an astonishing unanimity of feeling among all Republicans in favor of Gen. Grant as the next Presidential candidate.

THE Washington National Republican states authoritatively that voters in the departments will be granted the usual leaves of absence to attend the elections in their several States, and further, that the President has contributed to the Republican campaign fund ever since he came into public life. Last year he contributed $500 to the Ohio fund, and this year he has done better, and is not yet done contributing. Every member of the Cabinet has also contributed this year.

GEN. GORDON has a sure thing on getting back to the Senate from Georgia. Already 117 members of the Georgia Legislature have declared for him....Gen. Garfield has been renominated for Congress, for the ninth consecutive time, by the Republicans of the Nineteenth Ohio District.

FOREIGN

EMIL HOEDEL, who attempted the assassination of the Emperor of Germany, on the 10th of May, was executed at Berlin, on the 16th inst. Hoedel was informed of his fate only a short time before the time fixed. He received the announcement at first stolidly, but afterward betrayed great agitation. When conducted to the place of execution, the culprit trembled, and his countenance was ashy pale. The business was very quickly done. He was made to kneel down; the executioner raised an immense double-handled sword, and the head fell upon the scaffold....Thousands of Turkish troops are joining the ranks of the Bosnian insurgents, who are giving the Austrian army of occupation a good deal more trouble than they bargained for. Particulars of the Recent Train Robbery Near Winthrop, Mo.

(From the Kansas City Times.)

The down train on the Kansas City, St. Joe and Council Bluffs railroad arrived at Winthrop a little behind time, and after the usual halt for the purpose of receiving Atchison business the train was backed down. The conductor was then at the rear of the train, and he observed four men enter and take seats in the smoking-car. As soon as the train began backing he hurried forward to speak to the engineer, who was a new man, and tell him not to stop at the junction on repassing it. Having done this he returned to take up the fares. As he closed the door of the express car and prepared to step across to the smoking-car, he found himself confronted by the muzzles of three cocked revolvers, and the determined faces of as many men standing on the platform of the smoking-car. No time for retreat or reflection was given by the owners of the revolvers. "Hold up your hands!" was the immediate greeting which he received from the one in advance, given in a harsh but low voice and accompanied by an aggressive forward movement, which showed that they intended to permit no trifling. Brown held up his hands, and held them up without any unnecessary delay. The leader was over six feet in height, heavy built, probably weighing nearly two hundred pounds, and the conductor perceived that to make any resistance would make matters only worse. The next command was equally brief and equally to the point: "Turn round! Now open the door!" The conductor opened the door, entered the car, and the party followed him inside. The brakeman and express messenger were within and were instantly covered by the revolvers of the two men who had not spoken, the tall man still giving his individual attention to the conductor. The robbers were alert and determined and held every advantage. The chance of aid from the engine or smoking car was almost no chance at all. Even the sound of a shot would have remained almost unnoticed, for the train was now running toward Kansas City at the rate of thirty miles an hour. The time had come for the fourth robber to play his part, and he now entered. Like his companions he carried in his hand a cocked revolver, and wore a slouched hat which partly hid his features. The customary disguise of a mask appears to have been thought unnecessary. No time was lost by the last arrival in proceeding with his especial work. With rapid and dexterous fingers No. 4 examined all that he considered of value. The inspection occupied less than five minutes, but when he arose to his feet he was the richer by about $6,000 in currency. No attempt was made to molest the persons of the three prisoners other than in keeping them well covered with the revolvers. Despite their watchfulness Mr. Brown contrived to draw his wallet from his pocket and throw it without detection from the window. The leader now took command. "Stop the train!" was all he said, but he again looked at the conductor in a very business-like way, and the conductor pulled the cord, and the train stopped still. Covering the occupants of the car with their weapons, the men now backed quietly to the door, ordered the conductor out on the platform, descended, gave one more order: "Now go ahead!" and as it was obeyed vanished in the darkness. The whole affair had occupied but little more than five minutes, and the train was detained less than two. Some of the passengers in the smoking-car had seen the meeting of the conductor with the men on the platform, and had supposed that they were tramps and that the train had stopped to put them off. The engineer did not even suspect anything to be wrong.

The Treaty of Berlin.

The territorial changes effected by the treaty of Berlin are of a most comprehensive nature. By the treaty of Stefano Turkey was called upon to surrender 78,550 square miles, with 4,529,000 inhabitants. The treaty of Berlin deals with 83,300 square miles and 4,882,000 inhabitants, as follows:

	Square Miles.	Inhabitants.	Mohammedans.
Ceded to Roumania....	5,935	246,000	142,000
Ceded to Servia......	4,326	264,000	75,000
Ceded to Montenegro..	1,549	40,000	9,000
Ceded to Austria......	15	2,000	......
Ceded to Greece(?).....	5,300	750,000	40,000
To be occupied and administered by Austria.	28,125	1,061,000	513,000
Formed into the principality of Bulgaria..	24,404	1,773,000	681,500
Included in Eastern Roumelia......	13,646	746,000	265,000

The island fortress of Ada Kale, recently occupied by Austria, is not referred to in the treaty at all, and will probably remain in the hands of the power which now holds it. Roumania, in exchange for the territory ceded, is called upon to surrender 3,270 square miles, with 140,000 inhabitants, to Russia. The political divisions of the Balkan peninsula will be as follows:

	Square Miles.	Inhabitants.	Mohammedans.
Roumania.........	49,463	5,149,000	143,300
Servia...........	18,816	1,612,068	78,500
Montenegro.......	2,898	210,000	9,000
Turkey..........	140,965	8,389,000	3,081,000

But, if we exclude the provinces "indefinitely" to be occupied by Austria, Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia, there remain to Turkey only 74,790 square miles, with 4,779,000 inhabitants, of whom 2,521,500 are Mohammedans. In Armenia Russia takes 10,000 square miles, with about 350,000 inhabitants. Cyprus, intrusted to the keeping of England, has an area of 2,288 square miles, and about 150,000 inhabitants.—London Athenæum

A Death Grapple With a Panther.

Last week a hunter named Jacob Farquarson, while passing through the forest between White Fish lake and Black Trout lake, near the headwaters of the Madawaska river, encountered a puma, or American panther. While looking at the remains of a large upland cariboo he heard a noise at some distance off among the tree-tops. Shortly after the sounds were repeated, and on looking up he saw a large animal leaping from tree to tree toward the spot were he stood. He was armed with a Ballard rifle, and as soon as the beast came near enough he fired. The brute sprung from the tree directly at him. In the meantime the hunter had rapidly reloaded, and, having jumped aside and behind a large pine before the infuriated animal could recover for a second spring, he gave it another bullet. Both shots had taken effect, as it was afterward discovered, but neither in a vital part. After the second shot the puma turned and darted with a roar at the hunter, who drew a long keen-edged hunting knife, and with his back against a tree awaited his enemy. The enraged animal sprung at him and fastened its long, curved claws into his shoulder. He drove the knife repeatedly to the hilt into its breast. Both came to the ground together, but the struggle did not last long, for the huge animal, weakened from the loss of blood from the bullets and knife of Farquarson, soon turned over dead. The animal, which is rare in Canada now, was one of the largest size, measuring 9 feet from the nose to the extremity of the tail.—Ottawa (Can.) Free Press.

Consular Reports.

The Industries of the Gironde.—Mr. B. Gerrish, Jr., United States Consul at Bordeaux, furnishes the Department of State, at Washington, with an elaborate review of the various industries of the Gironde. Bordeaux, with 150 workingmen's societies, has thus far been exempt from strikes or other reckless action by any class of laboring men. They are more patient, orderly and prudent than the workingmen in other parts of Europe. Bordeaux suffers from an unusual number of cafes—nurseries of idleness, but not of drunkenness. Light wine and beer are the common beverages. Although rum, gin and brandy are to be had at low prices, they are rarely used. Savings societies exist to some extent among the laborers, encouraged in some instances by wise and benevolent capitalists. Farm laborers are frequently so economical as to become wealthy proprietors. They are paid 380f. to 420f. a year, lodged and boarded; if not boarded, but are lodged, they receive as high as 800f. to 850f. per annum. Day laborers, without board, receive 2½f. to 3f. a day, with a bottle of wine. A suit of clothes costs 15f. to 20f. Coopers, ship-carpenters and foremen in wine-cellars, by great frugality, attain a condition of comparative independence. The average wages of mechanics may be stated at 4f. to 4½f. per day—an increase of nearly 1f. since 1873. The cost of living has not increased, but rather decreased.

The Hamburg Consul's Report.—Mr. John M. Wilson, United States Consul at Hamburg, reports to the Department of State that since the consolidation of the German empire and the close of the war the cost of living has greatly increased—nearly doubled in the last ten years, while the price of labor has not proportionately advanced. During the last two years business of every kind has been very dull. Within the last three months an improvement is manifest, and a more confident feeling prevails among business men that the worst is passed. The labor of the Hamburg district is performed by men, but few women being engaged. The hours of labor are from daylight to dark. Half an hour is allowed for breakfast, two hours for dinner, and half an hour at 4 p. m. for lunch. Farm hands are paid by the year, first-class hands receiving $85 to $114, and the second class $57 to $85, board and lodging included. These laborers live frugally, clinging with great tenacity to old customs, and are honest and law-abiding. Mechanics are paid by the day, receiving from 70 to 85 cents, board and lodging not included. Clerks in stores, offices, banks, etc., receive from $200 to $714 and $1,428 per annum. Their cost of living, if single, varies from $285 to $714 per year; if married, one-half more. All wages are from 10 to 20 per cent. higher than in 1873.

Foreign Immigration.

Once more the tide of emigration from Europe to the United States begins to rise. During July, 12,650 emigrants arrived at New York—an increase of 3,051 over the number for the same month last year. The arrivals at other ports are upon a correspondingly increasing scale. It is to be observed that the emigrants for many months past have been chiefly from the German and Austrian provinces of Europe; Ireland no longer has a surplus population; the Irish emigrants who now arrive are mainly well-to-do peasant farmers, who come with funds in hand to buy farms in the West. The great bulk of the emigrants now arriving are Austrian and German peasants; they arrive in companies or colonies, and generally proceed forthwith to lands which have already been procured for them. It is probable that immigration will now steadily increase, and attain something like its former proportions.—New York Graphic.

A Nice Little Fish Story.

The sweetest little fish story of the season is told by Frank Abbott, of Burlington, Iowa. At Clear Lake dwells a little girl who takes a ride every day in a small skiff drawn by two pickerel. They are regularly harnessed, and by means of lines she is enabled to guide them in any direction. The fish are about three feet in length, weigh between seven and eight pounds each, and are very powerful. When the girl is tired of riding she drives the pickerel to the boat-house, where they are unharnessed, taken into a commodious glass aquarium made expressly for them, and fed. When she goes to the tank to harness them for a ride, the pickerel jump almost into her arms, so glad, apparently, are they to see her. The young miss has been offered $1,000 for her team.

A Long-Lived People.

Quakers are known to be an unusually long-lived folk. The average of the 308 members of the Society of Friends who died in Great Britain and Ireland last year was over 58 years, and the average of deaths to population was about 15½ per 1,000. The number of deaths of children under 1 year was only 19, and the highest number in any decade of life was that which included those whose ages were between 70 and 80. The next highest number, 55, died between 80 and 90.

HE was a meek-eyed Granger, and, as he came hesitatingly into our presence, an uncommonly slinky-looking yellow dog slunk in between his master's legs. "Mister editor," said the visitor, "that there dog may be homely, but he is the best cattle dog in this country; yes, sir, he is the best cattle dog I ever saw, but he has one fault—just one fault, sir; he won't look at the cattle until hey are cooked."

JOKES FROM HARPER.

THE following comes from Kansas: Two persons, neither of whom bears any striking resemblance to any great jurist except for corpulency, were comfortably seated, talking over matters and things, when one said, "I once sat on the Judge's bench in Texas."

"That so?" asked his friend; "Where was the Judge?"

EVEN in mural literature we sometimes find things said in the oddest way. Thus in Litchfield, Ct., is an old tombstone with the inscription: "Sacred to the memory of the inestimable worth of unrivalled excellence and virtue, Mrs. Rachel, wife of Jerome B. Woodruff, and daughter of Norman Barber, whose ethereal part Became a seraph May 24, 1835, in the 22 year of her age."

THE Milwaukee boy respecteth his parents and maketh neat compliments. A family were discussing at the table the qualities which go to make up a good wife, when a little lad of 7, who had listened quietly to the talk, leaned over the table, kissed his mother, and said: "Mamma, when I get big enough I'm going to marry a lady just like you."

LAST year a Red Ribbon Club was organized in ——, Mich. A gentleman who made a short address on the occasion, after dwelling on the dangers which beset the paths of drunkards and those addicted to the use of alcohol, invited all persons present to join the club, saying, "You know it is written that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety-and-nine who don't repent."

LITTLE maidens of 6 exist in Georgetown, D. C., and one of them expressed herself in this fashion: After leaning far out over the window-ledge, she drew herself in and exclaimed, placing her hand on her stomach, "Oh, that hurt me right in the place where God forgot to put any bones!"

On another occasion she was gazing out into the cloudy evening, and said, "Mamma, there isn't a single star in bloom."

Being a little naughty one day her mother said, "Minna, do you see that switch up there?"

"Oh, yes," she replied, quite nonchalently, "I see it smiling down upon me."

COWS—A COMPOSITION.—This is how the pupil put it:

"The cow is a good animal. She has two horns and two eyes, and gives milk which is good to drink. She has four legs, and eats grass and hay. Some of them are red, and they have long tails."

This is how the head teacher says it ought to be put:

"The female of the bovine genus is a benificent mammal; this ruminant quadruped is possessed of corneous protuberances projecting from the occiput; her vision is binocular, and she yields an edible and nutritious lacteal exudation; she is quadrupedal and herbivorous, assimilating her food in both the succulent and exsiccated state; some of them chromatically correspond to the seventh color of the spectrum, and they are endowed with caudal appendages of exaggerated longitudinality."

IT is well at funerals to be concise and correct in narrating the incidents of the life and character of the deceased, his family, relations, etc. The following shows an unusual caution:

Mr. Phipps died, being third husband of Mrs. P. At the funeral, their regular minister being out of town, the Methodist minister was requested to officiate. Having recently been assigned to the town, and, being almost a stranger, he had to be hastily posted as to the deceased, his family, etc. At the funeral all went well, and a stranger might have thought him an old and intimate friend of the late Mr. Phipps. But he was a little foggy on the widow, for in his prayer he lost his reckoning, and brought the widow in about this wise: "And now we commend to Thy care this widow, Thy handmaid, who has been bereaved again and again and again;" then, hesitating an instant, he added, "and perhaps again."

Whether he had incorrectly ciphered up the number of husbands who had gone before, or was making allowance for one to come, we are not advised.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

THE RULE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

[Extract from Senator Thurman's Speech, at Hamilton, Ohio.]

The claim of a party in power to a prolongation of its rule necessarily involves an inquiry into its policy and government in the past. If its past rule has been vicious or unwise, prudence obviously dictates that an end, for the time being at least, should be put to its domination.

Now, has the rule of the Republican party since the close of the civil war, thirteen years ago, been wise and beneficent? I think that this question must be answered in the negative. It is not necessary to go into a detailed examination of all its measures; nor could that be done in the limit of a speech, or, indeed, of many speeches. Nor is it necessary to assert that all its measures have been bad and injurious. It is sufficient to look at the general result, and see whether that is good government and prosperity, or the reverse. Now, certainly no one will deny that this country has for the last five years suffered, as perhaps no other country ever did suffer, from depression in every branch of business, in every industrial occupation. The entire body of the producing classes—employers, employes, and middlemen—have been affected. Bankruptcies are numbered by tens if not by hundreds of thousands, and the aggregate of losses almost defies computation. The number of laborers thrown out of employment or reduced to half-time and diminished wages has been estimated by millions; and, however exaggerated the estimate may be, the extent of the evil has no parallel in this, if, indeed, it has in the history of any people. Startling is the fact, and at first view almost incomprehensible, that, in a country whose population averages but eleven persons to the square mile, there have been, and there yet are, thousands destitute of bread. A single interest—the moneyed interest—has flourished, and yet flourishes; and that, it is to be remembered, is precisely that interest that has received the fostering care of Republican legislation. Now, my friends, so far as this deplorable state of things is the result of vicious legislation or of the omission of wise legislation, the Republican party, or at least those who have controlled it, are responsible. From the 4th day of March, 1861, to the first Monday in December, 1875, more than fourteen years, that party had uncontrolled power in every department of the Federal Government; and since then it has continued to hold the Senate and the Presidency, and so have the consequent power to negative any measure of relief a Democratic House of Representatives might propose.

Is there, then, any injustice in calling that party to account for the evils the country has suffered and yet suffers? Can it with truth be said that these evils could not be foreseen, or, if foreseen, could not have been avoided or diminished? He would be a bold man who would make that assertion. For, although no Government ever was, or ever will be, omniscient and omnipotent; although disasters have happened that no rulers, however wise, could have foreseen or averted—yet the disasters of which I am speaking are not of that character, and might have been foreseen, and, to a great extent, prevented. It is but justice, then, to say to our Republican rulers, You have had every opportunity to do good and avert evil, and you have failed to do either. You have had opportunities such as no other party ever enjoyed to benefit your country, and you have, by want of intelligence or virtue, or both, brought it to the verge of ruin. It is time, high time, that you surrender the reins of Government.

I now turn to another topic, the expenditures of the Government, to which too little attention has been paid. I propose to compare Democratic expenditure with Republican expenditure, in order that you may judge which of the two parties is the better entitled to praise for honest and economical government; or, to put it in another form, which party ought to be condemned for dishonest and wasteful extravagance.

The last fiscal year of Democratic administration was that ending June 30, 1860. The ordinary expenses of the Government for that year, exclusive of pensions and interest on public debt, were $58,955,952.

These expenses, stated in detail, were (omitting cents):

For the War Department	$16,472,203
For the Navy Department	11,514,649
For the Interior Department	2,991,121
For miscellaneous, or civil	27,977,978

Now, compare these expenditures with those of the last year in which the Republican party had unlimited control, the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875. The ordinary expenses of the Government for that year (exclusive of pensions and interest on the public debt) were $142,073,632, being $83,117,682 in excess of the last year of Democratic administration; or, in other words, the Republican expenditures were nearly two and a half times as great as the Democratic expenditures. But it may be said that our population was much greater in 1875 than in 1860, and that this accounts for the increased expenses of Government. The explanation will not suffice. The population in 1860 was 31,443,321, and the expenditures were at the rate of $1.87½ per capita. In 1875 the population, as nearly as it can be estimated, was 43,000,000, and the expenditures were at the rate of $3.30 per capita.

Again, it may be said that the increase of expenses grew out of the war. This explanation will not answer. By the figures I have given, and those I shall hereafter give, I exclude the expenditures occasioned by the war, namely, pensions, the public debt and interest thereon, and confine my comparison to the ordinary expenses of Government, namely: the cost of the War, Navy, Indian and Civil departments in time of peace. The increase in these departments is shown in detail in the following table:

DETAILS.

	1860.	1875.	Increase.
War Department	$16,472,202	$41,120,645	$24,648,443
Navy	11,514,649	21,497,626	9,982,977
Indian	2,991,121	8,384,656	5,393,535
Miscellaneous, or civil	27,977,978	71,070,702	43,092,724
Increase			$83,117,676

But it may be said that the comparison should not be of a single year with a single year, because special circumstances might make such a comparison unfair, and that the only fair mode is to compare a period of several years with a like period. Very well; let us see the result of such a comparison. Let us take a period of seven years of Democratic administration, and compare it with a like period of Republican administration—both periods being years of profound peace. Let us take the seven fiscal years commencing July 1, 1853, and ending June 30, 1860, when the Democracy were in power, and compare them with the seven fiscal years commencing July 1, 1868 (three years after the close of the war), and ending June 30, 1875, when the Republicans had unlimited control, and what is the result? The following table shows it:

July 1, 1853, to June 30, 1860, seven years.

ORDINARY EXPENDITURES, LESS PENSIONS.

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1854	$50,734,963
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1855	54,838,585
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1856	65,276,299
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1857	64,780,763
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1858	71,110,889
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1859	65,133,738
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1860	58,965,952
Total	$430,880,859

Average annual expenditure, $61,554,409.

Expenditure, per capita, $1.94.

July 1, 1868, to June 30, 1875, seven years.

ORDINARY EXPENDITURES, LESS PENSIONS.

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1869	$162,019,723
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1870	153,061,905
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1871	123,189,930
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1872	126,608,451
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1873	151,179,210
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1874	165,080,571
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1875	142,073,632
Total	$1,004,193,838

Average annual expenditure, $143,456,119.

Expenditure, per capita, $3.45.

All these figures are derived from official sources, and it appears by them that the average annual ordinary expenses of the Government, in seven years of Democratic rule, were $61,554,409, while the like average annual expenses in seven years of Republican rule were $143,456,119, being an average annual excess under Republican administration of $81,901,710.

And this excess cannot be explained by the increase of population, for the expense per capita in the seven Republican years was $3.45, while in the seven Democratic years it was only $1.94.

Nor can it be explained as necessarily resulting from the war; for, as I have said, I have excluded from the comparison expenses caused by it, namely: pensions, public debt and interest thereon; and the first of the seven Republican years I have taken was the third year after the war.

Of the corruption that has brought disgrace upon the republic, and furnished the advocates of despotism, the world over, with arguments against popular government, it is not for me to speak in detail. Unfortunately for the credit of the nation, the instances are so notorious that a bare reference to them brings forth a picture from which the mind turns with loathing and indignation. The Credit Mobilier, the Pacific Mail, the Belknap trial, the villainies of the Custom House, the straw bids of the Postoffice, the Indian and whisky rings, and the long list of defaulters in every department, have become matters of history, and attest too clearly for controversy the need of reform. But no substantial reform, you may rest assured, will take place so long as Republican rule shall prevail. The evil is too deep-seated to be reached by anything short of an entire change of administration.

But, fellow-citizens, there is one great drama of fraud, one huge black spot upon the national escutcheon, that cannot be passed by with a mere allusion. The seat of the Chief Magistrate—that seat that in times past has been, and in all times should be—an emblem of purity and honor—is occupied by a man who was never elected to it, and whose elevation was accomplished by the grossest frauds and boldest usurpations that ever disgraced the history of a free people. I have no time today to go into a detailed statement of these frauds and usurpations. I have no time to show you how the Returning Board of Florida, in plain violation of the law of the State, in equally plain violation of the solemn decision of the highest court of the State, threw out a number of Democratic ballots to give the vote of the State to the Hayes electors, instead of to the Tilden electors, who had been chosen by the people. Nor how, in like manner, the Returning Board of Louisiana threw out from 6,000 to 8,000 votes given to the Tilden electors—thereby disfranchising the people of whole precincts and counties, and completely reversing the vote of the State. Nor how, by a vote of eight to seven in the Electoral Commission, all inquiry into these frauds and usurpations was precluded, and the doctrine solemnly announced and acted upon that, no matter by what frauds, no matter by what illegalities, no matter by what usurpations, a Returning or Canvassing Board may defeat the will of the people, the wrong is remediless, the constitution is powerless, the people are helpless, and usurpation must triumph and prevail.

These, fellow-citizens, are now all matters of history; but, although the erroneous decision by which Congress counted in Hayes and Wheeler may not be reversible, that fact only makes it the more incumbent upon the people to condemn the decision, and the means by which it was brought about. If such an usurpation can pass without rebuke, it will soon be in vain to talk of constitutional modes and honest elections. If the will of the people can with impunity be overthrown by obscure and corrupt returning boards and there is no remedy for the wrong, it will soon be the voice of such boards, and not the voice of the people, that will make your Presidents. And how long, I pray you, could your Government stand under such a system, or what claim would it have to be called a government of the people? My friends, if the people ever condone this great sin; if they ever pardon the guilty man who perpetrated it—and nearly every one of whom has been rewarded by office under the administration—the most sanguine advocate of popular government will have reason to hang his head in shame and doubt the possibility of its success. Yes, my fellow-citizens, the very existence of popular government, the question whether it is possible to maintain it, and to maintain it in purity, is now on trial before you. As you love the institutions bequeathed to you by the fathers, as you reverence your constitution and value your freedom, as you esteem virtue and detest wickedness, you are bound, in no uncertain tones, to manifest your abhorrence of the great usurpation.

Fellow-citizens, nothing in politics seems more certain to me than that the Republican leaders rest their hopes of a prolongation of their power upon the success that may attend a studied and energetic effort on their part to excite and perpetuate sectional feeling. And nothing seems to me more unwarranted, unpatriotic and detestable than this scheme. It is not enough that the South has frankly and manfully accepted the results of the war; that, waiving all questions as to the mode of their adoption, no voice is raised against the binding force of the constitutional amendments; that every law passed by a Radical Congress, however doubtful its constitutionality, or manifest its injustice and impolicy, is nevertheless obeyed; that a desire for harmony and peace, and a determination to aid in the preservation of the Union, are unmistakably and plainly the dominant sentiments of the Southern people—all this is not enough to deter the Republican managers from resorting to all the weapons in the arsenal of the demagogue, by which sectional hatred can be aroused and perpetuated, and a solid North thereby created to rule with a rod of iron a prostrate South. It is thirteen years since the close of the war—thirteen years since a hand was raised or a word spoken against the preservation of the Union—and yet articles are written and speeches are now made by men prominent in the Republican party, the bitterness of which is scarcely paralleled by anything that was written or said when war was flagrant and the Union was in danger.

Fellow-citizens, nothing more unjust, nothing more unpatriotic, nothing more injurious to the peace, welfare and prosperity of the republic, nothing more clearly demonstrative of the necessity for a change of rulers and the inauguration of an era of justice and fraternity than is afforded by these facts can be imagined. Do you wish the Union preserved? Then support those who would bind it together by the ties of fraternal feeling and a common interest, as well as by constitutions and laws. Do you revere justice and advocate equality of rights? Then support the party on whose banner "Justice and Equality" are indelibly inscribed. Do you wish to see the country strong and prosperous? Then support the policy that is shedding its benign influence upon every part, gives irresistible strength and universal well-being to the whole.

An Intentional Omission.

The treasury officials have been very quietly conducting an investigation of an error which occurred in the enrollment of the Sundry Civil bill, and it is alleged that some other startling discoveries have been made. Some time ago, the treasury detailed a detective to work up the case, and it is said, that he has found out that the error was an intentional one, and was induced by the use of money. There were parties here while the Hot Springs bill was pending who were opposed to it because it gave to certain parties privileges which those men wanted. The rumor is that two members of Congress and two Clerks of Enrollment were bribed to omit the Hot Springs section in enrolling the bill, and Clerk Adams has already discharged the clerk who was enrolling when the omission occurred.—Washington telegram.

THE FINANCIAL ISSUE.

Speech of Hon. Franklin Landers, at Lafayette, Ind.

The whole question of money is by the constitution given to Congress. That body has the power to make money and regulate its value. Nothing is said in the constitution as to what shall be a legal tender, or what material shall be used in making this money, or how they shall regulate its value. These things are left to the sound discretion of Congress, and that body has wisely authorized the coinage of gold and silver into dollars and eagles, and has said what value each shall have in the payment of debts. Gold and silver having been adopted as a medium of exchange by all the commercial nations of the earth, it was the part of wisdom in our Congress to adopt them as that medium also. This wisdom is clearly shown in settling the balances between Governments, and at the same time it is shown that they cannot be relied upon to perform the offices of exchange between private individuals, because they flow to and from Governments according to the degree of prosperity or adversity. A government may be flooded with coin or it may be almost entirely drained; therefore the wisdom of all commercial governments has led them to adopt a domestic or home money. This is done by the Government issuing paper money, or authorizing the banks to do so.

There is little or no profit to the Government in coining gold or silver, because of the cost of the bullion; but paper money is made of an article of but little value, hence the Government or bank issuing it makes a great profit out of it, because they never part with a dollar of it unless they receive one hundred cents in return. Therefore, when these facts are considered, you will readily understand why there is a contest as to who shall issue the paper money.

We demand, in the language of Jefferson, "that the banks should surrender their currency, and the issue of paper money be restored to the Government, to whom it belongs." But it is said that ruin and distress would follow the closing of the national banks. We don't propose to wind up the banks. When the National Bank act went into effect a high tax was placed upon State banks, which compelled them to abandon the circulation of their notes, and yet the business of the country was not disturbed, because other paper money took its place, and the banks were changed from State to national banks. In the same way the national banks could be changed from banks of issue to banks of discount and deposit only. Doubtless some of the bankers would try to retain their present privilege of loaning their indebtedness for interest, and they might desire to embarrass the business of the country, but this point can be guarded by the issue in advance of Government notes. The business community would derive great benefit from a Government currency, because the Government would get 100 cents for every dollar issued by it, whether paper or coin, because the paper would cost the holder just as much as coin. As it is now, coin costs the bank 100 cents on the dollar, whereas the paper money issued by them costs them just 1 cent on each dollar. The Government money would cost too much to be kept lying idle, and the banks would loan it at the best rate they could get.

I have said that paper money, whenever we insist upon an issue of Government notes, based on the credit of the whole people, the ghost of the Continental money and Confederate scrip is at once brought prominently before the people to convince them that such notes will always depreciate. Mr. Groesbeck, of Cincinnati, in his paper upon the subject of silver, which he read before the Bankers' Convention in New York some time since, digressed from his subject of silver and brought these ghosts before that body. He referred to the depreciation of Continental money and the Confederate scrip. He said that all money like our United States notes would depreciate in time of war. I regret, because of the high standing of Mr. Groesbeck, that he should attempt to compare our United States notes to Continental and Confederate notes. The Continental notes were not based upon taxes; the Continental Government had no power to levy taxes except by consent of the States; and, if she had had the power, they had almost nothing to tax. The Confederate notes were not issued by a Government at all, but by States in rebellion trying to establish a Government, and when their cause failed their money would of course be worthless. Will Mr. Groesbeck, or any other advocate of bank currency redeemable in coin, be candid or honest enough to inform the country what became of the redeemable money of the South, every dollar of which was lost to the holders, and what would have been the fate of the North had it not been for the issue of legal-tender notes by the Government? The banks had been under suspension of specie payments for more than twelve months, and no man of business can come to any other conclusion than this, that the people would have lost every dollar of their money had not the Greenback act of February, 1862, enabled them to redeem their notes with them. We ask for the issue of notes by a Government of more than 100 years' standing, with credit second to none, and with a revenue of nearly $300,000,000 per year. I can bear with a man of but little information bringing forward those ghosts, but when one like Groesbeck so far forgets himself as to do so, he demands some attention. I defy any opposers of the issue of such notes as we ask for by the Government to point to a single instance where the issue was made by responsible Governments that they ever did depreciate. Such notes were issued by the States of Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina, when they were colonies of Great Britain. They never depreciated below coin, although they remained in circulation for nearly forty years, and added much to the wealth of those colonies. The first notes issued by the Government after the war began were called demand notes, but, when it was seen that the Government had no coin to pay them with, Congress made them a full legal tender, and they never depreciated below the value of coin, and over $50,000 of them are outstanding to-day. When coin was worth 285 in greenbacks, which were a limited legal tender, the demand note, that was a full legal tender, was worth the same premium in greenbacks. Need I say more? Can any one doubt the ability of our Government to make her own notes par with coin to the extent that the legitimate trade of the country needs to perform exchanges? Redeemable in coin on business principles led to the wildest inflation and the most ruinous contraction, and I want to call your attention to the ebb and flow of currency under specie basis from 1811 until the issuing of Government notes:

Bank currency in 1811	$28,000,000
Bank currency in 1816	$68,000,000
Bank currency in 1820	45,000,000
Contraction from 1816 to 1820		$23,000,000
Bank currency in 1837	$141,000,000
Bank currency in 1843	58,000,000
Contraction from 1837 to 1843		83,000,000
Bank currency in 1854	$204,000,000
Bank currency in 1858	155,000,000
Contraction from 1854 to 1858		49,000,000
Bank currency in 1860	$207,000,000
Bank currency in 1862	184,000,000
Contraction from 1860 to 1862		23,000,000
Bank currency in 1863	$202,000,000

You will observe that the ebb and flow of the currency at the times I have named was, under the policy of paper money, redeemable in coin. This was all done, as I have said, on business principles, to make money and protect credit, and is directly chargeable to the policy of redeemable money, but the expansion and contraction I am about to refer to was one of designing legislation in the interests of the few and at the expense of the many. It was done to build up a moneyed aristocracy, as I have already said.

Amount of money, currency and circulating medium, Oct. 31, 1865:

United States notes, legal tenders and greenbacks	$428,160,569
Seven-thirty treasury notes	830,000,000
Compound-interest notes	173,012,141
Demand notes	32,536,900
Fractional currency	26,057,469
Total	$1,489,767,080

CURRENCY.

National-bank notes	$185,000,000
State-bank notes	65,000,000
Certificates of indebtedness	85,000,000
Total	$385,000,000

Total circulation of money and currency Oct. 31, 1865	$1,874,767,080
Contraction from 1866 to 1878	$1,086,078,286

United States notes and bank currency in circulation Dec. 1, 1878:

United States notes—greenbacks	$346,681,016
Fractional currency	16,008,000
Certificates of indebtedness	678,000
National-bank notes	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]

From the expansion and contraction which I have shown took place under specie basis from 1811 to the commencement of the war, who can argue that a currency upon such a basis is a stable one? In every case history informs us that bankruptcy and ruin to the business man and laboring community was the result. There are many here to-night who recollect the panic and bankruptcy that followed the contraction from 1837 to 1843. The amount of the contraction of the circulating medium was proportionately as great as the contraction since 1865. I cannot think there is a man in Indiana who will study the history of the expansion and contraction of paper money redeemable in coin but who will come to the conclusion which I have, that it is ruinous to the laboring and producing classes who produce all the wealth, and that it should be abandoned as not suited to the wants of the people. If you notice, a contraction of $23,000,000 from 1811 to 1816, a contraction of $83,000,000 from 1837 to 1843, caused the crash and financial panic of those periods. A contraction of $49,000,000 from 1854 to 1857 caused the panic of the latter year. A contraction of $23,000,000 from 1860 to 1862 produced the money panic and the suspension of specie payments in December, 1861. The volume of State-bank paper in 1863 was $202,000,000, which the banks were unable to redeem until the issue of greenbacks. A contraction of from $23,000,000 to $83,000,000 was sufficient to produce such wide-spread financial ruin. But in 1873 it took hundreds of millions to produce a like result, from the obvious reason that from 1861 to 1865 the business was done principally on credit, forced on us by bank currency redeemable in coin. Whereas, in 1866 there was an abundance of currency to do business, and no necessity to make debts, all commodities could be sold for cash. Therefore it required an enormous contraction to force the credit system on the country. As contraction was carried on credit was substituted until it came to the bursting point in 1873.

In order to alarm the people and prevent them from demanding their rights in a body, as they would do in any business matter disconnected from politics, in having their money made a full legal tender, and receivable by the Government in payment of all dues, they tell them that if that is done the Secretary of the Treasury will have to buy coin to pay interest on the public debt. This I deny. When the treasury notes are receivable for tariff dues, speculation in coin will cease at once, as it has been gradually falling off since the remonetization of silver. All dollars being equal in performing exchanges nothing can be performed with any dollar other than exchanges, or to loan to some person for that purpose. The paper dollar being so much superior to the coin dollar in convenience, all active exchanges will be performed by it. The coin will find its way into the treasury and bank vaults, and the Treasurer of the United States will have more gold then than he has now.

This cry of the gold ring to secure legislation in its own favor should alarm no one. As it is now, the member of our Government firm who has tariff dues to pay offers to pay the debt due to the firm in its own paper. The firm refuses to accept its own note on the ground that it has contracted to pay a particular debt in a particular kind of money, therefore, in order that the firm may be relieved of the necessity and expense of procuring that particular kind of money, they say to their partner, "We cannot receive our own note in discharge of your obligation to us; we are compelled to ask you to sell our note and bring us the kind of money we have promised to pay upon this special debt." There is not a fair-minded business man in Indiana who would call that an honorable transaction.

I have given the subject of the expansion and contraction of the currency much attention, and, though I have been denounced as an inflationist, it has been the study of my life how to avoid this result. Inflation—or expansion, if you please—robs the creditor if the inflation takes place after the debt is made, just as contraction robs the debtor for the benefit of the creditor if done after the debt is made. Honest payment is the payment of a debt in money of the same value as that in which the debt was created. I have tried to convince you that this honest payment of a creditor and justice to a debtor cannot be maintained upon a specie basis. We want a fixed amount of paper money, made and kept in circulation in order that justice may be done to both debtor and creditor, that business may be done with more certainty.

You ask me how much money the Government ought to put out. I have no hesitation in giving you my opinion. She ought to put out every dollar of paper money that she can keep at par with coin, and I believe she could keep $20 per capita, which would give us from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 at par with coin if she would give it all the credit she can by making it a full legal tender, and giving it all the paying qualities she gives to coin. If an amount was fixed by Government and it was found to be too great to be kept at par with coin, I would adopt the policy suggested by Mr. Jefferson in 1812. I would open Government loans, and take the Government legal-tender note as I would coin for bonds. A government that does not keep in circulation the largest quantity of paper money possible to be kept at par with coin, so as to give the largest price possible for lands and labor and commodities in coin or paper as its equivalent, so as to give the largest price for labor and commodities and the lowest interest, does not look after the true interest of those that produce the wealth. If commodities are sold for paper, or labor done for paper or coin either, the paper and coin being equal in value; if they had sold for one-quarter or one-half more than they would bring with an unstinted amount of money in circulation, the gold thus received for it—if preferred by the seller (both being equal)—is worth just as much if sent abroad as though the man had worked two days to get the same amount, or sold twice the amount of commodity to get it. To say that any civilized commercial Government has her values based upon coin is false. They all have paper money, and most of them have that paper money a legal tender as fully as coin. France, England and Russia have made their paper money a legal tender. The paper money of France and Russia is not redeemable. The paper of England is; but, being a legal tender, the same as coin, every dollar that is in circulation gives value to commodities and labor, just as gold would do. That is just what we mean in our platform when we demand that the Government alone shall issue money, paper as well as coin, all made a legal tender. We mean to reduce the value of coin by having paper perform precisely the same office.

Address of Dr. Gilbert De La Matyr at Martinsville, Ind.

The excitement of war had quickened the pulse of the masses, and they entered upon production with a unanimity and force that amazed the world. It was a question of immense significance. Here armies of hundreds of thousands of men would be merged into civil life. That unprecedented feat was accomplished as quickly and noiselessly as the morning dew was absorbed. The opportunity for production, and the sanguine hope of gaining homes and a competency, attracted to peaceful pursuits the disbanded heroes. The whole land became alive with motion. The hum of cheerful industry filled the air. The green wave of corn and wheat rolled westward over the prairie. As by magic, cottages, villages and cities decked a rapidly-advancing border. Railroads preceded the lines of settlement, carrying every advantage of old communities. In short, we entered upon a career of production which, if continued until now, would have paid the national and municipal debts and made the masses of the people comfortable and happy. France, at the close of a war waged since we emerged from strife, was oppressed with a debt which, in view of her undeveloped resources, was greater for her than ours was for us; but has paid her debt and has not impoverished her people. This demonstrates the practicability of keeping a people producing in such circumstances, and the amazing possibilities of production when a whole people are kept at it. The task resting on our statesmanship, since the war, has been to inspire and wisely direct the productive energies of our people. There was no other way to retrieve the waste of war, sustain the nation's honor, dearer than life, but by paying its debts, and still not impoverish themselves. Are not these statements sound? Can they be flippantly treated as the vaporings of a blatherskite? Will any man question their wisdom? No one doubts that on the management of the finances all depended. One has said that money is a tool with which we pay debts and effect exchanges. Another calls it an instrument to effect the distribution of exchanges. Still another, that it is a necessity of association. All these answers are correct. It is clear that the more debts there are to be paid and exchanges to be effected and associations to be cherished, the larger must be the volume of money. In other words (leaving out the matter of debt), the higher the civilization the greater the production and exchanges, and the more active social life the larger the volume of money needed. Add the burden of an immense debt to a people like ours, who after a civil war are engaged in immense production, the exchange of which must be made over a very wide extent of country, and are cherishing the most active association, and you have the conditions demanding the largest amount of money in circulation. I think all will agree with me thus far. There is nothing "idiotic" or insane in this view. It follows that a proper regulation of the amount of current money was the task before our statesmanship. This statement will not be branded as idiotic.

That the constitution commits this important task to the General Government is not questioned. All admit that the great work before the administration was to so regulate the currency as to secure the largest possible production from farm, mine, forest, factory and commerce. I am sure that thus far we all stand together. One party has been mainly in power and responsible. Its policy has been definite and relentlessly executed. That policy must be judged by its results. All efforts at evasion are unworthy and in vain. This is a practical world, and plans and policies are inexorably judged by their outcome. I shall not charge dishonesty on the party which has so signally failed. I shall not call the framers and guides of its policy idiots, because they have brought the people into their present state of distress. They have strictly followed the precedents of the world's financiering. At the close of the war the channels of trade were filled with a currency called forth by war exigencies. All the notes issued by the Government were used as currency except those bearing coin interest. Some classes of them were more commonly used than others, but were all more or less utilized. I believe this is a fair statement about the extent of currency. I know that the final payment to the army was largely made in interest-bearing notes, and they were thus thrust into wide circulation as currency. Because of the fancied uncertainty of the success of the Government in the war, its credit fell to about 33 per cent. in its issue of obligations. But when it triumphed there could not have remained a shadow of doubt on the mind of any intellectual person that its obligations were worth their face. Yet the absorbing effort of the Republican party has been to strengthen ostensibly the credit of the Government, which was at par above any peradventure. Of course, those who held its obligations, and a large number who manipulated them—men wanting to have them appreciated in relation to all other values—joined in the demand to have them thus appreciated. For instance: A Mr. McCune received $40,000 in gold from an English firm for a patent right. He immediately exchanged it for $108,000 in greenbacks and exchanged the greenbacks for 5-20 bonds. Within a short time Congress voluntarily made those bonds payable in coin, though the contract was to pay them in currency. That act appreciated the bonds to a level with gold. That was a very nice transaction for Mr. McCune, but a very poor bargain for a debt-ridden people. This one illustration exhibits the immense interest of the creditor class in strengthening the credit of the nation. The goal aimed at was a speedy race to a gold basis. The voluntary promise to pay bonds in coin at their maturity, which were paid for in currency depreciated by the hazards of war, and were payable in the same currency by the contract; the pledge of resumption at a given time, which was very near, and the demonetization of silver, are specimens of the legislation under the fixed policy of the party in power. To be able to pay gold for the currency afloat at call so soon, that currency must be greatly contracted and immense contraction followed. As a result of a withdrawal of currency from the channels of trade, evidences of individual indebtedness took the place of cash in all offices of exchange, and distribution of values. That necessitated the drain of interest. The national-bank system was inaugurated for the purpose of changing the greenbacks, which were non-interest-bearing notes, into interest-bearing bonds. To make that exchange rapid the unprecedented offer was made to permit any corporation complying with certain conditions to deposit $100 with the Government, on which the depositor drew 6 per cent. interest, and then received $90 in currency to loan to the people at any rate of interest allowed by the State Government. All this legislation tended directly and inevitably to swell the interest on the money used in production, and to depreciate other values.

It is not extravagant to assert that since the close of the war money has appreciated from 33 per cent. to 100, and property and income from business and labor has depreciated from 100 to 33 per cent. The producing and business classes (except money brokers) have been forced to pay an average of 10 per cent. annual interest for use of money. I need not say that business and production must speedily and inevitably break down under such a load. The prostrated condition of our country is no marvel notwithstanding our vast resources, and the fact that for the fourteen years of our descent to financial wreck God has showered His munificence in unprecedented profusion of dew, of rain and of sunshine, so as to give us abundant crops. There is no wonder that poverty and distress rests upon a very large majority of our people. Let us glance at the true state of things. Let us look at facts; facts are stubborn things that sneers cannot obliterate. Except in agriculture, production is paralyzed; nearly all whose capital was invested in productive enterprise or in business (other than money brokerage) are utterly bankrupt. The temples of industry are mostly closed and wasting in idleness. The number of free-holders has been lessened to a fearful extent. The homes of veteran soldiers, and very many other laboring men, which, by saving and toil, had been partly paid for, have been confiscated. Very many farms have been taken from families that have toiled for a generation to clear and improve them, and many more are sure to go. This confiscation of farms had become so general and so certain that a New York paper, in its issue of April 25, 1877, says, "There seems to be but one remedy, and that is a slow one and not immediately effective. To reach it both farmers and capitalists need to be educated to it, but it seems to be inevitable. It is a change of ownership of the soil, and the creation of a class of land-owners on the one hand, and of tenant farmers on the other—something similar in both cases to what has long existed, and now exists, in the older countries of Europe, and similar also to a system that is common in our own State of California. Those farmers who are land-poor must sell and become tenants in place of owners of the soil. The hoarded idle capital must be invested in these lands, and turned over to the poor farmers, who will at once be set upon their feet—not to go and loaf about towns and villages spending their money while it may last, but to buy with this money stock, fertilizers, implements, machines, and go to work to cultivate the soil profitably. Instead of their money being sunk in dead and unproductive acres it will be invested in cows, sheep, swine of improved breeds, in guano and fertilizers by which the crops will be doubled or trebled. It will thus become active and productive, and capable of doubling itself within the year. The farmer will be relieved from the burden of a bad investment on which he now makes no interest. His money will be placed where it will do the most good. He will at once be lifted from poverty to financial ease, and, in place of an unsalable farm, he will have to show for his money some property that will realize all that it is worth at public sale at twenty-four hours' notice. Very much more than this is implied in this change that is so obvious to the practical man that it need not be particularized."

Our present mission is to inspire with hope of relief in a legitimate way which will injure none and bless all. Our ultimate purpose is to wipe out debts by paying what has been contracted, and prevent the occurrence of such a state of indebtedness by securing for each a just return for his labor, and making impossible the interest drain which is the main cause of our indebtedness. To this end we seek an equilibrium between the volume of money and the demand for it and stability in that equilibrium. We agree with the hard-money advocates, that in all the fluctuations of currency it is the laborer and business man that suffer, while the money princes reap their fabulous harvest. It is the restriction of currency which has resulted in the recent concentration of wealth which now oppresses the civilized world. The coin basis has been the universal plan, and under it financial crises occur in the United States about once in ten years, and in Europe oftener. It is high time to try some more stable plan. Against any change the entire money power is strenuously and avowedly arrayed, and no wonder, for it has turned into their coffers through shaving interest—usury—the entire product of the world's toil except that the toilers necessarily consume. In every country, and in every instance, the expansion of currency has stimulated activity in production and given prosperity. The process of contracting, ostensibly to bring the currency down to a peculiar relation to one or two of the methods which have never, can never, be more than a small per cent. of the circulating medium, has invariably paralyzed production and producers, and enriched money manipulators. We propose to try the plan of having the Government charged by our constitution with the responsibility of providing a circulating medium, furnish a currency in the form of notes, based upon the gold, silver, lead, iron, coal, sand, keel, all the material resources of the nation, and also upon the enterprise, industry, intelligence and integrity of our people, making it stable as the Government itself, which is as stable as the principles of eternal truth on which it is based. We propose to have its volume sufficient to make all exchanges to be effected with ready cash, stopping the drain of usury which now saps the life of all prosperity. The possibility of supplying such a currency was demonstrated by the supply of the greenbacks and other notes which constituted the medium of exchange during the war and immediately after. The law making these notes legal tender gave them value, though no time was set to redeem the greenbacks with coin. In the greenback we had the principle in all its essential features, with an important exception: they were not made a legal tender for national duties. Such currency, wisely regulated, would answer all the purposes for which money is needed in the nation. The Government could also legalize the coinage of gold and silver and baser metals, as now, for all exchange with foreign countries, as the balance of trade in our favor, and, with ample and cheap currency, over-stimulated productions would greatly increase that balance, and notes which are legal tenders here would be of value in all countries which buy of us. If I were going to travel among some African tribes, I should change my gold into a species of small shells, a ton of which would be worth intrinsically what lime these would make, deducting expense of making, because they would buy what I should need of their tribes. We ask the hard-money defenders the impracticability of this plan, instead of crying rag-baby and such stuff, used only when argument is wanting. We know that the greenbacks were worth more than rags. They paid debts; exchanged for anything we needed, and admirably answered every demand of currency among us. It could not be impossible for the wisdom of Congress to derive safe methods for putting such a currency into the hands of the people, and to regulate its volume to their needs, without causing them to pay intermediate parties, as they have the national banks, two interests, either of which is more than they can make out of it. No sane man will contend that any ordinary business can afford to pay 6 per cent. interest on money loaned in its exchanges, yet under the hard-money policy the people pay in taxes 6 per cent., which goes to the banks, and then on an average 10 per cent. more on bank issues. It is true that banks help pay taxes, and so does all capital save that invested in national bonds.

A Minnesota Husband's Trouble With Limburger.

A young gentleman of Faribault, a boy among the boys, who occasionally visited saloons and sampled lamb's tongue, pig's feet, tripe, and actually educated himself to like Limburger cheese, after a while married, as such men will. His wife is a cultivated and sensitive little creature, as lovable as she is sensitive. Well, Robert—that was his name, Bob for short—shook the boys after marriage, as he ought, and stopped around home for two or three weeks every evening; but there were times when he had an awful hankering for his old relishes, such as hereinbefore described, especially the cheese, and one evening, being down town on an errand, he thought he would take a little Limburger home and have an old-fashioned lunch before retiring. He got the cheese and started for home, but as he neared his abode it struck him that it was the rankest cheese, even for Limburger, in all his experience. People held their noses as they met him, and every dog in the front yard went around behind the house as he went by. Before he reached home his courage gave out and he slipped his bundle into a hole in the gate-post, thinking he would go in and interview his wife—sort of prepare her for the meeting, as it were. But he was scarcely in the house before his wife gave a warning sniff, and, looking at him sharp, inquired if he was sure he hadn't stepped into something. Bob mistrusted what was the matter, but innocently looked first at one foot and then at the other, and said: "No; my feet are all right." Mrs. Bob gave a sniff or two more, got up, opened the door, closed it suddenly, and then went into the rooms leading toward the rear of the house. She was gone about five minutes, and in the meantime Bob became satisfied what the trouble was, but for the life of him did not dare to tell her. What would she say to learn that he had ever eaten such stuff? She never would forgive him, and would probably apply for a divorce.

She speedily returned and said, in a business sort of way, "Robert, we must have the sewer cleaned, and the scavenger here. I can't stand it any longer. It's getting to be perfectly awful." Bob said he would attend to it in the morning, and the first opportunity slipped out, got a spade, took the cheese into the garden and buried it. But he had to have the sewer, etc., cleaned all the same, and the job cost him $5. A few months later Bob told his wife about it, but declared the cheese was given him to try; he had never eaten any of it himself.—Faribault (Minn.) Democrat.

When Patti sings in Berlin in the fall it will not be in the Royal Opera House. The Emperor declined to permit her to appear there, solely on account of the enormous price—$2,500 per night—demanded by her for the services of herself and Nicolini. That would make it necessary to fix the cost of a seat in the barquet at $5 or more—a thing the Emperor would not hear of in these hard times. Nevertheless, Berlin must have Patti, and she is to sing on another stage at her own price.

Fourteen months ago a good looking Irish girl, seventeen years old, went to Queensland, where she obtained a situation as barmaid. She received a letter from her mother begging her to return home, and enclosing money to pay her passage. With this she bought men's clothes and obtained a situation as second steward on a steamer making trips between Newcastle and Sydney. She remained on this vessel two or three months, and then thought she would like to go to England, and that she might as well work her passage over as pay for it. She obtained a situation on board the Strathdon, a ship plying between Sydney and London. The new hand did duty well and became a favorite with the ship's company, but her sex was discovered.

The great bonanza mines that have played so stirring a part in recent California history seem entirely exhausted and about to vanish from the scene, notwithstanding the tenacity with which their leading owners try to keep up the belief that there is still paying ore in them. The Sutro tunnel, that has just been completed at enormous expense, after years of labor, looks like a wasted achievement. Shares in the California mine, that at one time were worth in the market nearly a thousand dollars each, have fallen to nine dollars and an eighth, and Consolidated Virginia, that was nearly as valuable, to eight dollars and a quarter. Many have grown rich through these mines, but thousands have been beggared by them. Their wealth has been a curse and not a blessing to California.

G. P. Sanderson, the officer in charge of the English elephant-catching establishment in Mysore, says that the elephants go in herds and in strict Indian file. When a calf is born, the herd remains with the mother two days; the calf is then able to march and can cross rivers and climb hills with the assistance of its dam. They are fine swimmers. Mr. Sanderson says that a herd of seventy-nine, which he sent across the country, had the Ganges and several of its tidal branches to cross. In the longest swim they were six hours without touching bottom. After a rest on a sand bank they completed the swim in three more. Not one was lost. Twice around an elephant's foot is said to be his height, and generally this measurement is correct. Their size is generally exaggerated. The largest Mr. Sanderson ever saw was nine feet ten inches high at the shoulder.

A well-to-do undertaker of San Francisco owned a small house and lot in a block that was coveted by one of the Pacific coast millionaire who had built a palace there and wanted all the contiguous land for a garden. He succeeded in getting all but the undertaker's property, which projected into the very heart of his grounds, and which its owner would not part with at what the millionaire considered a fair price. The latter, therefore, erected a high fence, said to be the loftiest in America enclosing the obstinate undertaker's property on three sides, and depriving it almost entirely of sunshine. The undertaker trained vines to grow up the wooden walls, and stood it coolly for a year or two. Now, at last, his patience has given out. A few weeks ago he had his house moved bodily to another part of the city, and, obstinate as ever, is about to put up a tower of Babel. The style of the proposed building, it is said, will be plain and substantial for the first five stories, but the remainder of the towering edifice, after rising above the fence will present a commingling of renaissance Gothic, and Babylonian architecture, surmounted with a section of Chinese pagoda. He declines to say to what uses he proposes putting this remarkable edifice, but it is believed that the first and paramount use will be to torment the hitherto triumphant millionaire.

The Campaign of Indiana.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

We indulge in no idle words when we say that the democratic party of Indiana is thoroughly aroused, and in nearly every county is doing yeoman's work. Indiana in 1878, as in 1876, is a battle-field, toward which all eyes are turned, and the indications are that the contest will wax warmer and fiercer until the last ballot is cast and the battle is ended. The organization of the party throughout the state is generally as near perfect as could be desired by the most ardent patriot, or demanded in view of the vital issues that enter into the campaign. We do not disguise the fact that perfect organization, undisturbed harmony, indefatigable effort, unyielding tenacity are imperatively demanded to achieve victory. The democratic party has the right, the truth and the record to stimulate its efforts and strengthen its purposes. Its mission is to wrest the country from the grasp of radicalism. That Indiana may contribute her full share in the great work, the imperative necessity is presented of redeeming the state from the infamously corrupt apportionment act passed by the radical party in 1873. To do this the legislature must be democratic. Securing the legislature secures a democratic United States senator; besides, if the legislature is democratic, an increase of democratic congressmen is placed beyond a peradventure.

After the 4th of March, 1879, the United States senate will be democratic and the question now is, shall the next house of representatives be democratic? Never in the history of the government has the question been fraught with such consequence of weal or woe to the republic. The radical party has been condemned by the people and no damnatory sentence was ever more justly pronounced. This party, exercising for years supreme controle, laid its unholy hands upon constitutions, laws and the liberties of the people; abandoning the ballot, it utilized bullet and bayonet, and worse than Belshazzar who degraded the sacred vessels of God's temple, worse than vandal hordes who destroyed the monuments of Rome's civilization, the radical party with lying professions of devotion to the institutions of the country, sought by every devilish device to retain power by destroying the alters and the shrines of liberty. We know there are questions of finance to be discussed and settled; we know that the labor problem is even now taxing the abilities of the profoundest thinkers of the land; we know there are questions of tariffs and taxations to be settled, but as the Boston Post opportunely remarks "there is one great and overpowering issue that surpasses all others. Shall the great national wrong be righted? Shall the people be permitted to choose and inaugurate a president of their choice? Shall fraud and crime be allowed to supplant popular sovereignty and destroy the very foundation of political action? Shall men exalted to high stations by the aid of conspirators, though by them denounced as 'purjured rascals,' escape with their common plunder before the gaze and by the consent of an indignant people? These and kindred questions are the real ones before the country, and which in 1880 are to loom up in their true magnitude and importance. We have first to settle the fact whether we are to have any government at all before determining by what measure it be controlled. It has once been saved by subduing an open revolt. The next effort required will be to rescue it from corruption and usurpation. It is evident also that the people will have a difficult work on their hands. All that practiced conspirators can do to count out men fairly elected and count in those whom the people at the polls rejected, will be attempted again. All that money can accomplish to poison the public mind, seduce voters and buy up returning boards is to be prepared for once more. All that despoilers of the people under Grant's administrations can do to get their unholy hands into the treasury again will assuredly be done. From accomplishing their purpose there will be no bar but by a vigorous and united effort to vindicate the monstrous wrong of 1876, and by preventing its repetition in 1880. The democrats have no energy to be wasted by divisions or subordinate issues, and should keep their eyes first and foremost on the great duty of first rescuing the government from those who, under the forms of law, have revolutionized it."

The radical party is massing its strength for the last struggle. It must win or die. To achieve victory now the radical party is ready for any blasphemous proceedings. It has a hell brood of conspirators ready to duplicate the forgeries and perjuries of Florida and Louisiana. John Sherman is as ready now as then to bargain for perjuries and promise federal officers as the reward. J. Madison Wells and his congress, for a consideration, would burn the gospel, erase the statues, insult the crucifix, and set the guillotine at work more actively than Robespierre ever dreamed of, if thereby he could enthrone another fraud in the office of president, and receive as his reward a federal office. This party is to be defeated in Indiana. It will require hard work and continuous work from now till the last blow is struck and the polls are closed.

Democratic Doctrine.

The Platform of the Party Adopted at the State Convention.

A Clear and Unequivocal Enunciation of Principles—Sentiments which the Masses Will Endorse.

The democracy of the State of Indiana, assembled in delegate convention, declare;

That national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are, by the terms of the original contracts under which they were issued, expressly made payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money, as well as coin, is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

That we are in favor of such legislation by congress as will authorize the taxation by the states, of the United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad through the means of home syndicates or other methods: and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislating so as to distribute said debt among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practicable opportunity for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation as shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public any private; and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon [illegible] terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

That we are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employes of corporations engaged in the business of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that such lien shall be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation.

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and owner.

That the democratic party is the friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last apportionment of the state for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonorable, and we demand that the next legislature, in apportioning the state for legislative purposes, as will be their imperative duty, shall have regard alone to population and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the circuit courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the states tends to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the interests of the people; and we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the constitution and expressed in the judiciary act of 1789.

That we are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the federal government either in lands, bonds, money, or by the pledge of the public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders of the republican party who secretly conceived and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for president and vice-president, were wrongly kept out of the position to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that only can be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the president of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the act of federal officers in attempting to interfere with the rights and powers of the state courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our senators and representatives in congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to the soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

A LITTLE TRAVELLER.

A Girl of Five Years Comes all the Way from Texas Alone.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

Among the passengers who reached this city on Wednesday night by the Western and Atlanta train from Chattanooga was a little girl five years old. She had a bright, intelligent face, with sparkling brown eyes, and was placarded with a large envelope which was suspended from her neck and displayed her name, Miss Annie Hilton. A letter on the inside of the envelope, directed to the conductors, and signed by M. S. Jay general passenger agent of the Memphis and Little Rock Railway, explained the fact that the child was from Austin, Texas, and was on her way to Wilmington, N. C., where her father resided. Mr. Jay made a request in his letter that the conductors on the line take good care of the child and see that she was safely delivered to her father, who would meet her at Wilmington upon [illegible] H. Marmaduke, who reached this city on the same train from Little Rock took her in his care at that place but afterward resigned to Mr. and Mrs. Banks of Charleston, S. C., who promised to see her safely as far as Augusta, Ga. Miss Annie says that she was born in Texas, and has never seen her father. Her mother died, and her father recently married again in Wilmington. He had telegraphed for her to come to him. The little traveler had a small satchel and a lunch basket; also a few dollars of change. Since leaving Austin she has made eight changes of cars, and will make as many more before she reaches her destination. She will then have traveled about sixteen hundred miles.

United States as a Horrible Example.

[Pololtoca (Mexico) Aguardiente.]

Two years ago the quadrennial election for president occurred. Senor Tilden received a majority of half a million votes; but the party in power favoring his opponents and threatening to use the army in favor of the latter, a compromise was effected, by which fifteen of the purest men of both parties were chosen to decide the question. Those fifteen pure men proved their superiority by voting in court exactly as they had voted at the election. So pure were the fifteen purest men found in Sodom! The self-governing Anglo-Saxons at the north are now investigating this affair, and uncovering a mass of corrupt bargain and sale such as never disgraced the vilest pueblo of North or South America. No, Senor Lerdo, if you wish to gain the suffrages of free Mexicans you must hold up a loftier example than that of the corrupt anarchical, republic-despotism of the north. We are not yet prepared to exchange our bull-fights for your "prize-ring," our religious liberty for your Methodist state church, nor the legacy of Bolivar for either an Austrian scepter or a mock-republic disguising a military plutocracy.

A New Kind of a Race.

[N. Y. Sun.]

Mr. James K. Allen, aeronaut, of Dayton, Ohio, has challenged Professor Hayden of Cincinnati, to a race with balloons. It is to take place from the grounds of the Soldiers' Home on Wednesday afternoon, August 28, the bet being $500 on each side. Mr. Allen says he can "sail higher, stay up longer and travel a greater distance" than Mr. Hayden can; and this is the issue to be decided between them.

Landseer painted a splendid Newfoundland with the title, "A distinguished member of the Humane Society," which is no misnomer, so far as water is concerned, but we never heard of one of these dogs saving life in fire. This, however, has been done by a retriever at the residence of Mr. Francis, an English telegraph engineer, whose dog, hearing the children screaming, when their room was on fire, rushed in and brought down the youngest, aged three.

THE SILENT MELODY.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

"Bring me my broken harp," he said;
"We both are wrecks—but as ye will—
Though all its ringing tones have fled,
Their echoes linger round it still;
It had some golden strings, I know,
But that was long—how long!—ago.

"I cannot see its tarnished gold,
I cannot hear its vanished tone,
Scarce can my trembling fingers hold
The pillar'd frame so long their own;
We both are wrecks—a while ago
It had some silver strings, I know.

"But on them Time too long has played
The solemn strain that knows no change,
And where of old my fingers strayed
The chords they find are new and strange—
Yes! iron strings—I know—I know—
We both are wrecks of long ago.

"We both are wrecks—a shattered pair—
Strange to ourselves in Time's disguise. . . .
What say ye to the love-sick air
That brought the tears from Marian's eyes?
Ay! trust me—under breasts of snow
Hearts could be melted long ago!

"Or will ye hear the storm-song's crash
That from his dreams the soldier woke
And bade him face the lightning's flash
When battle clouds in thunder broke? . . .
Wrecks—nought but wrecks!—the time was when
We two were worth a thousand men!"

And so the broken harp they bring,
With pitying smiles that none could blame;
Alas! there's not a single string
Of all that filled the tarnished frame!
But see! like children overjoyed,
His fingers rambling through the void!

"I clasp thee! Ay . . . mine ancient lyre . . .
Nay, guide my wandering fingers . . . There
They love to dally with the wire
as Isaac played with Esau's hair. . . .
Hush! ye shall hear the famous tune
That Marian called 'The Breath of June!'"

And so they softly gather round;
Rapt in his tuneful trance he seems;
His fingers move: but not a sound!
A silence like the song of dreams. . . .
"There! ye have heard the air," he cries,
"That brought the tears from Marian's eyes!"

Ah, smile not at his fond conceit,
Nor deem his fancy wrought in vain;
To him the unreal sounds are sweet—
No discord mars the silent strain
Scored on life's latest, star-lit page—
The voiceless melody of age.

Sweet are the lips of all who sing,
When Nature's music breathes unsought,
But never yet could voice or string
So truly shape our tenderest thought,
As when, by life's decaying fire,
Our fingers sweep the stringless lyre!

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.

About the beginning of this century, while the Revolutionary Wars were raging, communication in cipher was naturally very prevalent; and ingenuity was taxed to the utmost on one hand to invent, and on the other to detect, the medium used in secret correspondence. As a rule, the decipherer had beaten the cipher; and no known method was secure of detection. If conventional signs merely were used, the recurrence of the different symbols gave a key easily followed out. Some ingenious spirits corresponded by reference to the pages and lines of particular editions of particular books—others by an agreed-on vocabulary. But these last methods, although they might preserve the secret, disclosed what was often quite as dangerous, that there was a secret. I am about to tell you of a plan which, for a long time, was not only undetected, but unsuspected.

It was at that time when the first Napoleon had assembled his fleets and transports at Brest, with the ostensible, and as is generally believed the real, view of making a descent on England. The greatest precautions were observed by the English Government in regard to the correspondence with France, and an amount of espionage was practised at the postoffice which left Sir James Graham's subsequent performances in that line far behind. The national excitement was intense, and the political department was administered with an iron away.

My uncle, Sir George Trevor, was, as all the world then knew, high in the Admiralty, and, as it was from him that I heard this anecdote, its veracity may be depended on.

The dispatches to and from the Admiralty were the subject of the greatest vigilance and the most stringent regulations. The clerks were not permitted to send or receive letters which were not first submitted to the chief clerk, and it was believed that letters addressed even to their private residences were frequently opened at the postoffice.

At the time I speak of, the chief clerk was an elderly man of the name of Parker—a wizened, wiry, dapper individual, so imbued with the official tincture of Whitehall that it had become second nature to him. He was a genial and kindly soul, keen and energetic in the affairs of his office, and in all others a mere child.

He had engaged as his private secretary a young fellow by the name of Beaumont, who was one of the most promising subordinates in the establishment. He was a modest, unassuming man, very good-looking, with a countenance and an air suggestive of depression and melancholy. He was evidently of good education, and probably gentle-born also, for his manners were well-and indicated good breeding. He easy, native of Jersey, and had been was a duced to the notice of the Admiralty authorities by some influential member of Parliament. He was much liked in the office, and discharged his duties to perfection.

One morning Parker presented himself before my uncle with a visage pale with woe, and trembling with excitement.

"Why, what is the matter, Parker? Has Bonaparte come?"

"He may have, for aught I know," said Parker. "Things are all wrong, Sir George!"

"What are wrong?"

"The letters are wrong. There is a spy among us. I have known it for long; now I am quite sure; but I cannot find him out."

Parker went on to explain that he had for some time suspected that some one in the office communicated their private information and dispatches outside. He had redoubled his precautions; but, more than ever confirmed in his suspicions, was entirely baffled in his endeavors to detect the culprit.

"But, Parker," said my uncle, "how do you come to be so sure that your secrets have transpired?"

"By the funds, Sir George. They answer to the news as surely as the bell down stairs does to the bell-rope. I find them going up and down as if they were sitting in the office," said Parker, personifying the stock exchange for the moment.

"Have all the letters to the clerks been examined strictly?"

"Yes; I read them all myself."

"Find nothing in them?"

"Mighty little. Some are from home, some from friends, and most of them from sweethearts," said Parker, twisting his face into a grim smile, "and rum things they say in them."

"And the young man's letters. Are they rum, too?"

"They are more careful like, as they know I am to see them; but, Lord save you, sir, they are all stuff; not a ha'porth of harm in them."

"This matter must be seen to," said my uncle; "I have had my own misgivings on the subject. Bring me all the letters which come to, and are sent by, the clerks for the next week. There is no reason why you should have all the rum things to yourself."

So my uncle had the letters for a week, and found them very much as Parker had described them. The suspicious symptoms increased; the Stock Exchange responded more sensitively than ever; but not the slightest ground for suspecting any one transpired. My uncle was bewildered, and Parker was rapidly verging to insanity.

"It is certainly not the clerks," said my uncle. "There is no treason there," said he, pushing back the letters of the day. "By the way, how does young Beaumont get on? She seems a nice creature, that sister of his, to judge by her letters."

"He is the best hand in the office, a long sight; and his sister is a very sweet, ladylike creature. They are orphans, poor things, and he supports her out of his salary. She called at the office two months ago, and I gave him leave to see her for a few minutes in my room. But he knew it was against rules, and has not seen her here again."

"But what are we to do?" said my uncle. "I think I will speak to the First Lord."

So he spoke to the First Lord, who thought the affair serious enough.

"It must be in the letters," said he.

"It cannot be in the letters," said my uncle.

"As you please," said the chief; "but, although you cannot find it there, perhaps another can. I would try an expert.

My uncle had no faith in experts, or Bow street runners, and mistrusted them. But he could not refuse to try the experiment suggested. So the most experienced decipherer in London was summoned into council, and to him the letters of the day were secretly submitted.

He read them all very carefully, looked at them in the light, and looked at the light through them. At last he put them all aside, excepting one from Elinor Beaumont.

"Who is the lady that writes this?" said the taciturn man of skill at last.

"A very sweet young woman," said Parker, smartly; "sister of my private secretary."

"Does she write often?"

"Yes; she is his only correspondent, and writes about twice a week."

"Where does she live?"

"She lives in Jersey, Beaumont told me. Their father was in business there."

"And does she always write about the same kind of things—aunt's rheumatism, picnics, Squire's tea-parties, and the like?"

"Much the same, excepting when she speaks of Beaumont himself."

"Hum!" said the expert.

"Well, sir," said my uncle, who was rather impatient of the man of skill's pomposity, "and what may 'Hum!' mean? Have the young woman and her aunt's rheumatism done the mischief?"

"Hum! She dates from Fleet street?"

"And why should she not date from Fleet street, sir?"

"I should be sorry to prevent her," said the unmoved philosopher. "Has this correspondence continued long?"

"Oh, yes—a couple of years or so, but not nearly so regularly as lately."

"For how long regularly?"

"About two months."

"That is, about the time when you first suspected the betrayal of confidence?"

"Really, my friend, if you can't see farther into a millstone than that, you may give up the profession," said my uncle. "Take my word for it, the Beaumonts have nothing to do with it. Rubbish!"

"Hum!" And with that the man of skill took his hat and departed, saying he would return in two days. The two days, however, were five before he came back, and was again closeted with my uncle and Parker, with whom he had fallen into great disfavor.

"Wants to make a job," said the latter—"a regular humbug."

"Sir George," said the regular humbug, "has Mr. Beaumont a locked desk in his room?"

"Yes, sir," said Parker, "he has."

"Have you a key which will open it?"

"I have; and what of that?"

"I wish to have that desk opened without his knowledge, and the contents brought to me."

"And on what pretense," said my uncle, "do you propose to put this insult on a man against whom there is no reasonable ground of suspicion, and who has not been allowed to speak for himself?"

"There need be no insult, for he will know nothing of it; neither will any one else."

"I will not permit it, sir."

"Hum! Then I can do no more in the business."

"But," said Parker, whose official notions made him unwilling to break off the negotiations in this manner, "what pretense have you for doing this to Mr. Beaumont, and not to the other clerks?"

"Shall I tell you? There is no such person as Elinor Beaumont, and the address in Fleet street is a notorious haunt of suspected foreigners."

"Good gracious!" said my uncle, changing color, "you don't say that?"

"It is a fact, but you will see the necessity of being cautious and silent in the matter. Detection hangs on a thread as it stands, and a whisper will break it."

"What do you mean," said Parker, "about Elinor Beaumont? I have seen her."

"There is no Elinor Beaumont in Jersey. I sent and have ascertained the fact."

"I am sure there is some mistake about all this, which Beaumont can clear up. Let us send for him."

"If you do the game is up. I trust, in fact, he does not know of my visit. We cannot be too cautious in these matters."

"Pedantic ass," muttered my uncle; "but I suppose we had better give him his own way. If you meet Parker and me here at 7 to-night, we shall have that wonderful desk opened, and your great discoveries shall be made."

They met again that evening. The desk was opened by Parker, and a bundle of letters carefully packed up, all from Elinor Beaumont, and a quantity of circulars, play-bills and shop receipts were handed to the expert.

That gentleman read through the letters, and seemed much struck by the last.

"Read that," said he, handing it to my uncle. As the letter is important, I give it entire:

120 FLEET STREET, Sept. 24, 1803.

MY DEAR CHARLES: Although we had an adverse wind all the way, we made without difficulty the port we were bound for. My aunt, in spite of the weight of her 80 years, enjoyed the trip much, and is ready to sail again. I hope you will think of sending the line you promised on the 25th, and come yourself, as our party is much smaller, and we should enjoy the visit.

When I was in London last week I saw our Cousin Harry, fresh from Windsor. There is little change to be observed in him—not so much as you would expect. Come to us on Friday.

Yours, very affectionately, ELINOR B.

My uncle read this out loud, from beginning to end, and then he said, "Do you see anything suspicious in that? It seems to me very innocent."

"Hum! It may be. Was there anything else in the desk?" said he, addressing Parker.

"You may go and look," growled that potentate; and he led the way, the expert following.

The desk was quite empty, with the exception of two or three scraps of waste paper. On one of these the expert pounced, and returned with an air of elation to the other room. He then unfolded this scrap of paper, and disclosed a half-sheet exactly the size of the paper on which Elinor Beaumont's letters were written, in which oblong holes at intervals had been cut.

He then placed this half-sheet over the letter, and handed both, thus placed, to my uncle, whose astonished eyes read the following words, which the holes left visible:

"Fleet wind-bound. Fifty sail of the line, 25 smaller. Should the wind change, expect us on Friday."

"The devil!" said my uncle; "and Nelson ordered off to the West Indies."

Then was there, as you may suppose, hurrying and scurrying, and running and chasing, and dispatching of Government couriers, and semphore telegraphs, and carrier-pigeons, and all the Old World means of communication then in fashion. The key thus obtained disclosed the whole correspondence, which turned out to be a series of letters from the French Government, smuggled into Jersey. The result history knows; the intended invasion was abandoned, and Napoleon went elsewhere.

"But what put you on the scent?" asked my uncle afterward, with many apologies to the expert.

"I suspected the trick from the first, although it was a very good specimen of it. The letters were too innocent, and had too little point in them. But they were done with admirable skill. The grammar was complete; and the little dots or marks which bunglers use to guide them in writing the words which are to be read were entirely absent. The way in which the deception is effected is this: The correspondents, before commencing, take a sheet of paper and cut holes in it, which, of course, in the two half-sheets, exactly correspond. They each take one half-sheet, and, when a letter is to be written, the writer so arranges the words that those intended to be read shall appear in the holes when the half-sheet is placed over the paper, which is of the same size. When his correspondent receives the letter, he places his half-sheet over it, and reads off the words, as you did. The difficulty, which was so well conquered in this case, is to make the sense run fluently, and to prevent any visible break in the writing. Without the half-sheet with the holes in it, no one can have the slightest clew to the real meaning.

"My suspicions, once aroused, were confirmed by the inquiries which I made. The whole story about the sister was a fabrication. The letters did come from Jersey, the answers went to Fleet street, to the charge of very notorious foreign agents. But, if our friend had not been fool enough to leave his half-sheet in his desk, we might have groped in vain for the mystery."

Beaumont disappeared that night, and was never heard of again at the Admiralty. It transpired afterward that some accomplice had warned him of the expert's visits to the Admiralty, and his inquiries in Jersey. He had made an attempt to get admittance to his room, but was scared by the sounds he heard, and contrived to escape to France. The lady who acted the sister, and who visited the Admiralty, partly to put the authorities off their guard, and probably also to interchange the key to the cipher, was a Parisian celebrity who both before and afterward was renowned for her daring in political intrigue.

The Shakers.

That very singular body of persons, commonly known as Shakers—their proper name is the United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing—is said to have materially increased since 1870, and to number now nearly 12,000. This is remarkable, inasmuch as, believing and rigidly adhering to celibacy, they can recruit their ranks only by external accretion. They have eighteen separate settlements (the sect is entirely confined to the United States), of which there are 2 in Maine, 2 in New Hampshire, 4 in Massachusetts, 1 in Connecticut, 3 in New York, 4 in Ohio, and 2 in Kentucky. They now believe the kingdom of heaven has been established; that Christ has come upon earth a second time in the form of Mother Ann (Ann Lee, an Englishwoman, born in Manchester, was the founder of the sect, having emigrated thence with a small band of disciples shortly before the Revolutionary war), and that the personal reign of God has been restored.

A NEW copper paint is made in Paris from porous copper deposited by the galvanic battery mixed with a varnish. The solvent of the varnish is benzine. The copper is very pure and is easily pulverized, and, when mixed with the benzine varnish, may be applied to iron, brass, plaster or wood. When mixed with oils, the copper acquires an antique green hue.

BLASTING by electricity, one of the latest practical developments of science, is generally utilized. The advantages are great saving of explosive, safety and protection of life, economy of capital and time, and overcoming obstacles that nothing else will, such as firing under any quantity of water, sinking or driving in soft sandstone, granite splitting, rooting up trees, blasting slag, etc.

MAJ. R. STUART writes from Port au Prince, describing an unknown narcotic plant which produces coma of any intensity or duration, or even death itself. The knowledge of the plant is confined to a few families, and is used by miracle-workers and priests to inspire their votaries with awe and dread. These knowing its properties and just how long its influence remains, make a show of restoring the dead to life at the proper moment. Maj. Stuart thinks it might be discovered by experienced botanists, and that the plant would prove a valuable acquisition to medical science as an anæsthetic.

PROBABLY the most unexceptionable explanation of the cause of the ascent of the sap in plants has been that advanced by M. Joseph Boehm. Evaporation having deprived the surface cells of a plant of some of their moisture, the pressure of the air forces them to contract. But these cells are elastic, and have, therefore, a tendency to return to their original shape. In reassuming their form they must absorb either air or water. Their moisture obstructs the entrance of air, and the greater moisture of the nearest cells is drawn upon. The latter, by similar osmotic action, make good their loss by a draught upon the next series of cells, and this is continued throughout the whole cellular structure down to the roots.

DR. FAVRE, consulting physician of the Paris-Lyons-Mediterranean railroad, has arrived at the conclusion that color-blindness may arise from blows or wounds on the head, and the abuse of tobacco and spirits. He, therefore, recommends that the working staff of railroads should undergo a periodical examination to decide their competency. There then arises the question, how can it be determined when an employe is threatened with the loss of his right perception of color, inasmuch as color-blindness may come on suddenly. The plan suggested to obviate this is to attach to locomotives a frame containing pieces of red and green glass, with the color inscribed over them, through which the driver can look.

IN his late work on the physics of volcanoes, Dr. Reyer, of Vienna, has applied the fact that various substances in a state of fusion have a capacity for absorbing gases, and the hypothesis that beneath the crust of the earth there is a highly-heated crude mass of substances—in such a way as to give a very satisfactory explanation of volcanic phenomena generally, and to throw light upon the formation of granite, porphyritic and vitreous rocks. The heated magma, through infiltration, becomes charged with liquid and gaseous materials, and develops all the successive phases of volcanic action. If Reyer's position is found to be unassailable, the old method of basing the classification of igneous rocks upon their geological age must be abandoned.

Effects of the Sutro Tunnel.

A reduction in the temperature of the 2,000-foot level of the Savage mine from 120 degrees to 94 degrees, since the Sutro tunnel penetrated that mine, is now reported, and the cooling process is still going on. If the air-draught through the tunnel into the mines can reduce the temperature 26 degrees, in so short a time, at a depth of 350 feet below the level of the tunnel, there is reasonable prospect that it will ultimately have a like good effect upon many other mines put, or to be put, in connection with the tunnel. Men can work, without danger of collapse, at a temperature no higher than 94 degrees, and thousands of miners have done good work in the gulches at 110 degrees, but, at 120 degrees, it is impossible for any man, however strong, to work more than a few minutes without rest. If the Sutro tunnel should bring about a like change in the temperature of the Comstock mines generally, with that already realized in the Savage 2,000-foot level, it will be the means not only of making mining more profitable, but of saving a very great waste of life and health attendant hitherto upon that sort of labor.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Cost of the Late War to Russia.

The campaign against Turkey cost Russia enormously, and the figures could advantageously be used by the Peace Society to bolster up its arguments against all war. In concrete form the St. Petersburg Exchange Gazette gives the disbursements as follows:

"The cost of the campaign has been enormous. In November, 1876, we concluded three domestic loans for 350,000,000 paper rubles (a ruble is 73.3 cents), and one foreign loan for 93,750,000 silver rubles, or 125,000,000 paper rubles. In addition to this, 285,000,000 rubles were advanced by the Imperial Bank; the aggregate sum of the cost amounting to at least 800,000,000 rubles. Reckoning the expense of the return march at 50,000,000 rubles, we have a grand total of 850,000,000 rubles, which will take 45,000,000 rubles a year in interest and sinking fund. Now, as the outlay occasioned by the imperial debt is given at 128,000,000 a year in the budget for 1677, it follows that the war has raised our debt nearly one-half."

A New Subscriber.

We got a new subscriber Wednesday. When we answered his knock at the door, he sidled in, took off his hat, and asked:

"Is dis de newspaper shop?"

We told him it was.

"An' is you de hed fo'erman ob de wuks?"

We satisfied our colored visitor on that point also, and he continued,

"I totch in some 'bacca to-day, an' I promised Ebahneezah—dat's my oldes' chile—I promised dat boy I'd prescribe for a paper. I s'pose we orter curridge de chile's dispensity. How d'ye sell yo' papers?"

"Dollar and a half a year."

"All de same price?"

"Yes."

"Let me obsarve one, ef you please, sah."

We handed him a paper, and he unfolded it, upside down, scanning it critically on both sides.

"Looks like dar war a sight o' letterin' in dat. I done forgot my spectacles dis mornin', an' I can't perzactly tell if it's de—de 'Merican language."

We assured him that it was.

"In de Democratic or Republican branch, sah?"

"Republican."

"Dat's de kine ob a book Ebahneezah gradjurated in, an' I s'pose dis paper 'ud suit him. Dollah a half a yeah, you say, sah! How much is dat a month?"

"About a bit."

"I'se not de man to min' expense whar de propah eddication ob my chillun is consarned. I hol' dat it's ebbery pusson's duty to cultivate his outspring to de 'stent of his ableness. Prescribe de name ob Ebahneezah Snow on yo' books. Dat's it. Ef you'd just put a few picters in Eb's paper it 'ud please de chillun mightily. Here's 6 cents, sah. Send de paper 'long, an' if it gibs sassefaction I'll come in an' prescribe foh a full month. Good mornin'!"—Texas Intelligencer.

How Popular Songs Are Written.

Dexter Smith had written a number of clever verses which he carried to his publisher. That gentleman, after glancing them over, handed them back, with the following doubtful criticism: "These are very good, Mr. Smith—too good, in fact. Yes, they are too good for me. Use them in the Atlantic, or some such place. What I want just now is something after this pattern," and he read to the astonished writer some selections from several of the popular ballads. Smith was disgusted. "It surely can't be possible," said he, "that the public wants such miserable stuff as this." "It is not only possible, but true." "Then I don't wonder that mine is too good for your use. Good-day!" And the young composer half angrily strode out of the office, reflecting upon the degeneracy of the public mind. He was going along one of the narrow Boston streets, absorbed in his thoughts, when he heard a dirty little urchin yell to his mother, "Sa-ay, mam! put me in my little bed!" There was his subject! And, going home, filled with a determination to write the most unutterable mess of dreariness he could think of, he composed the song which has since made him famous. His little joke was well received, and its reputation spread until the sales reached an enormous figure. In this connection let me give you the number of copies sold of a few of the best-known publications of this kind: "Put Me in My Little Bed," by Dexter Smith, 250,000; "Mollie Darling," by Will S. Hays, 40,000; "Silver Threads Among the Gold," by Danks (who is very popular), 75,000; "Come Home, Father," 50,000; "Evangeline," 25,000; "Tramp, Tramp," 100,000; "Norah O'Neill," 100,000; "Sweet Genevieve," 20,000. Many of these still sell steadily, and will doubtless continue to do so for a number of years. Songs written to suit the times frequently reach immense sales, and, as in book publications, those which appear the weakest are not infrequently the most successful.

A Miserly Millionaire.

Michael Reese, the California millionaire who recently died at Wallenstein, Germany, was reputed to be the richest Jew in the United States, and, with the exception of Senator Sharon, the largest real-estate owner in California; he was also a great miser and very eccentric. He brought $30,000 to this country in 1835, and for fifteen years was a noted Richmond (Va.) slaveholder and speculator, heavy losses driving him to the Pacific coast in 1850. He saw what was to be California's future and invested his all in land, which he would only sell at fancy prices and then to immediately invest the proceeds in more land. Note and stock brokerage helped to swell his growing pile, which early gave him a millionaire's reputation, and was increased by his being among the first and very successful bonanza speculators. Mr. Reese was so miserly that to gratify his enormous appetite, when dining with a friend, he would ask for the bread left on his friend's plate, to spare the expense of ordering more. The only time he was ever known to treat any one was when he invited his lawyer, Mr. Felton, and six friends to a sumptuous dinner at a restaurant, against whose keeper he could obtain a judgment in no other way. He replied one day, to a friend who taunted him with his miserly habits, "Well, I can't help it; I know it's foolish, but it's a disease I've got." In matters not connected with money, Mr. Reese was a man of intelligence and liberal views, though he was afraid of women as old Mr. Weller of "vidders," especially after a jury gave a San Francisco woman of doubtful reputation $5,000 in a breach-of-promise case against him. The millionaire left all or nearly all his wealth to Jewish charities, as is believed, his only known relatives in this country being two wealthy sisters in Chicago, Mrs. Rosenfeld and Mrs. Rosenberg, and Nephew Frank, a well-to-do St. Louis merchant.

AN IDYL OF THE LONG AGO.

BY W. W. MALOTT.

Beneath the stars of June,
I hear the same old tune
That filled my heart in former years
But time has left the power
To soothe this gloomy hour,
And [illegible] but solely in my ears.

The lips that breath'd it then,
Long time have silent been,
Pressed by the cold and chilling sod;
But in a brighter sphere
We hear, or seem to hear,
Her hymning praises sweet to God.

That old familiar song!
How many memories throng
To burden sore my saddened heart
But [illegible]
What once it was to me,
Ere hope did from my life depart.

The rainbow hues of life
With fond affection rife
[illegible]
Through which we strive in vain
[illegible]
To sound the [illegible] of the years.
[illegible]
[illegible]
When life was one sweet, [illegible] dream
And Youth with portals ope,
Revealing Love and Hope,
Was whelmed in Time's [illegible] stream.

So 'neath the stars of June,
I listen to the tune
That brings to memory joys now fled;
My heart with grief is stirred
At each familiar word
Once breathed by lips early dead.

A VERMONT CENTENARIAN.

Extraordinary Family Longevity—A Woman's Death at the Age of 105.

[From the Burlington Free Press and Times.]

The death of Mrs. Phebe Haley, which occurred recently at North Pownal, and which has been referred to in this paper, ended a marvelously long life. She was born in Pownal, June 3, 1774, and consequently reached the 105th year of her existence. All those years she has lived in the one town, county and State. Her maiden name was Cummings. At the age of 16, in the year 1790, she professed religion, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has ever since remained a steadfast member of that denomination. At the time she became identified with the church, as will be readily imagined, the society was in a very crude condition in the Green Mountain State. When 17 years old she married Benjamin Haley. It is also singular that both should have endured so remarkably long, and neither, in such an exceptionally long life, married again. The husband died only 14 years ago, and was upward of 90 years old. This presents the phenomenon of an unbroken married companionship extending over seventy-three years, and almost reaching three-quarters of a century. Mr. Haley seems to have been a physical wonder, because he is described as always addicted to drinking since youth, and was accustomed to indulging in all sorts of dissipations, besides possessing a very ugly temperament. There were fifteen children born to the couple, of whom ten are now living, named Ruth, James, Eunice, Lucinda, Reuben, Henry, Josiah, Sabrina, Nelson, and Thomas. Nearly all the boys are intemperate, yet some of them seem likely to attain a great age, and three have already passed fourscore. Thus it will be seen that Mrs. Haley's domestic life must have been replete with vexations and tribulations, while drudging along with a dissolute husband and a batch of almost a dozen unruly boys. Despite all that, she succeeded in retaining her faculties to an astonishing degree, so to the last she could thread a fine needle without glasses, and her hearing was not at all impaired. Her face was plump, without any sign of wrinkles thereon. Many of her grandchildren looked older than she did at her 104th birthday. The direct living descendants of Mrs. Haley extend through five generations, reaching through the children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, great-great-grandchildren, and great-great-great-grandchildren. Three of her own children died from old age. None of this wonderfully-numerous and long-lived family ever amounted to anything noteworthy in an intellectual sense. Their only success in this life seemed to consist of a wonderful vitality that enabled them to attain old age, but their brain power appears to have been absorbed by toughened muscles. This will account for the death of the mother in the County Almshouse, because when her old age compelled reliance on others, of all the ten living children, none were capable of offering her a home, and she was forced on the populace. Some of the children live at Pownal now, others in North Adams, and others still out West.

He Got Even.

Last evening a tall, raw-boned, hungry-looking man, wearing the garb of a countryman, stepped up to the office of the Grand Hotel, and, after "rastling" with the register, on which he scrawled "R. Townsend, Newport, Ky.," he accosted Clerk Schuyler, and "reckoned he'd take a bite of supper," throwing down a dollar on the counter. The money was raked in by Schuyler, who said:

"You'll find the dining-room on the first floor. Just go up three flights of steps."

The stranger hesitated. He glanced at the place where the $1 was put; then he looked hard at the clerk, as if waiting for something.

"Right up stairs, sir," said the clerk.

"But ah—well, don't I git any change back?"

"Change?"

"Yes. That's a dollar bill I give you."

"Of course. That's all right. That's the regular charge for supper."

"A dollar for supper? Well, hell!"

And then Mr. Townsend broke for that supper-room with a strange light in his eye and a look of firm determination in his face. Sitting down to the table, he wrapped his cowhide boots around the legs of the table and sailed in. He scooped the grub in with both hands, and kept it up for full half an hour. Those sitting around were soon attracted by the novel sight, and one matter-of-fact guest, thinking the man was eating on a wager, kept tally, and this was what he checked off on a bill of fare: Two cups of coffee, 3 plates plain bread, 2 plates fried mush, 1 plate corn beef, 1 plate chicken, 1 plate cold ham, 2 plates loin of veal, 2 plates broiled beef, 3 plates broiled ham, 4 plates fresh fish, 3 plates fried eggs, 2 plates fried potatoes, 1 plate baked potatoes.

The man who "scored" during his epigastric feat then took the record to Schuyler, who, after enjoying a hearty laugh at the expense of the hotel, figured on it, with restaurant prices as a basis, and found that his Newport friend had got away with just $4.05 worth.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Famine in Northern China.

The horrors of the Chinese famine are impossible to describe, and happily inconceivable to American minds. At a recent meeting in Dublin, Sir Thomas Wade, British Minister to China, said that five provinces, covering an area of 395,000 square miles, with a population of over 120,000,000 (three times that of all the United States), have been so stricken with drought that the ordinary sources of food have been almost entirely dried, reducing to a state of starvation not less than 15,000,000 people. Not long since the Christian Union published a letter from China, in which it was stated, on the authority of the Governor of Shansi, that the number already starved and frozen was estimated at 6,000,000. Whole villages had been depopulated; dogs and fowls and every living thing but crows and carrion birds were dead. "The London estimate that 7,000,000 have perished is no exaggeration, but those actually waiting for death by starvation, more or less prompt, are still 10,000,000, perhaps, of whom relief will be too tardy to save perhaps 2,000,000; while, if the rains are denied in Shansi, Honan, and Shensi again this spring, nothing but foreign or divine interposition will save 10,000,000 people from death."

Substantially the same testimony is borne by a gentleman holding an official position in Peking, in a letter to the Boston Journal. The sale of children and kindred for food has been going on for some time, and cannibalism has been largely resorted to. Had the drought occurred in Southern China there would be less difficulty in relieving the famine, owing to the abundance of water communication. In the north, however, there are no such means for meeting the emergency, there being only earth roads, and those indifferent.

Steam on Common Roads.

Two years ago the Legislature of Wisconsin offered a prize of $10,000 for a successful road motor, propelled by steam or otherwise, to be used as a substitute for draught cattle on common roads, and for ordinary agricultural work, as in plowing, threshing, etc. The test of success was to be the performance of a journey of at least 200 miles on the common roads of the State at an average rate of five miles an hour, working time. It was also stipulated that the machine should be so constructed as to run in the ordinary wagon track, to be able to run backward and turn out of the road for the passage of other vehicles, and to be able to overcome a grade of at least 200 feet to the mile. A board of three Commissioners, including Mr. G. M. Marshall, the member to whom the passage of the law was chiefly due, was appointed by the Governor to witness the prescribed test, and such others as they might suggest.

The effect of the law has clearly been to stimulate in a marked degree the inventors of the State, seeing that at a competitive trial appointed July 15 two Wisconsin machines were entered, and others from Milwaukee and Madison had been offered, but failed to appear at the advertised time for starting.

The competing machines were the "Oshkosh," invented by Schomer & Farrand, of Oshkosh, and the "Green Bay," owned by Cowles Brothers, of East Green Bay. The latter proved the more speedy for short distances, but broke down so often that it was practically out of the race. The "Oshkosh" made the trip from Fort Howard to Madison—201 miles—in thirty-three hours and twenty-seven minutes, thus beating the prescribed time over six and a half hours. Over the sand hills between Waupun and Watertown the machine is said to have traversed thirty-two miles in a little over four hours. Another quick run was made between Watertown and Fort Atkinson—twenty-one miles—in two hours and ten minutes. Most of the distance traveled is said to have been through heavy sand and gravel. The engineers report no breakages on the trip, no scaring of teams, and not a bridge plank disturbed. Throughout the trip the machine hauled a wagon weighing 3,500 pounds. While on exhibition at Oshkosh this load was increased by about five tons of green lumber. The machine alone weighs 4,800 pounds, with water and fuel, 6,600 pounds.

The advantages to be gained by the adaptation of steam to ordinary road traction are enormous, and the behavior of the "Oshkosh" shows that practical success in this direction is not far off. The wisdom of the Wisconsin Legislature in offering the bounty needs no better demonstration. The result is pretty sure to be one, perhaps several, practical motors, which must add greatly to the industrial power and wealth not only of Wisconsin, but of the world.

The Commissioners report that the "Oshkosh" not only made the prescribed trip of 200 miles within the time allowed, but also hauled loads, plowed, and otherwise accomplished in a successful manner every test mentioned in the law or suggested by the commission. They are not satisfied, however, that the machine is, in the spirit of the law, "a cheap and practical substitute for the use of horses and other animals on the highways and farms." They find it unquestionably of great advantage in plowing, thrashing, and heavy hauling from farm to farm, and on the highways, but it costs $1,000, and requires a daily expenditure of from $2 to $6 to run it. Consequently the Commissioners decline to give it the prize offered by the Legislature, though they propose that the Legislature shall make a proper award for what has already been accomplished. Seeing that nearly three years remain before the time of the Legislative offer expires, there would seem to be still a sufficient opportunity for inventors to win the prize, and, as a matter of course, the larger fortune which surely awaits the creator of a practical motor for common roads.—Scientific American.

A Bulgarian Outrage.

Three Jewish refugees returned to Haskoi and entered the shop of a Bulgarian baker to buy bread. He refused to sell them any, saying, "For you I have no bread; be off as fast as you can, for we do not want Jews." One of the Jews having remonstrated with the baker, they were taken before the Judge, likewise a Bulgarian, who sentenced the remonstrating Jew to receive 100 blows and a month's imprisonment. Ultimately, however, he reduced the blows to twenty-five, and the imprisonment to one day, and finished by banishing the unfortunate man for life from his native place. The baker got off scot-free.

A Lover Who Kept His Word.

John Sasser, a young man living near Cairo, Ga., called on his lady love, Miss Johnson, and remained until a pretty late hour at night. Before leaving, he requested her to meet him at 4 o'clock p. m. the next day, at a certain place designated by him. He told her if she did not come he would kill himself there. She supposed his words were mere idle bravado, and did not go. Parties visiting the spot, shortly after the time appointed, found him there dead—shot through the heart with a rifle ball. The rifle was lying near him.

Benjamin Fisher, of Vergennes, Vt., while shaving before the mirror, discovered a large spider on his shoulder. Misled by the reflection in the glass, in trying to brush it off he cut an artery and bled to death.

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

Shall We Have Narrow-Gauge Freight Lines?

In Scribner's Monthly for September, Mr. S. D. Dillaye discusses the transportation question in detail in advocacy of a narrow-gauge "pure freight" line, to be built and controlled by the Government. The following paragraphs will show the drift of his argument:

The question, "How shall we cheapen transportation?" is one of paramount importance. I propose to answer it. The profits on agriculture and on manufactured articles constitute, to a great extent, national wealth; these profits depend largely upon the cost of transportation. Lord Bacon says that a fertile soil, busy workshops, and cheap transportation constitute the immediate means of the wealth of a people. Transportation is now dear; it should be cheap. It is obstructed by monopolies; it should be open to all. It is subject to conditions which double its cost, from which it should be relieved.

Railroad transportation is cumbersome, inefficient, and needlessly expensive. It demands power it cannot utilize, doubling its cost. It makes the carrying of passengers its primary, and freight its secondary object, at the expense of the products of the land. It is inefficient, because its roadways, its engines and cars are so constructed, owing to the width of gauge, as to require four tons of dead weight to carry one ton of freight, and needless expense in structure, sacrificed by the force it is compelled to support; a system is practical which can be made to carry two and eight-tenths tons of freight to one ton of dead weight, and in the same ratio diminishing wear and tear. It is needlessly expensive, for the present system costs 40 per cent. more for roadway, and a third more for operating expenses, while it can do little more than a third the work the less expensive system can perform.

These assertions need proofs. I proceed to offer them. The railroads between the Mississippi valley and the Atlantic, except the New York Central and portions of the Pennsylvania, have been built, equipped, and are worked upon a theory which has been demonstrated to be unfit for freight transportation. The gauges all run from four feet eight inches to five feet six inches, and six feet. The war of the gauges has resulted in the victory of the narrow gauges. In the mountains of Wales slate mines invited capital. Easy and cheap transportation were essential to profit. Thirteen miles separated Festiniog, the place of the mines, from Port Modoc, the seaport for shipping. The route was mountainous and difficult. Festiniog is 700 feet above Port Modoc. The route had to be scooped out of mountain-sides, while ravines continually intercepted the way and had to be crossed by wall works and stone embankments. So crooked was the route that its line was almost a continual repetition of the letter S. Its curves were so sharp that a moderately-long train would be on three curves at the same time. These obstacles were in the way of cheap transportation. In 1839 a horse tramway was constructed with a two-feet gauge, and a sixteen-pound rail, which in a few years was replaced by a thirty-pound rail, and the track was adapted to steam-engines. After eighteen years' use, the thirty-pound rails were replaced by forty-eight pound rails. The original capital stock of the road was £36,000. The earnings expended in construction increased the capital to £86,000, making the cost $30,000 per mile. It pays 29¼ per cent. on its original, and 12¼ on its present, capital. It is worked with the Fairlie engine, and is the most successful railway in England. This statement raises the question, Why is it that this narrow-gauge road has always paid large dividends, when nearly every wide-gauge in Great Britain has failed to pay? In answering this I shall demonstrate that narrow-gauge roads are essential to cheap transportation. I shall proceed to proofs by showing first, saving in construction; second, in equipment; third, in dead weight; fourth, in increased relative power to carry freight; fifth, decrease in wear and tear; sixth, decrease in running expenses. Establishing these positions, I shall proceed to inquire, seventh, can a pure freight road be made to pay? Eighth, how should such a road be operated? Finally, I shall show the demand for cheap transportation, and compare the relative ability of our water means of transport with that of narrow-gauge roads.

Invention of the Phonograph.

While experimenting on an automatic transmitter in the early part of last winter, Mr. Edison tried tin-foil, instead of paper, to receive the indentations of the Morse recorder, and was surprised to see how readily it received them. These indentations, passing under another needle, were to repeat the message automatically to another wire. A few days after, while handling a telephone, the fancy seized him to fix a needle-point to a diaphragm and see whether the vibration of the diaphragm when spoken against would cause the needle to prick his finger. It did. Then he wondered what sort of an indentation this would make in a slip of paper. He tried it, and, sure enough, there was the semblance of an indented track! What would be the effect of drawing this slip under the point again, following the work of the automatic transmitter? He tried that, and the result was one which almost made him wild. A sound like the stifled cry of words seeking birth came from the diaphragm. No sleep or food until he had made a grooved cylinder, put a piece of tin-foil instead of paper on it, attached the diaphragm and shouted into it, when, upon turning the crank, the words came back with a marvelous elocution, and the phonograph was a success.—Popular Science Monthly for August.

Colored Photographs.

No one has yet succeeded in producing photographs in the natural colors, although the list of those who have attacked the problem and failed is unusually long. The court photographer of Vienna has, however, made some practical steps in that direction. His process is said to depend upon analyzing light into the primary colors, red, blue and yellow, taking a photograph by each and then combining the result in the printing. A plate is first chemically prepared so as to receive only the yellow tints of the object to be depicted, and a negative of this plate is put under the press, the cylinder of which is covered with yellow paint, so that in this impression nothing but the yellow parts of the object are printed off. A similar process is then adopted with the other two colors, and after three separate impressions the picture is complete. The system, however, does not sound very promising, and is certainly the reverse of simple.

Birds in the Air, and the Air in Birds.

The chief peculiarity of birds is their power of flight, and, although there are a few birds which do not fly, most of them do, and the various organs of their bodies are all constructed in such a way as to fit them for a life in the air. Their bodies are very solid and compact, in order that most of their weight shall be near the place where the wings are attached. The feet, legs, head and neck are light, and so arranged that they may be drawn up close to the body while the bird is flying. As the neck is long and very flexible, the body does not need to be pliant, as with most creatures having backbones; but it is important that the wings should have a firm support, so the bones of the back are united. The body of a bird must also be well protected from the cold; for, as it ascends and descends through the air, it passes through regions of very different temperatures, and it must be provided with a thick and warm covering in order to be able to endure these sudden changes, and one also which shall be very light and able to shed the water; for, otherwise, a bird would be unable to fly. The feathers of a bird answer to all these needs, and are so placed upon the body that they form a smooth surface which does not catch against the air when the bird is passing through it. In its rapid ascents and descents, the bird is exposed to another danger even greater than the sudden changes of temperature. You all know that air presses in every direction with great force, and that we do not feel it because there is air in all parts of our bodies as well as outside them, and the pressure of the air inside exactly balances that of the outside air. If we should suddenly take away the outside air in any way, such as covering a person up with an air-pump receiver, and quickly and completely exhausting the air, the consequences of the inside pressure would be very terrible, and, if the experiment could be tried quickly enough, the body would burst like an exploding-gun, with a loud noise.

When people go up rapidly in a balloon or climb very high mountains, they are troubled by a ringing noise and a feeling of great pressure in the ears and head, and by palpitation of the heart, bleeding at the nose, and fainting. These unpleasant and often dangerous symptoms are caused by the expansion of the air inside their bodies. In ascending very high mountains it is necessary to go very slowly and to stop very often, to give time for some of the expanded air to escape and equalize the pressure again. Now, many birds—the condor, for example—fly over the tops of the highest mountains, and nearly all birds, either occasionally or habitually, ascend to very great altitudes, and, unless there were some plan for regulating the pressure of the air inside their bodies, they would suffer great inconvenience, and even pain and danger. But they are provided with an arrangement by which the air within them can escape easily as it expands, and thus keep the pressure within just equal to that outside, so that they can ascend and descend as rapidly as they wish, without feeling the least inconvenience. In the body of the bird there are several large bags, like the lungs, called air chambers; many of their bones are hollow, and others are pierced with long, winding tubes called air tubes. All these air chambers and air tubes are connected with the lungs so that air can pass into and out of them at each breath. The connection between these chambers and the lungs is so complete that a wounded hawk can breathe through a broken wing almost as well as through its mouth. When a bird mounts upward, the air inside its body gradually expands, but the bird does not feel any inconvenience; for, at each breath, part of the air passes from the air chambers into the lungs, so that the pressure on the inside does not become greater than that on the outside.—St. Nicholas for September.

A Strange Hallucination.

A woman named Delehanty, residing on Canal street, whose husband has been sick for a long time, walked into police headquarters yesterday afternoon, accompanied by her little daughter, and addressed Chief Maloy as follows: "Chief, I have come to give myself up." "What do you want to give yourself up for?" inquired the Chief. "I've murdered my two little children, a boy and a girl, and, Chief, I can't stand it any longer; I must give myself up." The little girl burst into tears, and, clinging to her mother, said: "Why, no, you didn't kill us; ain't I here, mamma?" Then, turning to the Chief, the little one begged him not to believe her mother's story, as she had killed no one. "I tell you I did, Chief," said the mother; "they came in the woodshed while I was washing, and I killed them." "You did not," said the Chief, rather sternly; "there's your little girl now." "That's not my little girl, that's her ghost," persisted the mother; "I did kill them." It being evident that she was insane, the Chief ordered her to be detained at the Second Precinct, until her relatives could be communicated with. Her mania is supposed to be caused by starvation.—Albany Journal.

A prize fight between women took place at Cobridge, near Hanley, Eng., a few weeks ago. They were both married and with families. They tied up their hair and a ring was formed, each woman having her partisans. Teeth as well as fists were freely used, and, after three rounds, one of the wretches was severely bitten and retired.

A Tried Remedy for Biliousness.

Those who suffer from disorder or inaction of the liver will never get the upper hand of the unruly organ so long as they use such irrational remedies as blue pill, calomel and podophyllin. But from the tried and popular medicine, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, they may expect relief with a certainty of obtaining it. The influence of the bitters upon the great biliary gland is direct, powerful and speedily felt. The relief afforded is not spasmodic, but complete and permanent. The sallowness of the skin, furred appearance of the tongue, indigestion, costiveness, headache, nausea, pains through the right side and shoulder, in fact every accompaniment of the obstinate complaint are entirely and promptly removed by a course of this inestimable medicine, in behalf of which testimony is constantly emanating from every quarter and from all classes of society.

Extraordinary Enterprise.

The proprietors of the Western Steam Tobacco Works at Milwaukee, Wis., Messrs. B. Leidersdorf and Henry M. Mendel, have displayed energy and business capacity in the renewal of their great manufacturing business, destroyed by fire July 9, rarely witnessed even in these progressive business times. Within fifteen days after the fire they had established an entire new manufactory for the production of their famous brands of tobacco—such as "Sweet Owen," "Empire" and "Old Abe" fine-cut chewing, and "Nigger Hair" and "Rob Roy" smoking tobaccos—at their temporary factory on East Water street. Their present machinery is all new and of the latest patterns, thus enabling them to turn out even better goods than ever before. The pluck and energy displayed by Messrs. Leidersdorf & Mendel, in thus renewing their great business so soon, is something that makes us feel proud of as indicating the character of the business men of this country. Few firms could have so soon recuperated from a great disaster and be again running a mammoth business within fifteen days. The firm deserves great credit for its enterprise. Success to the energetic firm of B. Leidersdorf & Co.—Chicago Times.

To Housekeepers.

The attention of heads of families is respectfully invited to the superior quality, in every respect, of Dooley's Yeast Powder. It is entirely free from adulteration of any kind, and every package contains absolute full weight. Consumers should bear in mind the fact that a strictly pure, full-weight baking powder, although it costs a little more than the adulterated, cheap, light-weight or bulk powders, is by far the cheapest, both in purse and health.

Voluntary assertion should be considered as grand evidence of the merits of a remedy. Below is what one person thinks of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a cure for Heart Disease:

Sirs: Will you please send me a bottle of Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR by express. I see you have it advertised in the Times, and I can say it is the best remedy for the heart ever offered to the public.

Public Speaking!

Auburn, Wednesday, Sept. 11th, 1878,

HON. J. G. SHANKLIN,

Democratic candidate for Secretary of State, will speak in German at the Court House at 7 o'clock P. M.

WATERLOO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 19,
At 2 o'clock P. M.

HON. D. W. VOORHEES.

Hon. John B. Stoll,

Democratic candidate for Congress in this district, will address the citizens of DeKalb county at the following places:

BUTLER, Thursday, Sept. 5th, in the evening.

SPENCERVILLE, Friday, Sept. 6th, in the evening.

CORUNNA, Saturday, Sept. 7th, in the afternoon.

GARRETT, Saturday, Sept. 7th, in the evening.

S. M. HENCH, of Fort Wayne,

—AND—

D. D. MOODY, of Auburn,

Will address the citizens on the present political issues at JACKSON CENTER, Thursday evening, Sept. 12th.

BUTLER CENTER, Friday evening, Sept. 13th.

Hon. John B. Stoll, Democratic candidate for Congress in this district, will make four speeches in this county this week. At Butler, Thursday evening; Spencerville, Friday evening; Corunna, Saturday afternoon and at Garrett, Saturday evening. His speech in Garrett will be either in English or German as the citizens desire. The Democrats at each of the places named should make an effort to get out a big crowd.

The Democratic county ticket is gaining ground every day. Democrats should not cease to work because we have a majority, but continue the good work and see how large we can make that majority by a united effort for every Democratic candidate before the people for any state or county office.

Now that Democratic principles have triumphed to such an extent as to place the control of the government within our reach, let us press onward in the aggressive without halting to cavil about minor issues that can be satisfactorily settled after success shall have crowned our efforts.

A leading greenbacker intimated to us, the other day, that it began to look as though his party was willing to sacrifice their entire county ticket to secure the success of one man.—Press.

And did he give you the name of that "one man?"

The Republican says: "It must be remembered that the Auditor is the chairman of the Commissioner's Court, and unless he be an efficient business man who is capable of anticipating results, the county may be made to pay thousands of dollars with but little benefit."

The writer of the above ought to post up a little before undertaking to explain the duties of Auditor.

We desire every Democrat, every Republican and every Greenback man in this county to carefully read the Democratic State Platform which appears on the first page of this paper, read well the principles therein set forth, and compare the doctrines advocated by the Indiana Democracy with those of the Republican and National parties, and when the time comes to vote, cast your ballots for the candidates that endorse the principles of the great Democratic party of Indiana.

The Democrats of Garrett are wide-awake and full of business, all that is necessary to get up a crowd for a Democratic speaker is simply to make an announcement upon the street and in a little less than no time every democrat in town will be on hand. When Gov. Williams and Judge Gooding spoke there a short time since, the people knew nothing of their coming until the carriage containing the speakers drove into town about dusk, and yet the hall was crowded to overflowing before time for speaking to commence. That is the kind of enthusiasm we like to see, it tells when election time comes round.

The Courier, of last week, seriously objected to a late article in the Butler Record, advising voters to cast their ballots for the most competent and best man for the county offices. Evidently the Courier construed this into an underhanded way of supporting the Republican ticket. If the Record was always as sound as it was in this instance it would meet general approval.—Press.

"Evidently the COURIER" did not construe the article in the Record to be any such thing. If independent (?) voters were looking "for the most competent and best men for county offices," they would find them on the Democratic ticket. The Press pretends to be a party organ and should not be ashamed to acknowledge it, and whenever its editor concludes to support and vote for any other than a straight-haired Republican, his commendation of the Record will be received with some degree of honesty.

What unanimity of thought there must be among the publishers of Republican papers throughout Indiana. It is remarkable how apt they are to conceive of some brilliant idea simultaneously. Last week they all with one accord proceeded to execute a very quiet, shrewd (?) sagacious (?) attempt at strategy by circulating as a supplement, a sheet prepared at the Indianapolis Journal office, and furnished to Republican offices for circulation FREE, in which an attempt is made to pedigree Dan. Voorhees, and give a full and complete history of his life from a radical stand-point. From the date of his first appearance in public until the present time he seems to have been a terror to the Radical party. His history, as written by that party and circulated in supplement form, is intended to impress upon the minds of the people that Daniel has been a traitor since his conception, that he even rebelled against nature in his formation, such a theory at least would not be more unreasonable than the argument presented in the supplement in question which is a batch of bosh from beginning to end, and only shows how hard pressed the Radical party is for campaign material. The leaders of the Radical party have no principles to advocate, the drift of public sentiment is against them, their followers are leaving them as rats leave a sinking ship, and they are forced to make a personal fight against the leaders of the Democratic party, therefore the bitter attack upon the private and public career of Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees.

—Richard Dudley has the champion thresher in south western DeKalb, and Dick knows how to handle the boss machine.

—Friday Sept. 6th is the day set apart by the greenbackers of Swan-tp., and vicinity, for a general mass meeting, to be held at Swan, a number of noted speakers will be present to enlighten the voters of Noble and DeKalb Co's.

—We are authorized to state that any person or persons who are hereafter detected forging orders or in any felonious manner endeavor to intercept letters addressed to J. J. Strafford, shall be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

—Dr. Shephard, of "Dutch Ridge," is no more, "gone to that bourn" in the mysterious realm beyond the silent river. Let his faults lie buried with his ashes, and remember that "to offend is human, to forgive divine."

—The trial between Saltus, plaintiff, and J. J. Strafford, defendant, has been postponed indefinitely, much to the regret of the pharisaical plaintiff, who thought he had a good thing on the poor Publican. "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."

—Considerable biliousness prevails through this community, but that won't help the Republican party this time. We all may be sick, but not sick enough to vote the bondholders ticket, a greenback dollar will do us more good than a pound of Republican physics, pshaw, give us wholesome labor and less tax, and our biliousness will be seen no more forever.

—Last Saturday night this vicinity was visited by a rain storm, the like of which has not been seen or is within the recolection of the oldest inhabitant—for five hours without intermission it continued to pour until the earth was as it were again visited by another deluge. Bridges without number were carried away by the flood, and roads left impassable. The Ell River R. R. was washed in places to such an extent that it took the united effort of many of the employes nearly all day to repair, so that the trains could again pass over the road.

SONNY.

SEDAN, IND., Aug 27, 1878.

An interesting temperance meeting was held in this place last Saturday evening. The meeting was addressed by Wm. Urie, Esq., of Waterloo. The speaker very logically demonstrated the effect of alcohol on the human system. In fact it was an able argument in favor of temperance and reform. G. M. Crane and N. McIntyre also made able speeches in the advocacy of the temperance cause, after which the meeting adjourned to meet again one week from date.

DeLong deceased has filed a petition to sell the real estate of the decedent, the personal being insufficient to pay her debts, and that said petition will be heard at the next term of the DeKalb Circuit Court.

Attest: GEO. H. K. MOSS, Clerk.
B. D. HARRIS, Deputy.
Aug. 16th, 1878.

Notice to Contractors.

NOTICE is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received at the Auditor's office in Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, until 12 o'clock M. of the 4th day of September, 1878, for the construction of a bridge across Cedar Creek, near J. C. St. Clair's sawmill, in section fifteen in Union township, in said county and State, said bridge to consist of one span 100 feet in length and to be of the Howe Truss plan. Also the piling for said bridge across said Cedar Creek.

Plans and specifications for said bridge can be seen at the Auditor's office of said county. All bids must be accompanied with a good and sufficient bond payable to the State of Indiana, signed by at least two resident freeholders sureties, as required by law.

Comissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids. By Order of COMMISSIONERS.

ISAAC HAGUE, Auditor.

vs. } Divorce.
Henry N. Ernest. }

Now comes the plaintiff by her attorneys and files her complaint herein, together with an affidavit that said defendant, Henry N. Ernest is not a resident of the State of Indiana.

Notice is therefore given said defendant, that unless he appear on the 13th day of the next term of the DeKalb Circuit Court, to be holden on the 4th Monday of September, A. D. 1878, at the Court House in Auburn, in said county and State, and answer or demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in his absence.

Witness, my name and the seal of said Court affixed at Auburn, this 10th day of August, 1878.

GEO. H. K. MOSS, Clerk.
33-4w. B. D. HARRIS, Deputy.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein John J. Kinney is plaintiff, and Perry Blodget et ux is defendants, requiring me to make the sum of one thousand, eight hundred and seventy-eight dollars and thirty two cents, ($1878.32) with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, SEPT. 7th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to wit:

The south half of the south east quarter of section twenty-three, (23), township thirty-four, (34), north of range thirteen, (13), east, containing eighty (80), acres, in DeKalb county, Indiana.

And if such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief what ever from valuation or appraisement laws.

J. C. St. CLAIR, Sheriff.
By THOS. D. GROSS, Deputy.
J. A. Woodhull, Attorney for plaintiff.

DRY GOODS, CLOTHING,
HATS & CAPS, GROCERIES.
TO THE FRONT ONCE MORE!

Sending glad tidings to all. High-priced merchants grumble, but the poor are made glad by the news.

$10,000 STOCK of Dry Goods, Clothing, Hats and Caps, Groceries, all bought under the pressure of the great financial embarrassment in the east, that forces wholesalers to turn merchandise into money regardless of loss to themselves. These goods are to be sold at the very lowest possible prices, as our motto is "live and let live."

TO SELL CHEAP GOODS They must be bought cheap. As we handle immense quantities of goods each year and buy them direct from the manufactories, we save the Jobber's profit.

DRY GOODS. In our dry goods department we have all kinds of staple and fancy goods, such as dress goods, muslins, prints, shirtings and jeans. We have the best assortment that can be found in the county.

CLOTHING! CLOTHING! In this department we call especial attention to the styles and prices. We have on hand $5,000 worth of ready-made clothing for fall and winter wear. Suits from $4.00 up to the finest of broadcloth and trecots. Don't fail to call on us when you want anything in this line, if you want to save money, as we have no rents nor clerks to pay, we can sell you clothing from 10 to 15 per cent. less than any other house in the county.

GROCERIES. In our grocery department we have a full supply of staple goods, all at hard-time prices. Remember that we buy our goods on a cash basis, and in order to sell goods low we must sell for cash.

Thanking the public for their generous patronage in the past, we solicit a continuance of the same. By close buying and selling, we hope to convince the people of DeKalb and surrounding counties that Auburn is the place to do their trading. Come to town and get our prices and they will convince you that you can save at least 15 per cent by buying of the only genuine cheap store in town.

Accident.

Mr. John Picker, while placing a keg of beer in the cooler at Locke's saloon last evening allowed the keg to slip from his hands and fall upon one of his toes, crushing the same so as to necessitate amputation, which was performed by Drs. Casebeer and Spooner.

Lecture.

On about Sept. 27, the Rev. Langdon Sanders will deliver a lecture in this place, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the purchase of a set of encyclopedias for the schools. Nothing need be said here concerning the well established reputation of Mr. Sanders as a lecturer. All who feel an interest in the welfare of the schools will be called upon to give their patronage to the enterprise.

Old Settlers Meeting.

We hope the residents of this county will not forget the meeting to be held at Auburn on the 12th of this month, to perfect an Old Settler's Organization. Adjoining counties have been organized for some time, and we learn from them that the occasions of their meetings are pleasant and profitable. Let all attend and start the ball in motion. Mr. N. Prentiss, an old settler of Noble county will be in attendance to address the meeting.

Another checker player has been added to the list in castle St. Clair. Sigmond Mosher, who in company with James Ducher, entered the house of Geo. Draggoo while he (Draggoo) was in the insane asylum, about the 8th of last February, and appropriated to their own use carpenter tools, apple butter, carpet rags, leaf tobacco, &c., was arrested a few days ago by Constable Hopkins in Whitley county, west of Columbia City, and brought back to this place and placed in jail with his companion Ducher to await trial.

The general appearance of things in the west and north part of town last Sunday morning, had a tendency to remind Bible readers of the little freshet in Noah's time. The incessant rains of the night before which commenced about 11 o'clock and continued to pour down in torrents until 7 o'clock Sunday morning, had so covered the ground as to have the appearance of a lake, many persons being compelled to wade through deep water to reach the street. Some damage was done to the new stone culvert on North Main street, otherwise we have heard of no serious damages. The ditches as a general thing have not capacity enough to carry that amount of water from the surface.

We were present at the exercises of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society at the M. E. church last Sabbath evening. This being the first undertaking in that direction in this place, the affair was certainly creditable to those taking part. The programme consisted of reading of the scriptures, prayer, music, select reading, essays, &c., all of which were rendered with great credit to those to whom the various duties had been assigned. We wish to mention particularly an essay prepared and read by Mrs. Enos Casebeer as being one of the most scholarly and entertaining features of the entertainment. The ladies have made a good start and should have the encouragement of the citizens.

Joseph L. Morlan died at his residence in this place at 11:30 P. M., on Friday, August 23, 1878, in the 45th year of his age. He had been in very poor health for several months, and had returned from a trip to Colorado only a few weeks before his death, where he had gone in the vain hope that his health might be benefitted. Mr. Morlan was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, where he grew up to manhood, in the latter years of his residence in Ohio teaching school and studying law.—About the year 1859 he removed to LaGrange, Ind., where he acted for some time as deputy county clerk. During the rebellion, for some time, acted in a clarical capacity in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court and in the Governor's office at Indianapolis, in the mean-time keeping up his study of the law. While he resided at LaGrange, he was married to Jennie, daughter and only child of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Askey, now residents of this place. Five children were born to this marriage, and the mother now survives the head of the family. After leaving Indianapolis, Mr. Morlan resided temporarily for a short time in Fort Wayne and LaGrange, but located in Waterloo just after the close of the war, where he has ever since resided. By his industry and good management, he had accumulated besides a comfortable home, other property, the amount of which cannot now be estimated. For two terms he held the office of Prosecuting Attorney, in the old Common Pleas Court, and discharged its duties to the satisfaction of the public. The very large attendance, at the funeral services on Sunday, was a testimony to the loss the community had suffered in his death.—Waterloo Press.

George Hazzard

Hazarded his reputation by hazarding his fortune in a hazardous enterprise, in which his hazardry was detrimental to the business interests of Auburn, in as much as her financial men were hazardised through their hazardousness in a hazardable manner by Hazzard the hazarder, who is now regarded as hazardously coursing criminal prosecution.

When the rumors of villainy on the part of Hazzard were first whispered in this community, we concluded for the sake of the victims of misplaced confidence, to say nothing in reference to Hazzard until such time as our citizens might secure an adjustment of the claims for which they were liable, which Hazzard promised from time to time to arrange satisfactorily. This he has not done, and the few friends he had have forsaken him and concluded that the whole transaction was a premeditated swindle upon his part. He not only made false representations here at home for the purpose of defrauding his neighbors, but has proven himself an expert in confidence games among some of the sharpest business men of New York, Chicago, Toledo, Indianapolis, and elsewhere. Since leaving here he was arrested in Chicago for fraud, on an affidavit from this place he was released on bail and is now at large in search of some other unsuspecting locality wherein to gain the confidence of the citizens and palm himself off as a "man of money." There is in every community citizens who stand ready to accommodate with money and endorsements those who make a show of wealth, no questions being asked about honor; Auburn is not an exception; we venture the assertion that a poor but HONEST, HARDWORKING man might have went begging before a majority of these same endorsers would have loaned him a nickel or given him the least encouragement. Men who prefer to accommodate an unmitigated rascal because he is supposed to be rich, in preference to poor men who are known to be honest, are not to be pittied except by persons of a similar nature.

It is due to the First National Bank of Auburn to say that Hazzard is in no way connected with the institution financially or otherwise.

Horrible Drowning Affair.

[Col. City Post.]

On Wednesday afternoon, August 21, Mr. Halderman, at the Halderman mill on the bank of Loon Lake, desiring a hired girl, a young man in his employ—Joe Nickinson—offered to go that afternoon and get one if Mr. Halderman would allow his time, which he readily consented to do. When Nickinson started he said if he did not succeed in getting a girl that afternoon he would not return until he did. He went immediately to Mr. Hill's, about three-fourths of a mile north east of Loon Lake, and secured the services of Miss Katie Hill, and started back a little before dark, going in a boat through Loon Lake, thence through the outlet of Loon Lake into Old Lake. When near the latter a dog commenced a terrific barking. The owner arose from bed and went out to ascertain the cause, and heard a woman screaming and a man trying to pacify her, and thinking no more of it went back to bed. This was about nine o'clock. Nothing more was thought of the matter, Miss Hill's folks thinking Katie was to work at Halderman's, and Halderman's thinking Nickinson had not got a girl, or had gone somewhere else. On Friday afternoon some boys out fishing discovered the boat that it was known the unfortunate persons had used. In it was found Nickinson's coat and a paper of tobacco. Search was immediately begun, and they were found on Saturday evening about twenty-five or thirty feet from the outlet of the lake, where the water was from ten to twelve feet deep, both lying together. There were no marks of violence on either of them. They were buried on Sunday. How this unfortunate affair came about will likely never be known.

P. S.—Since writing the above we learn that Mr. Nickinson and Miss Hill had at one time been engaged to be married, but owing to the dissolute character of her suitor, Miss Hill had rejected his suit several times. Still persisting in pressing his attentions the relations between the two were not of the most amicable character. The readers of The Post can draw their own conclusions as to whether the drowning was accidental or otherwise.

President Hayes and suite passed through Auburn about 12 o'clock Monday night over the Baltimore & Ohio railroad for Chicago. Tom. Mays says he went down to meet him and rather expected he would stop off, and be a guest of the town. Owing to pressing engagements at Chicago and other points he could not do so, but promised he would call again. The train stopped a few minutes for the party to get a good look at the Junction, and the President sadly said he would never forget the scene. Owing to a heavy moon the street lamps were not lighted, but all that was to be seen was plainly visible. In a conversation with Rutherford, on the balcony of the hotel, Tom. says he wept when he heard of Hazzard and his ructions here, and that he would keep a bright look-out for him while in Chicago, as he might get a chance to go his bail. After an introduction to Colonel Whittington, he departed, and as the train steamed away he saw a banner on the rear end on which was inscribed, "Going to meet Hazzard."

Tom Mays had $500 to lose in the First National Bank in Auburn, and Tom has been a newspaper man all his life! Isn't the amount overestimated?—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

Yes. It was only $400, and it was through the rascality of Hazzard, and not the bank, that he lost it.

GARRETT.

EDITOR COURIER.—Being a reader of your valuable paper and not seeing any items from here, I thought I would send you a few notes this week, on the condition of affairs in Garrett.

—I would first state there has been quite a number of changes here lately. The "Garrett Bank," which was one of our leading enterprises, is no more—where it went to we cannot exactly say—the last we saw or heard of it was the large safe moving down one of our streets a few weeks ago about 8 o'clock in the morning, and we understand that the cashier, who under false pretense, got some over two hundred dollars of road money belonging to the town, has gone to Mt. Vernon, Ohio, to take charge of a pea-nut stand.

—The citizens of our town had the pleasure last Monday evening of being addressed by Gov. Williams and Hon. D. S. Gooding. The call was made rather unexpected to most of our citizens, but when the news was circulated through our town that these gentlemen were going to deliver an address, a goodly number of our citizens were gathered together to see and hear these distinguished gentlemen. The majority of our citizens were well pleased with the sound and undeniable facts as presented by the Governor, and which were followed by an eloquent address by the Hon. D. S. Gooding, in which he showed up how the people of our country have been robbed by corrupt legislation done by the republican party while in power, in favor of the bond holder and capitalist. To men of ordinary intelligence his stand points seemed to be well taken and proven. But such was not the case with our learned "sage" and experienced "critic" the editor of the Garrett Herald, a paper noted for its brilliant editorials. This illiterate philosopher who is looking after the hopeless interests of the republican party in this section, in commenting on the address delivered by Gov. Williams, this leader of the lost cause in Garrett makes the following remark:

"He courted the prejudice and not the intelligence of his audience and therefore the plain statement of facts were not required."

"Honored Sage" you have not produced any facts yourself—rake your philosophical brains, if you have any, and inform us what the facts are. But how is this:

"Gov. Williams, in speaking of the amount of taxes each individual would be assessed, to raise funds to build a State House, laughingly remarked—"Why gentleman, it is but a trifle—one cent on a hundred dollars. It will be but ten cents on $1,000—only one drink of whisky less. On $2,000, two drinks, and so on. That is acknowledging the "corn"—juice, and would be an excellent way for tipplers to liquidate other public and private debts."

The less you have to say about liquidating private debts, "Old Sage," the better. Any further comment is unnecessary.

We will next turn our attention to this:

"Gooding's 'side show' was well patronized on Monday evening, and 'Blue Jeans' was exhibited to the delight and satisfaction of all."

But "Old Philos." you have made no mention of a queer creature which occupied a front seat among the audience and to the south side of the hall, whose genology would have puzzled Darwyn himself, and the Governor, no doubt, took for one of the missing "Links" that we hear so much said about.

Then here is another:

"'You, granger, pay those national banks 22 per cent. for the use of money' remarked Gooding in his speech at this place Monday evening. The law has established the rate of interest at 10 per cent., on demand, and as soon as national banks charge more than that rate and the government is advised of the fact, their charters are taken from them. Will Gooding please stick two pins here?"

Why, old man, the weight of your body pressing on your brains must have affected your hearing and confused your ideas. Mr. Gooding in those remarks was explaining how the national bankers draw interest on the bonds in gold and again on the greenback which the bonds secured, and which they lend out to the granger at exhorbitant rates. The statement must have been too complicated for your reasoning faculties, but, however, we will not hold you responsible for this mistake, considering the compressed condition your brains were in at the time. This learned and skilled editor in trying to show the people how well he is versed in the congressional globe, published a supplement to his "mouth piece" of August 29th, 1878, all of which is devoted to a direct attack on the public and private character of Daniel W. Voorhees. Time and space will not admit us to dwell very long on this subject, therefore we will conclude by saying to this prejudiced, turncoated ignoramus, who was an original secesh and who publicly boasts that he voted for John C. Brackenridge, that if he is as well posted in the Congressional Globe as he pretends, he must certainly know that Daniel W. Voorhees' and Abraham Lincoln's views were about the same, and for his enlightenment and benefit we would advise him to get some person to read the 94th page of the Congressional Globe of 1848, where he will find in a speech by Mr. Lincoln the following language: "Any people anywhere being inclined, and having the power, have the right to rise up and shake off the existing government and form a new one that suits them better." This is a most valuable and sacred right, a right which we hope and believe is to liberate the world; nor is this right confined to cases in which the whole people of an existing government may choose to exercise it. Any portion of such people that can may revolutionize and make their own of so much of the territory as they inhabit. More than this, a majority of any portion of such people may revolutionize, putting down a minority intermingled with, or near about them, who may oppose their movements. Such minority was precisely the case of the Tories of our own revolution. It is a quality of revolutions not to go by old lines or old laws, but to break up both and make new ones." Stick three pins here, Search the Congressional Globe again and get up another supplement. Can you find stronger secesh language than the above? Go post yourself and don't be making an "ass" of yourself by trying to assail the character of men behind their backs, to whom you could not open your ignorant lips when they confronted you, or go and make an honest living by digging potatoes and husking corn or something you are capable of doing.

A PIN STICKER.

THE BIGEST THING ON RECORD.

Having bought what is known as the New York Store, Auburn, Ind., at a bankrupt sale and at figures that will guarantee to me a profit, I now offer the entire stock consisting of dry goods, clothing, carpets, hats, caps, trunks, valices, notions, etc., at bankrupt prices at prices far below original cost. Wishing to close this immense stock of goods out within the next thirty days, I will offer them at prices that will astonish you. Come one, come all, come everybody, come early while bargains can be obtained.

Yours &c.,

36-4w. JOHN A. COTTMAN.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

AT Hartford, Ct., last week, the celebrated horse Rarus trotted for a special purse of $1,500, of which $1,000 were for three straight heats under 2:15, and $500 for beating 2:14. Both moneys were taken, and although he didn't beat his best time, he showed second and third heats in 2:13¼ and 2:13¾, and an average of 2:14 for three heats, which surpassed any record heretofore made.

THE sloop-yacht Zephyr, with a fishing and shooting party from New York city on board, was capsized in Sheepshead bay, and four of them, including the Captain, were drowned.

THE WEST.

INFORMATION has been received at Portland, Ore., concerning fresh Indian troubles on the Columbia river. A number of settlers are reported to have been killed, and other disasters are apprehended. Gen. Howard is going after the hostiles, with a considerable force of regulars.

CHICAGO elevators contain 840,898 bushels of wheat, 3,373,898 bushels of corn, 787,700 bushels of oats, 140,709 bushels of rye and 295,949 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 5,318,329 bushels, against 2,234,424 bushels at this period last year.... A fearful hail, rain and wind storm visited Fargo and Moorhead, Dakota Territory, a few evenings ago. Stones as large as hen's-eggs fell, smashing all the windows on the north and west sides of the houses. Every unfinished frame building in Fargo was blown down and the roofs off a dozen buildings. In Moorhead a child was killed by a hailstone, and several houses laid out. Loaded cars were blown from the track. ...A Cheyenne dispatch says: "The party of seventeen who started in pursuit of the would-be train-robbers reached the canon, twelve miles north of Percy station, yesterday evening, where they found traces of a sharp fight. No bodies were found at this place, but, after following a trail up the canon and out in the bed of a dry creek, the bodies of the two men, Widdowfield and Vincent, were found half covered up with stones and dirt. Widdowfield had been shot twice in the neck, while his companion received four balls through his body."

A BOLD operation by highwaymen is reported from Concordia, Lafayette county, Mo. Three highwaymen entered the principal bank of the town about mid-day, and, with cocked revolvers pointed at his head, compelled the cashier to keep quiet while they proceeded to gather in the contents of the vaults. They secured about $4,000 in currency, leaving some $8,000 in silver, and rode off in a southerly direction.... After a vacation of several weeks, Manager McVicker, of Chicago, has once more opened his own theater, for the season of 1879. The attraction selected for commencing the season was last winter's greatest New York success, "Diplomacy," a play pronounced by the critics the strongest in plot and incident of the large number brought out that year. Wallack's New York combination, strengthened by several of McVicker's new company, appear in the caste, and the result is one of the most enjoyable entertainments ever given at that popular house.

THE SOUTH.

TWO BROTHERS, John and Neill Locklear, and Pompey Easterling, their negro confederate, were hanged at Bennettsville, S. C., Aug. 23, for the murder of Frank Bryce, an Irish peddler, in February last. The Locklears were half-breed desperadoes, and formerly belonged to the notorious North Carolina Lowery gang.

REPORTS from the plague-ridden sections of the South up to Aug. 24 show the fever to be still on the increase, with no early prospect of abatement. A New Orleans dispatch says "the disease is manifest in every portion of the city, though the Creole section in the old city is most exempt. One-quarter of the deaths are of the destitute in the public institutions. Destitute sick are hourly found by the police, and sent to the Charity Hospital. The disease is spreading all over the southern section of the State. Physicians have no hope of staying the disease, which must run its course. There will be a daily increase probably for some weeks, except radically cold weather intervenes." At Vicksburg the situation is represented as truly appalling: "The fever is rapidly increasing, and there is no telling where the destruction of life will end. There are at this time full 600 persons down with it. The colored population are suffering terribly. Already whole families have been swept away, leaving not one, not even the child in arms. Words cannot express the intense suffering in some of the localities in our city." A Memphis dispatch reports that city "almost deserted of white people, and every possible effort at depopulation is being made. At the camp of the Government tents, the poor are being supported gratuitously."

THERE was a pitched battle in Overton county, Tenn., the other day, between a posse of internal-revenue officers and a band of illicit distillers. Over 100 shots were fired, and three of the revenue men were wounded. The casualties on the side of the moonshiners were not ascertained.

YELLOW fever bulletin, Aug. 26: Memphis—New cases, 100; deaths, 26. It is a sad and dreadful outlook, as awful as a doomed city ever was forced to contemplate. The fever breaks out in a new spot almost every hour, and the death rate runs up. To a stranger the utter desolation of the situation could not be realized. New Orleans—New cases, 125; deaths, 44; The disease is extremely malignant. In the town of Plaquemine, below Baton Rouge, there are new cases every hour, almost invariably resulting in black vomit and death. Grenada—Fifteen deaths in twenty-four hours, and the epidemic still raging. Only ten active men in the place. Physicians and nurses completely exhausted. Vicksburg—Death-rate and suffering on the increase. New cases in the twenty-four hours, 105; deaths, 25.

THE yellow-fever reports from the South, on the 29th ult., were not encouraging. At Memphis the plague had become more violent. But 3,000 white people were left in the city. New cases, 119; deaths, 58. The physicians were completely worn out, and were resting, while friends of the sick were searching in vain for medical attendants. At New Orleans the death rate was steadily advancing; deaths for the preceding twenty-four hours, 57. At Vicksburg a larger number of new cases were reported than on any previous day, though the mortality was not so great. Canton, Miss., which had a population of 3,500 when the plague appeared, was almost completely deserted; not a single business house open except two drug stores; the Court House was locked up, all the officials having fled the town; nothing but hearses and coffins were to be seen in the streets. Grenada, Miss., reported twenty-two deaths in the preceding twenty-four hours. With the exception of physicians and nurses nearly every living soul in the town was down with the plague. At Port Gibson, Miss., the fever was extremely malignant, and showed no abatement.

ADVICES from Nashville, Tenn., report that Collector Woodcock, of that district, has been prosecuting such a vigorous war against illicit distillers that many of the "moonshiners" have made overtures to United States Commissioner Mather, proposing to execute bonds for appearance at the next term of court, with the understanding that a reasonable fine shall be imposed, with a promise that they will hereafter observe the law. This offer will probably be accepted.

A DISPATCH from Austin, Texas, says a squad of State troops under Capt. Pays encountered a large body of Indians from the Fort Stanton Reservation at Water Hole, about forty miles northwest of El Paso. The rangers were forced to retreat on account of the overwhelming force of Indians, losing one man, and the Indians seven.

THE PRESIDENTIAL INVESTIGATION.

MAJ. E. A. BURKE was recalled before the Potter committee on Aug. 22, and questioned at length by Gen. Butler, with a view of gaining further information in regard to the alleged "bargain" between the friends of Hayes and Nicholls. Nothing of importance was elicited, however. The witness, in answer to a question, said he was assured positively by Stanley Matthews that Senator Morton would sustain the President in withdrawing the troops from Louisiana. Butler inquired if he was able to "rope in" any other Republican statesman, to which Burke replied that he understood that every one of them acquiesced. Many questions were propounded by Butler to the witness with a view of finding out why South Carolina was demanded as well as Louisiana, and what was guaranteed in return by South Carolina for overturning the Chamberlain Government. Witness told Gen. Butler to ask the Hon. Henry C. Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, who was representing South Carolina at the Wormley conference.... W. E. Horne announced himself ready to appear before the committee and testify, Gov. Young, of Ohio, having telegraphed to the committee that Horne, so far as he (Young) was concerned, was at liberty to tell all he knows.

J. R. ALCEE-GOUTHREAUX, of New Orleans, who had charge of the Registration Bureau in 1874, testified before the Potter committee Aug. 24. He said that his bureau ascertained that the number of fraudulent registrations in New Orleans amounted to 13,000, and affidavits had been made against 4,400. The witness said that many of the Republican supervisors and registrars were non-residents, fugitives from justice, and in several cases were under indictment. The witness said that he had a conversation with Justice Dibble, who made the remark that he and Burke "were foolish to work for the Democracy, for if they had a majority of 20,000 they would be counted out by the Returning Board."....Richard B. Edgeworth, Captain of Police, New Orleans, and Supervisor of Election, handed in the following, among other letters:

HEADQ'RS OF REPUBLICAN PARTY OF LA.,
NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 25, 1876.
R. B. Edgeworth, Esq., Supervisor of Registration,
Parish of Plaquemines, La.

DEAR SIR: It is well known to this committee, from an examination of the census of 1875, that the Republican vote in your parish is 3,000, and the Republican majority 2,200. You are expected to register and vote the full strength of the Republican party in your parish. Your recognition by the next State administration will depend upon your doing your full duty in the premises, and you will not be held to have done your full duty unless the Republican registration in your parish reaches 3,000, and the Republican vote is at least 3,000. All local candidates and committees are directed to aid you to the utmost in obtaining the results called for herein, without fail. Once obtained, your recognition will be ample and generous. Very respectfully your obedient servant,

D. J. M. A. JEWETT, Secretary.

....James B. Kelly, of New Orleans, testified to seeing Eliza Pinkston taken from her home on Granier street to the Republican Investigating Committee, and she walked down the steps unaided....The committee then adjourned, subject to the call of the Chairman.

GENERAL.

AT a meeting of the railroad managers at Saratoga, N. Y., the other day, a resolution was adopted looking to the immediate establishment of a pooling arrangement which shall include all the trunk lines leading from the seaboard to the West, with a view to maintaining uniform rates and an equitable division of the business.

A PROMINENT New York newspaper is authority for the statement that the Sherman-Anderson letter, the document which it was said was given by Secretary Sherman to the witness, James E. Anderson, of Louisiana, has been found, and is now either in the hands or under the control of the Potter Committee.

THE Governor of New Mexico has applied to the President for military aid in suppressing disturbances in that Territory which he thinks amount to invasion or insurrection. Marauding bands of Greasers from the Mexican side are in the habit of invading New Mexico, plundering the people, and maintaining a state of war which the Territorial forces are not able to suppress.

WASHINGTON

DENNIS KEARNEY, the labor agitator, called at the White House the other day and had a short conversation with the President, during which he complained bitterly of the unhappy condition of laboring men, depression of business, and general hard times. The President argued the subject in a quiet manner, and is reported as having done all the talking, "giving Kearney very little opportunity to say anything. The President explained that the country had not yet fully recovered from the effects of the great war, but that matters were beginning to adjust themselves to ante-war conditions; that for several years there was an inflated condition of business, with a surplus of money, which many mistook for property, but that now business was getting down to bed-rock, so to speak, and the people were learning again the value of a dollar. He said he thought that all money should have a gold basis, and that resumption would do much to relieve hard times, which he did not think would last much longer."

IT is again reported that Judge Devens desires to relinquish the Attorney Generalship, and that he will do so if he can secure the appointment of United States Judge for the New England circuit, which office has recently been made vacant by the death of Judge Shepley, of Maine.

POLITICAL.

THE Greenbackers of Vermont met in State Convention last week, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, C. C. Martin; Lieutenant Governor, J. W. Currier; Treasurer, Fletcher Tarble....Emerson Etheridge has declined the nomination for Governor of Tennessee, tendered him by the Republicans, and the State Committee will meet Sept. 11 to determine whether to call another State Convention.

IT is stated that Senator Patterson has proposed to the Governor of South Carolina to resign his seat in the Senate if he can be assured of full amnesty and exemption from the present legal movement for his prosecution.

RECENT deaths: Ex-Gov. Padelford, of Rhode Island, at Providence; Horace N. Day, the well-known rubber manufacturer, at Manchester, N. H.; Dr. J. W. Weldon, one of the oldest and best-known turfmen in the country, at Saratoga, N. Y.

GEN. JOE JOHNSTON has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Richmond (Va.) district....The Connecticut State Temperance Convention has made the following nominations: Governor, Jesse G. Baldwin; Lieutenant Governor, George P. Rogers, Jr.; Secretary of State, A. S. Beardsley; Treasurer, W. S. Williams; Comptroller, Edmund Tuttle.

THE Tennessee Greenback Convention, in session at Nashville last week, nominated Judge E. H. East for Governor.

FOREIGN

THE Khedive of Egypt has reorganized his Cabinet, and is maturing a scheme looking to extensive reforms and retrenchments in the civil list....Garibaldi has written a letter, intended to promote agitation against the Germanic Governments, especially Austria. He denounces the Kaiserbund and Bismarck's endeavors to caress his natural ally, the head impostor of the Vatican. He says he finds nothing horrible in the programme of the German Socialists. On the contrary, two of their articles form a part of his life-long convictions.

DR. NOBELING, who attempted the assassination of the Emperor of Germany, is suspected of feigning madness. He will be conveyed to a lunatic asylum and placed under the examination of experts.... A royal marriage has just taken place at Berlin, which may prove of considerable importance from a political point of view, the high contracting parties being the brother of the King of Holland and the daughter of Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, "the Red Prince."... A Rome dispatch says that Lazaretti, the fanatic of Grosseto, who proclaimed himself prophet and King, was killed at the head of 3,000 followers, who first fired upon the gendarmes after they had been ordered to disperse.

THE British Consul at Adrianople reports that the Bulgarians continue to plunder and outrage the Mussulmans. The Greek Archbishop has communicated to the Consul details of the most horrible atrocities.

A VIENNA dispatch says: "there is a momentary cessation of Austrian military operations until the four newly-mobilized divisions have arrived at their destination. In a few days the whole mobilized force, numbering from 120,000 to 130,000 men, will be united, and operations will be prosecuted on a larger scale."

NEWS has been received at Vienna that a division has been sent to the relief of Gen. Szapary, whose army is reported to be in a critical position, being hemmed in on the banks of the Bosna river by a strong force of insurgents.

THE International Money Conference, which recently assembled at Paris, adjourned sine die on the 29th ult. A correspondent, summarizing the general result of the conference, says the existing complications preclude the formation of a monetary union. The English negotiators pronounce the consequences of German demonetization disastrous. Monometalism is advocated by only three small states. The sentiment against the further demonetization of silver is overwhelming. The influence of the conference is deemed important for the future of silver. The European delegates adopted resolutions thanking the United States for bringing about an exchange of opinion on important monetary questions; also stating that, in view of the divergence of opinion manifested, and the impossibility of even states having a double standard in making any engagement in reference to the unlimited mintage of silver, there is no ground for discussing questions of any international ratio.

Diamond Cut Diamond.

A well-to-do undertaker, of San Francisco, owned a small house and lot in a block that was coveted by one of the Pacific coast millionaires, who had built a palace there and wanted all the contiguous land for a garden. He succeeded in getting all except the undertaker's property, which projected into the very heart of his grounds, and which its owner would not part with at what the millionaire considered a fair price. The latter, therefore, erected a high fence, said to be the loftiest in America, inclosing the obstinate undertaker's property on three sides, and depriving it almost entirely of sunshine. The undertaker trained vines to grow up the wooden walls, and stood it coolly for a year or two. Now, at last, his patience has given out. A few weeks ago he had his house removed bodily to another part of the city, and, obstinate as ever, is about to put up a very tower of Babel. The style of the proposed building, it is said, will be plain and substantial for the first five stories, but the remainder of the towering edifice, rising above the fence, will present a commingling of renaissance, Gothic, and Babylonian architecture, surmounted with a section of Chinese pagoda. He declines to say to what uses he proposes putting this remarkable edifice; but it is believed that the first and paramount use will be to torment the hitherto-triumphant millionaire.

Saved by Whisky.

A most extraordinary instance of pluck and endurance, combined with a miraculous escape from a horrible death by suffocation or starvation, recently transpired at Grizzly Flat, near Iowa Hill, Placer county, Cal. An old man, known as "Grizzly" Brown, while at work in his mine, was overwhelmed and buried by a cave of the mine. He was tightly shut in seventy-five yards from daylight, with scarcely a hope that he would be missed and search made, as his mine was quite a distance from any human habitation, without a mouthful of food and only half a bottle of whisky for drink, and no person or thing from which to look for assistance save his pick and shovel, which, fortunately as it proved for him, were buried with him. He began the almost hopeless task of digging himself out. Fortunately the earth proved soft and easy to work in, and, finally, after having been entombed for three days, with nothing to sustain life but the friendly bottle of whisky, he reached the surface, completely exhausted from his long fast, but with strength enough remaining to reach a place where he could get nourishment. Score one for whisky.—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

A Human Body in an Aerolite.

We have grand news, which may well be termed important, if true, and news, too, of another world, by way of Peru. The South Pacific Times (Callao) contains a long account, signed, "A. Serarg, chemist," of his finding an immense aerolite, which he dug into, passing through several layers of mineral substance—described with scientific accuracy—and finally discovering in the center a human body four and one-half feet long, and perfectly preserved. The body is exactly depicted, and is very wonderful, according to the discoverer, who adds that he infers, from the hieroglyphs on a silver plate at the side of the human figure, that he or she came from the planet Mars.

Gen. Washington's Gambling.

Among the relics of the immortal Father of his Country recently purchased by act of Congress from Maj. Lewis, of Virginia, was the ledger, or account book, in which the General used to place all items, no matter how trifling, of his financial affairs. He kept a full record of his losings and winnings at play. One peculiar fact in connection with his gambling, as shown by this ledger, is that he always lost at Fredericksburg, Va. The record of his continual losses at Fredericksburg grew so monotonous that in brackets in the last entry of a loss at this place George wrote the words, "As usual."—Baltimore Gazette.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

The Hewitt Investigation.

Prof. Sumner, Professor of Political and Social Science in Yale College, recently gave his views regarding the labor depression, before the Hewitt committee, sitting in New York. He directed attention to the fact that within the last few years the means of transportation and communication became greater, and by these means over-production was the consequence, and had made a revolution over the whole world. He said that when the Suez canal was first opened goods came much quicker, and caused a glut in the English market—new goods accumulating on each of the old; but this glut had now been overcome. Within the last quarter of a century there had been a great improvement in machinery of all kinds, and, taking the accumulated effect of these machines, they must produce a temporary set-back. There was another factor in causing this depression in labor circles. This effect would reach everybody, for the effect that machinery would have would be to cheapen luxuries, and bring down things to the poor classes which a century ago they never thought of. Machinery had been a great good to the masses, though in cases of individuals and classes it had worked them evil. If the United States had had a free tariff in 1872, the country might have been able to compete with England when the coal and iron trade was being carried on to a great extent. The laborer in the United States, at the present time, is not having as good a time or as good subsistence as the laborer in England. In this country there were twelve people to the mile, and in Belgium there were 460 persons to the mile, and the latter lived fairly. He did not think a revolution would cause a change in this respect.

The people of the whole country since 1873 had been trying to solidify and settle up their accounts. During the last five years many persons had accumulated capital by reducing expenditures. He thought legislation could do nothing for this stagnation in labor. Every person must work along the best way he could. We had heard a great deal lately about over-production. He classed it as disproportionate production. When there was this disproportionate production, witness thought it was due to the protective system. The tariff was greatly to blame for our production of every year being greatly in excess of the demand. The tariff congested the population in some districts to where it would not otherwise have been attracted. The only way to remedy this was the redistribution of the people among the industries of the country. This redistribution was going on under its natural laws. He was not in favor of the Government colonizing lands, but found no fault with private organizations doing so from a spirit of benevolence. The only remedy for the depression of labor was the application of sound doctrines to the case in point. The only way in which the Government could assist the non-capitalist in the accumulation of capital was to give the greatest amount of privileges in using his liberties and energies for production, and by removing the restrictions on trade and leave him free to profit by the fruits of his industry.

William E. Dodge, iron merchant, appeared in his official capacity as President of the National Temperance Society, and claimed that the use of intoxicating liquors was one of the causes of the present condition of the laboring classes. This distress in labor might be relieved to some extent by the modification of the tariff and action of the Government in the matter of resumption of specie payment. He never knew capital to be so abundant as now, but there was great difficulty in using it in business. Another factor in alleviating this distress would be legislation in the matter of the liquor traffic.

Horace White, formerly of the Chicago Tribune, was called by the committee, and stated that he had studied the financial question, and had paid a great deal of attention to it when he was a journalist, and since he retired from journalism. He thought the present commercial crisis is only one of a series that have occurred among nations for the past 200 years, and they have been preceded by rampant speculations. In 1873 he thought speculations in railroads had a great deal to do in causing the depression which existed. There was enormous speculation in lands all over the country. The prices of real estate multiplied beyond anything in the recollection of the witness. The obligations incurred by the building of these railroads and the purchase of real estate caused many parties to become insolvent. The condition of the currency had not increased this state of things, the witness thought. He found that these periods of crisis came upon nations, no matter whether the currency was gold or paper. The speculative era which existed from 1869 to 1873, the witness thought, had something to do with the present condition of affairs. The accumulation of capital acting on the sanguine temperaments of a certain race of people would produce a speculative era. Over-production by machinery had contributed to decrease business, by producing more than there was a demand for, and prices fell accordingly. He did not think that the introduction of machinery had produced this speculative era and the collapse which followed it.

The Cost of a Seat in Parliament.

But while corruption in its coarser forms is now happily confined to certain well-known constituencies in England and Ireland (for both Wales and Scotland have the reputation of being purer in matters of election), the expense of contesting a seat is still considerable, and in some places exorbitant. It is calculated that a general election costs something like £4,000,000, and all this expenditure, except the comparatively inconsiderable sum that comes out of the Tory election-chest, falls upon the candidates. Borough seats cannot be contested except at a cost of from £500 to £5,000 for each candidate. County seats may run up as high as £20,000 per candidate, and no county in the United Kingdom can be fought under £1,000 to each candidate. It would be imagined from these figures that the expense would act as a deterrent, and that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find some 1,200 solid, unimaginative Englishmen willing to throw away so much money upon so little, and it is difficult to persuade men on the Liberal side of politics to engage in contests for county seats. The chances of success are small, as the land-owning and farming classes are rigidly Tory.—London letter.

The Sugar Ring—Enormous Frauds.

Special agents of the Government have for some time been engaged investigating alleged frauds on imported and exported sugars, and have at last succeeded in securing evidence that they exist to an enormous extent. It had come to the knowledge of the department over a year ago that sugars were purposely discolored at the place of manufacture or shipment, by the use of chemicals, the object being to introduce sugar of high grade under the lowest duty. A cargo of sugar was seized in Baltimore some time ago, and the case is now pending in the United States Court, and will come up at the next term.

The evidence which will be adduced is said to be convincing. The frauds which have been established by the investigations just made are the result of passing sugars which should pay 2¼ cents per pound as sugars of the lowest grade, and thus paying on them only 1¾ cents, a difference of half a cent per pound, which would leave an advantage to a dishonest importer of $10 on each hogshead of 2,000 pounds. There are refineries in this country which work up 1,000 hogsheads of raw sugar every working day. The charge is made that there is a combination of firms which manages to evade the payment of the full duty on raw sugars, and that thus they are able to crush out all competition by honest manufacturers. This is shown in the fact that for over two years it has been impossible for sugar refiners in this country to buy raw sugars in our markets and convert them into refined at a profit. It is shown that at least one-half of the sugar refiners in New York and vicinity have either failed or abandoned the business. There is not a refinery now running in Baltimore and Philadelphia, all having been crushed out by a ring of refiners who import their own sugars. Besides these frauds practiced by dishonest importers on the importation of sugars, the evidence has become convincing that enormous frauds are perpetrated in the exportation of what purports to be refined sugar produced from imported raw sugar.—Washington Cor. Chicago Times.

New Hampshire's Tramp Law.

The following are the most important clauses of the law for the suppression of tramps which has been passed by the New Hampshire Legislature:

"Any person going about from place to place, begging, and asking, or subsisting upon charity, shall be taken and deemed to be a tramp, and shall be punished by imprisonment, at hard labor, in the State prison not more than fifteen months.

"Any tramp who shall enter any dwelling-house, or kindle any fire in the highway, or on the land of another without the consent of the owner thereof, or shall be found carrying any firearm or other dangerous weapon, or shall threaten to do any injury to any person, or to the real or personal estate of another, shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor in the State prison not more than two years.

"Any tramp who shall willfully or maliciously do any injury to any person, or to the real or personal estate of another, shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor in the State prison not more than five years.

"Any act of beggary or vagrancy by any person not a resident of this State shall be evidence that the person committing the same is a tramp within the meaning of this act.

"Any person upon a view of any offense described in this act may apprehend the offender and take him before a Justice of the Peace for examination, and on his conviction shall be entitled to a reward of $10 therefor, to be paid by the county.

"This act shall not apply to any female or minor under the age of 17 years, nor to any blind person.

"Upon the passage of this act the Secretary of State shall cause printed copies of this act to be sent to the several town and city clerks, who shall cause the same to be posted up in at least six conspicuous places, three of which shall be on the public highway."

What the Birds Accomplish.

The swallow, swift and night-hawks are the guardians of the atmosphere. They check the increase of insects which otherwise overload it. Woodpeckers, creepers and chickadees are the guardians of the trunks of trees. Warblers and flycatchers protect the foliage. Blackbirds, crows, thrushes and larks protect the surface of the soil. Snipe and woodcock protect the soil under the surface. Each tribe has its respective duties to perform in the economy of nature, and it is an undoubted fact that, if all the birds were swept off the face of the earth, man could not live upon it; vegetation would wither and die; insects would become so numerous that no living thing could withstand their attacks. The wholesale destruction occasioned by grasshoppers, which have lately devastated the West of the United States, is caused by the thinning out of the birds, such as grouse, prairie-hens, etc., which feed upon them. The great and inestimable service done to the farmer, gardener and florist by the birds is only becoming known by sad experience. Spare the birds and save your fruit; the little corn and fruit taken by them is more than compensated by the quantities of noxious insects they destroy. The long-persecuted crow has been found by actual experiment to do far more good by the vast quantities of grubs and insects he devours than the little harm he does in the few grains of corn he pulls up. He is one of the farmer's best friends.

A PECULIAR sort of wheat grown in Lower California will probably be introduced into California, and is expected to improve the grain in the latter place. Its special qualities are freedom from rust, large, plump grains, covered with a long hull or coarse fiber, resembling corn-husk, and its extraordinary yield. It appears to be an entirely different kind of wheat from any ever seen in this country.

EXPORTING THE QUEER.

A Quarter of a Million in Counterfeit Money Sold to German Bankers.

[Washington Cor. New York World.]

The secret service officers of the treasury are searching for the forgers who have recently flooded Austria with $50 and $100 notes, and who, as announced in the World, sold them to bankers, they in turn furnishing them to emigrants coming to this country within the last few months. On one occasion fifty German emigrants were arrested in Pittsburgh, all of whom had counterfeit money which they had brought from Europe. One man had $9,000 in worthless notes, and another $4,000 worth. The emigrants were allowed to depart on surrendering the counterfeit notes, and they were obliged to obtain assistance from the Austrian Consul to continue their journey. The secret service officers have arrested at different times about thirty persons in the West for passing counterfeit money. It is supposed that many emigrants are now hoarding bad money brought from Europe, supposing it to be genuine.

A gang of counterfeiters in this country prepared $250,000 worth of spurious notes over a year ago. From one plate they printed $100 notes on the National Bank of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; the Revere National Bank, of Boston, and the Merchants' National Bank, of New Bedford, and $50 counterfeits were issued on the Pittsfield Bank, of Pittsfield, Mass. None of these counterfeits were placed in circulation in the United States. The counterfeiters took the money to Hamburg and Munich, and sold it to bankers in these cities in exchange for gold. The bankers failed to detect the fraudulent character of the notes, as the work is most skillfully executed. In many instances the bankers placed their business stamps on the notes as a guarantee to buyers of their genuineness. Emigrants to America exchanged their gold for the notes before sailing, and did not discover the imposition until their arrival in New York. Acting Chief Benson says that the bankers are making good to emigrants their losses.

Two men have been arrested in Hamburg for placing the counterfeits on the market. The principal forger of the gang, who is an English Canadian, is at present in Canada. A great deal of correspondence has taken place between the State Department and the Austrian Government relative to the extradition of the criminals arrested in Hamburg. As the result of this correspondence, both Governments are agreed that, as the crime of placing the counterfeit money was committed in Austria, the criminals should be punished there.

Burned Theaters.

According to the recently published work of Herr Folsch, nearly every theater in London and Paris has been burnt down in its turn. The author has been able to collect exact data with regard to 252 theaters. Of these there have been burnt down 5 theaters before opening; 70 in the first 5 years after opening; 38 in from 6 to 10 years after opening; 45 in from 11 to 20 years after opening; 27 in from 21 to 30 years after opening; 12 in from 31 to 40 years after opening; 20 in from 41 to 50 years after opening; 17 in from 51 to 60 years after opening; 7 in from 61 to 80 years after opening; 8 in from 81 to 100 years after opening; and 3 upward of 100 years after opening. The above figures show that the average age of those theaters destroyed by fire amounts to about twenty-two years and three-quarters.

A Fragment.

A young Griswold-street attorney recently took to wife a damsel of unusually fair and bright complexion. Last night, returning from church, the proud Benedict sent his wife ahead while he stopped to purchase a cigar. A friend passed the wife, rushed up to the doting husband and exclaimed: "Did you see that woman? There's what I call a fearful example of the pernicious habit which besets the female sex. Just look at that face! Talk about paint! If that woman were my wife"— "But, my dear sir, that woman is my wife," interposed the disciple of Blackstone. Tableau!—Detroit News.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

THE RAPE OF THE PRESIDENCY.

Speech of Hon. John F. Follett, of Cincinnati, at Hamilton, Ohio.

I am but an humble member of the Democratic party. To me it has ever been an honor and proud delight to be associated with those who are wedded to free institutions, constitutional government and human progress. I have ever agreed with that noble sentiment of the Democracy, "Men are mortal: principles are immortal." The worst enemy of popular government is he who defeats the expressed will of the people, it matters not what agencies be employed for that purpose. In political as in social life, the most despicable, heartless robber is he who robs you under the forms of law. To my mind the saddest spectacle that ever was witnessed in this country, the foulest blot upon its history, and the one most calculated to make patriots weep and hang their heads in shame, was the inauguration of Rutherford B. Hayes as President of the United States on the 4th of March, A. D. 1877. He knew when he took the oath of office, when he raised his hand to heaven and called God to witness the solemn obligation he assumed to support and defend the constitution of the United States, he was by that very act subverting one of its most sacred guarantees. I envy not the principles of that man who would lend himself to the perpetration of a known wrong. I care not what the inducement may be. To be President of the United States, when called to that high office by the voice of the people, would fill the measure of the noblest ambition, but no patriot would walk to that hitherto honored place over the fragments of a broken constitution. It is one of the highest encomiums that can be bestowed upon our institutions that they have endured sixteen years of Republican control, and the elastic power and recuperative energy of the country is such that I doubt not it will survive Hayes' administration, but if the means by which he secured the title to his office are to be taken as precedents we have already outlived free, representative government.

The Democratic party has always had implicit confidence in the intelligence, the virtue and the sense of justice of the people, and I do not hesitate to assert that no man will, in future, attain the office of President of the United States as Mr. Hayes did. Cabinet officials and Republican platform-makers may talk of Mexicanizing, but let them "possess their souls in patience." One dose of the vile mixture has so nauseated the people that they will never swallow another. Let the Republican leaders of Ohio and of the United States be assured that their cry of "stop thief" will not throw us off their trail so long as they cling to the stolen goods. Call the investigation of fraud revolutionary, if you please; it is such revolution as patriots have ever desired, and as honest men in the country have earnestly prayed for for years past. One of the strongest inducements to the rape of the Presidency was to prevent the unearthing of the frauds with which the executive departments of the Government have for years past been reeking. You say that it is an attack upon the President's title; we respond, whose fault is it, if, in unearthing fraud and corruption and stirring its cess-pools, a President's title is found concealed, and, being exposed, emits odors so foul that they cannot be endured by patriots? But let me, in all confidence, whisper into the ears of those astute platform-makers, that when they assert that the investigation of the frauds by which the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana were secured to Hayes will cause general distrust, will prostrate our industries, and aggravate and prolong the distress of the laboring and industrial classes, their studied phrases will deceive no one. Every honest man knows that he was never hurt, nor did any interest of the country ever suffer by the exposure and punishment of fraud and crime. Who ever knew objections to be interposed to such investigation by any one except the parties conscious of guilt and their immediate friends? It requires not the vivid imagination or poetic genius of a Milton to discover, in these declarations of the Republican platform, the wailings of those who begin, for the first time, earnestly to feel that "their sins have found them out," and to have a foretaste of the tortures of the damned. And indeed the agonized cry is not a cause of wonder, when we reflect upon the number of their great leaders, the men they have heretofore represented as honored, honorable and worthy of the highest confidence of the people, whose connection with the frauds being investigated is so clearly proved and so well established that it is apparent to every one that when they shall have filled out their respective terms of office, if, perchance, they are permitted to fill them out, they will sink into political graves unhonored and unlamented. I speak of these men more in sorrow than in anger. Blessed, thrice blessed, would our country be if men honorable as citizens, deserving of trust and confidence in their business and social relations, could retain their integrity in political life, and withstand the lust and greed of power and the appliances of corruption, which have been most marked characteristics of the Republican party.

Contrast, now, this lament of the Republican platform with the noble, patriotic, manly declarations of the Democratic platform.

"Resolved, That an investigation of frauds committed at the last Presidential election in Florida and Louisiana ought to have been made by the Electoral Commission. Its refusal to do so was a violation of the spirit of the law under which it was organized, and a gross outrage upon the people of the United States, and while the decision, as made by the Forty-fourth Congress, of the question as to who should be declared President of the United States for the present Presidential term was, in our judgment, final, that decision ought not to preclude authentic investigation and the exposure of all fraud connected with that election, and the due accountability of all who were guiltily connected with them."

To the honor of our country let it be borne in mind that never, until the days of the decline of the Republican party and it became manifest that it could not retain power by the will of the people, was the effort made by fraud to override and break down constitutional guarantees. On the day following the Presidential election it was conceded on all sides that the Democratic candidate had secured, beyond all peradventure, 184 electoral votes, and one more was all that was needed to elect. It was also conceded that upon the face of the returns the State of Louisiana was carried by the Democrats by a large majority, and the States of Florida and South Carolina had probably gone Democratic also. In all those States troops had been stationed for the purpose of enforcing due respect to republican principles at the ballot-box. From no officer or soldier of the army, from no truthful or reliable individual whatever, was there an intimation that there was not a fair election and an honest vote at every precinct in each of those States. A number of Republican gentlemen were sent to each of those States. For what purpose? All that could then be honestly done was to count the votes and announce the result. Each one of those States had men in both parties capable of adding figures correctly. What, then, the need of an United States Senator from Ohio, a lawyer from New York, and great Republican lights from other parts of the country, to go to New Orleans to perform a work which, if intended to be honestly done, could just as well have been performed by a school-boy? But why speak of honest work in connection with these visiting statesmen, as they are called? The sole purpose of their mission, as every impartial man must know, was to prevent the doing of honest work. Their mission was accomplished, and every one of them is enjoying his reward, except poor Ampt, and it is claimed he was neither called nor chosen as one of th's precious band.

This monstrous fraud was most successfully perpetrated; and the manner in which it was perpetrated, as declared in our platform, ought to have been investigated by the Electoral Commission. The fact that the law creating the Electoral Commission authorized that commission to take into view "petitions, depositions and other papers," clearly shows that it was the intent of the framers of that law that these frauds should be investigated. But the eight Republican members of the commission, true to the doctrines and spirit of the Republican party, declined to investigate the work of the visiting statesmen, and Mr. Hayes and his co-conspirators have received and are enjoying the plunder, and "Ye gods! how Blaine does howl!" because the plundered victims do not be quiet. The whole truth with reference to the means and instrumentalities employed for the accomplishment of this most shameless outrage will never be brought to light. If Anderson, Dennis and McLin had been provided with "desirable positions in warm countries," or with warm berths elsewhere, as most of the gang were, much that we now know would have remained concealed. The men who planned, contrived and furnished the brain-work for the conspiracy refuse to disclose their precious information. However successfully they may conceal the truth I do not envy them their position. The consciousness that the avenger is on their track and has already discovered some of the pathways to their place of concealment, the sounds of his footsteps which they can now distinctly hear, although as yet apparently distant, are amply sufficient to make them cry out in their agony, as they are now doing, "Oh! wretched man that we are, who shall deliver us from the Andersons, the Webers, the Jenkses, the Pinkstons, the Returning Boards, the Dennises and McLins, and all the others of like character, our late associates and with whom we took sweet counsel together!" I do not say that patriotic freemen "laugh at their calamities or mock, now that their fear has come," but their desire is that the Potter investigation committee shall prosecute its work vigorously, fearlessly, thoroughly, and, in the language of the Democratic platform of Maine, "they insist that the guilty parties, whoever they may be and wherever found, should be punished, truth and justice vindicated, and a repetition of a like offense made impossible."

Did Mr. Hayes have knowledge of, and did he participate in, the electoral frauds; and, if he did, is it right that he should be permitted to say to his associates, to the men who did his work, while writhing under the lash of an outraged people, their backs bent by the load of infamy he helped to place upon them, "Let the galled jades wince, my withers are unwrung?" The innate sense of justice and fair dealing which characterizes every lover of truth and honesty prompts the decision that the head of the conspiracy should be crushed and consigned to perdition with the body. It would seem hardly possible for any one to doubt Mr. Hayes' knowledge, in view of the fact that the men who planned and made effective the fraud were the men who secured his nomination, were his most intimate friends and advisers during the campaign, and are now filling the best offices at his disposal. But more terribly significant than all this is the fact that what was known as the Southern policy of the Republican party was the characteristic issue of the campaign, and of which he, as the standard-bearer of the party, was the special representative, the issue, the defeat of which he said, on the night of the election, when he knew, as every honest man did, that he had been defeated, he deplored more than his own defeat, he abandoned as soon as he was inaugurated and adopted the Southern policy of the Democratic party, the constitutional policy for which the Democratic party had earnestly contended in every political campaign since the war closed, and upon which it was then for the first time victorious, and he and his party defeated.

The theory upon which Mr. Hayes and his party had defended its Southern policy was that the army was necessary in the Southern States to prevent intimidation of voters, that the colored voters of the South could deposit free ballots only in boxes surrounded by bayonets. During all the years in which the Republican outrage-mill was grinding out its grists to order, not one could compare in extent and enormity to that furnished by the election in Louisiana, in November, 1876, according to the findings of the Returning Board, under the manipulations of the visiting statesmen. So extensive was the intimidation of voters, if we are to believe these gentlemen, that a Democratic majority of about 10,000 was changed to a Republican majority of 5,000, and more; in other words, over 15,000 voters, at one election, while the State was still bristling with Federal bayonets, were prevented from exercising the right of free suffrage. What a conclusive argument was here furnished for a continuance of the Southern policy of the Republican party

And then we must not lose sight of that tragic, soul-harrowing spectacle presented by Eliza Pinkston, with $500, which had been given her, in bank, and the certificate of deposit for the same in her pocket, in order that, with her hand upon the certificate, her tongue might not forget to utter the words of truth and soberness, walking nimbly up two flights of stairs, and then, under the instructions of the now distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, the right arm of Mr. Hayes' administration, losing all physical strength and stretching out upon a sofa, exhibiting ghastly, still-bleeding wounds, and carried into a room where were congregated men of both parties, followed by a cortege of shocked, horrified Republican statesmen, uttering by their manner far more eloquently than words could have done, "Ye that have tears to shed, prepare to shed them now." It was, indeed, a sight to make "men and angels weep." Poor Eliza! Under the careful and successful training of John Sherman she played her part admirably, and the only thing that mars the beauty of the picture is the fact that the Republican official in New Orleans with whom she intrusted the care of her money in bank showed that he was truly worthy to be a Republican official by stealing all the money but $50. This was, however, an unusually generous divide. He only took nine-tenths; whereas, the rule was to take all.

The number of affidavits charging outrages and intimidations, prepared at the Custom House at New Orleans, was only limited by the clerical force at command to write them. There was no difficulty in getting them sworn to and certified, though known to be false.

The eight of the Electoral Commission may have thought there were no frauds to investigate, though it is hard to reconcile such belief with the fact of their refusal to investigate; but all these frauds were committed under the immediate eye and special direction of the intimate friends and conscience-keepers of Mr. Hayes, and it is not possible that he was not fully advised of the work they did. The fact of his knowledge is unmistakably attested by the possession of the rewards bestowed by him for doing his work. That Nicholls is to-day Governor of Louisiana and Packard Consul to Liverpool, that the Democratic policy is the Southern policy adopted by the administration, "is confirmation strong as proof of holy writ" that Hayes knew the pretense under which the vote of Louisiana was counted for him and he became President was false and fraudulent. If there were any law to punish a man for obtaining an office under false pretenses, I would not hesitate, upon the facts now known, to insure a conviction of Mr. Hayes by any jury of honest men, though they were all Republicans. Great God! is it indeed true that Thou hast so far forgotten this once proud and happy land of liberty, that was founded and has, until recently, been nurtured by virtue and patriotism—this land we humbly hoped was Thine own and under Thy special fostering care—as to permit any party, in its folly and madness, to select as suitable to become the especial custodian of our most sacred rights one who dares ride to this high seat upon the back of h—l's most impious dragon, fraud? And where were Thy thunderbolts when, as the final consummation of the infamous outrage, he raised his arm and called Thee to witness? How grandly noble could Mr. Hayes have stood before the world to-day, if he had possessed enough manly virtue and patriotism to have declined accepting an office thus sought and tendered! How much more desirable would his lot have been than it now is, when he and his friends are cowering before an investigation of frauds!

While fraud sits in the highest seats and menacingly flaunts its dirty garments in our faces, patriots will be restive and demand that it be investigated and exposed, and that "all who are guiltily connected with it shall be held to a due accountability."

The sale of the jewels of ex-Queen Isabella of Spain brought $720,000.

GREENBACKS VS. GOLD.

Years ago I had a discussion, partly public, partly private, with Horace Greeley on the subject of greenbacks, in which he made against them what he deemed two strong points, viz., that they were a depreciated currency and irredeemable. In a recent article (see Irish World, Aug. 10) I have endeavored to show the greenbacks could not and cannot become a "depreciated currency." The other accusation of being irredeemable does not, as formerly, fall with the same force on the public ear since the successful efforts made by Government to accumulate gold have obliged even the most violent greenback opponents to withdraw this count from their bill of indictment. Their doing so, however, is not a concession to the opinions of those who believe the greenbacks are more desirable than any other form of money; on the contrary, their ceasing to call them irredeemable is due to the near accomplishment of what conforms to the impression they have of what is meant by the term redemption, and not to any change in their ideas concerning the merits of the greenbacks. Were the ground to suddenly open and swallow the gold hoarded in Washington, these people would "return to their vomit;" they are incapable of forming an independent opinion upon the subject, but, like barren rocks, echo very distinctly through the community the utterances of foreign gold-peddlers and that obedient servant of the peddlers—our Government.

There are many who reply to the charge brought against the greenbacks of being irredeemable by asking: "Is gold redeemable?" If greenbacks and gold were identical, were convertible terms, were qualified to perform the same duties, this reply would be all-sufficient. But gold and greenbacks have nothing in common; they are utterly dissimilar; the former is merchandise, the latter are currency; the one is a measure, the other a representative of values; the first is saleable for the property it measures the value of, the second are redeemable in the property they represent the value of; therefore to the question, Is gold redeemable?—the proper reply is: No; gold is redeemable in nothing, but is saleable for everything; and to those who assert the greenbacks are irredeemable, the proper reply is: Greenbacks are redeemable in everything, but are saleable for nothing.

Greenback advocates, the advocates of a national currency, cannot guard too carefully against confounding greenbacks with gold; they should let it be distinctly understood they recognize no affinity whatever between gold and greenbacks; they should let it be understood they do not demand greenbacks as a substitute for gold, as something to take the place of gold, or to assume the legitimate duties of gold, but demand them for purposes gold is under no circumstances capable of accomplishing; demand them to meet a want that has been growing more and more imperative with every step taken toward a higher civilization and a more complex social organization; a want which has manifested itself in the creation of promissory notes by individual and banking associations, but which have completely failed to satisfy that want, because, instead of the entire property of the nation, they represented only particular and limited properties which, when lost, deprived such notes of all usefulness. To discuss the question whether gold or greenbacks are preferable for meeting this want is just as profitable as to discuss whether, in the making of a pudding, eggs or wool are preferable. Eggs and wool are equally excellent for the purposes to which they can be applied; but no amount of ingenuity can make custard of wool or weave eggs into cloth. Likewise gold is excellent for the uses to which it is adapted, but no amount of ingenuity can transform it from a measure to a representative of values; can transform it from merchandise to currency.

If gold can be currency, then you can make currency of any kind of merchandise from rows of pins upward; for gold is nothing more than merchandise; it has intrinsic value; it can be and is bought and sold by the grain, ounce, pound and ton, like all other merchandise, whether it be in the shape of coin, bullion or dust. Every transaction in which anything is exchanged for gold is a purchase or sale of gold for the article taken or given in exchange; and the article exchanged for gold is just as much a measure of the value of gold as the latter is a measure of the value of the article for which it is exchanged, because both are merchandise, and as such have the same properties in common. Currency, however, has no intrinsic value; it cannot be bought or sold by any weight or measure; it has none of the attributes of merchandise. If a dollar greenback note be given for a pound of tea it is a redemption of the note in the property it represents the value of, and that value is the sum total of the labor expended in producing the pound of tea or any other article on which the same amount of labor has been expended. But while the pound of tea redeems the note the note does not redeem the pound of tea; also while the few grains of gold redeem the greenback dollar note the latter does not redeem the gold; but as tea may be sold for gold so also gold may be sold for tea, thus showing that tea and gold are equally merchandise, and therefore are equally entitled to perform in business the same duties, while the greenback, not being merchandise, but currency, has no traits in common with the tea, gold, or other articles the value of which it represents. Therefore, it is unwise and only tends to weaken the Greenback cause, when the issue is sought to be determined by weighing the merits relatively of greenbacks and gold, of currency and merchandise. They have no merits in common; each has its peculiar virtue and neither is qualified to take the place of the other.

I lay particular stress upon this point, because it is one generally lost sight of, and I know of none that ought to be kept more constantly in view. Through neglect or ignorance of it many earnest workers in the field have made assertions, and permitted opinions to go abroad, which have brought ridicule upon the cause, and thereby deterred thousands from joining our ranks.

The great error committed by our opponents lies in their assuming that currency, that a representative of all values, is redeemable in only a small part of those values. Instead of being redeemable in all the property of which it represents the value, it is, they assert, redeemable in nothing but gold. Currency could, with as much propriety, be made redeemable in hay or tin cups, to the exclusion of everything else. It is a characteristic feature of a national currency that it is always being redeemed, just as it is a characteristic feature of gold that it is always being sold; hence the greenbacks have never been irredeemable any more than gold has ever been unsalable.

NOT TO SHYLOCK,

But to Government Let Money Be a Source of Revenue.

As a rate of interest paid to individuals works injustice to others, and as having no rate of interest at all would leave no, or very little, incentive to accumulate to the material wealth of the world, and as interest on money becomes the most perfect system of taxation that can be devised—because, as it adds to the cost of production, no one can consume anything and pay for it without paying that tax—therefore, interest should only be paid as a tax to support government. And all mortgages found on record running to individuals should be taxed to the full amount of the rate of Government interest. As individuals thee could only get an income from their accumulated wealth by investing it in some fixed capital, it would have the effect of greatly increasing the material wealth of the world.

The rate of interest paid to the Government would become a bonus for every one to invest their surplus earnings in some kind of property, as that would be the only way they could get any revenue from their surplus earnings. * * *

The money of this nation should be issued by the General Government. The nation's revenue should be derived from loaning the money to the different State Governments; and the State Governments should derive their revenue by loaning it again at a little higher rate to the different counties; and the county and municipal governments should derive their revenue by loaning it at a still higher rate to the people. The largest amount of money should be kept in circulation that would just bring revenue enough to keep up the expenses of the different governments.

The greater the amount of money in circulation after reaching a certain point, the less the revenue would there be derived, as the rate of interest would decline very rapidly after the volume of money had reached a certain point.

If laws were enacted with this object in view, the Government could derive its revenue in this way within ten years. We could then throw our ports open to free trade, and so long as other nations would cling to their old notions of gold and silver money every workingman in this country would reap a direct benefit from our gold and silver mines, by having to work less hours per day. The unwieldy and ponderous machine of Government could then be reduced more than one-half. The taxes on labor then to support Government would be so evenly distributed that it would be scarcely felt; while, at the present time, the taxes are so onerous on certain classes of men that it almost amounts to confiscation of their property.

Interest would then be reduced to its minimum rate, and it would be no longer paid to support a moneyed aristocracy that saps a great part of the earnings of the workingmen, but would be paid as a small tax for the benefit of good government.—Joseph Eastman in his pamphlet "Reason, or Riot?"

Webster on Finance.

Mr. Webster spoke as follows: Now, by this constitution, Congress is authorized to coin money, to regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and all the States are prohibited from coining money, or from making anything but gold and silver coins a legal tender in payment of debts. Suppose the constitution had stopped here, it would still have established the all-important point of a uniform money system; by this provision Congress is to furnish coin or regulate its value for all the States; there is to be but one money standard for the whole country, and the standard value to be established by Congress is to be a currency, not of bullion merely; but if nothing else had been done would it not have been a reasonable and necessary inference from this power that Congress had authority to regulate, and must regulate, any and all paper money that may be put into circulation. It is very evident that the constitution intended something more than to provide a medium for the payment of debts due the Government; the object was a uniform currency for the whole people in all the transactions of life, and it was manifestly the intent of the constitution, that the power to maintain such a currency should be given to Congress, but it would make the system incongruous and incomplete; it would be denying to Congress the means necessary to accomplish ends which were manifestly intended; it would render the whole provision in a great measure nugatory, if when Congress had established a coin for currency, and circulation, it should have no power to maintain it as an actual circulation, nor to regulate or control paper emissions designed to occupy its place and perform the same functions that it would on the coinage power alone and on a fair, just and reasonable inference from it, therefore I should be of the opinion that Congress was authorized and was bound to protect the community against all evils which might threaten from a deluge of currency of any kind, filling up, in point of fact, all the channels of circulation, and this opinion is not new; it has often been expressed before, and was cogently urged by Mr. Dallas, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his report in 1816. He says that whenever the emergency occurs that demands a change of system it seems necessary to follow that the authority, which was alone competent to establish the national coin, is alone competent to create a national substitute.

A Bankrupt Nation—A True Picture of the Situation.

William S. Groesbeck, of Ohio, Prof. Francis Bowen, of Massachusetts, and George M. Weston, of Maine, after months of careful and patient study and research, arrived at the following conclusions in regard to the public, municipal, corporate and individual indebtedness of the United States:

The investments of the banks, insurance and trust companies of New York city, at the commencement of the year 1877 amounted to $5,800,000,000. These investments include $905,000,000 in real-estate mortgages.

According to the most accurate reports, the New England savings banks had invested $228,000,000 in real-estate mortgages. Those in the State of New York, outside of the city, $116,154,000 in real-estate mortgages. In New Jersey 45 per cent. of all bank deposits were so invested.

A large portion of the farms in the West, especially in the newer States, are known to be mortgaged. Of the 630,099 traders and manufacturers on the books of the mercantile agency of Dun, Barlow & Co. in 1876, 9,022 failed, with average liabilities of $21,000. If that is assumed to be the average liability of the 630,099, the aggregate liability would be $13,244,000,000. Add to this:

Public debt	$2,000,000,000
Municipal	850,000,000
Railroads	2,459,000,000
Canal	105,000,000
Total	$5,414,000,000
Making a grand total of	$18,658,000,000

The value of all the property in the United States, both personal and real, in 1865, was estimated at $30,000,000,000, but, in consequence of the contraction of the money volume, in order to force a specie resumption, values have declined, on an average, one-half; so that to-day, according to present prices, the entire wealth of the country will not exceed $15,000,000,000. And, if forced sales were made, and any considerable portion of the indebtedness of the country was attempted to be collected by law, property would not bring 25 per cent. of its value at the time the indebtedness was made.

The Terrible Power of Interest.

To get an adequate idea of the exaction of debt—to understand how it transfers the wealth silently and surely from those who work to those who lend—it is necessary that we present a little calculation. Senator Jones, whose authority is not questioned, estimates the indebtedness of the nation—public and private—at $19,000,00,000. Here are his figures:

National	$2,000,000,000
States	390,000,000
Cities, towns and counties	850,000,000
Railroads	2,459,000,000
Canals	105,000,000
Banks, insurance, individuals, etc.	13,244,000,000
Total	$19,048,000,000

This, at 6 per cent. interest, yields a revenue nearly as great in value as all the products made in all the workshops of the United States. It requires the labor of 3,686,387 workmen, working at the present price of uneducated labor, to pay it. This is over twice the number of mechanics and artisans. Is it any wonder that we sell the products of our farms, forests, workshops and mines, and every year approach nearer and nearer to the verge of bankruptcy? Is not this a sufficient cause for the inequality which we perceive in the social condition?—Terre Haute Express.

Honest Money Management.

Appletons' Encyclopedia gives the bonded debt for October, 1865, and John Sherman gives the figures for 1878, as follows:

Bonded debt in 1865	$1,162,769,590
Bonded debt in 1878	1,862,633,650
Increase	$699,864,830

It will be seen that the bonded debt has increased over one-half since 1865. While this debt has been increasing one-half, your property has depreciated in just about the same ratio, and this makes the debt doubly oppressive.

Now look at the total debt. Mr. S. D. Horton gives the figures for 1876, and John Sherman gives the figures for 1878, as follows:

Total debt September, 1876	$2,203,902,616
Total debt January, 1878	2,233,802,682
Increase	$29,900,066

An increase of nearly $30,000,000 in sixteen months.

And the Davis Senate Committee report the increase for twelve months at $24,000,000, which confirms the above figures.

The Hebrews.

The Jewish Advance, of Chicago, continues to warn its readers that the Jews will entirely disappear as a distinct race if the fatal and increasing tendency to intermarriage with Christians is not checked. A daughter of the late Isaac Friedlander, of San Francisco, the colossal grain speculator, married a Christian with her father's consent, and two children of a prominent and orthodox Jewish minister of Berlin have recently married out of their ancestral faith. In the posthumous writings of Dr. Geiger, the famous rabbi of Bodin, is published a letter from Mr. Bischoffsheim, a distinguished Jewish scholar of Paris, written in 1872, in which he says: "The majority of the Parisian Israelites have cast aside ceremonial and ritualistic observances to such an extent that they continue Jews only in name. Many of the best and wealthiest families attend no synagogue, and, what is worse, marry their daughters to Christians. If the wives do not themselves embrace Christianity, the children, at least, are certain to be raised in that faith. The ultimate result of all this can only be the gradual transfer of the Jewish people to the prevailing religion."

The Berlin police have been obliged to interfere to save the lime tree in Unter-den-Linden, pierced by some of Nobeling's shots, from being torn to bits by relic hunters. It is now inclosed by an iron grating.

The telegraph is popular in Beloochistan, the wire being much prized by the people there. The wire was willfully cut four times within the first half of July, and each time a quantity of wire ranging from 100 yards to half a mile was carried away, besides a few insulators and brackets.

People who are so unwise as to risk everything on the result of throwing dice should bear in mind the fact that the chances are thirty-five to one against throwing any particular doublet, and six to one against throwing any doublet. There are thirty-eight chances upon two dice. It is seventeen to one against throwing any two desired numbers.

A drawing-master in Edinburgh, who had been worrying a pupil with contemptuous remarks about his deficiency of skill in the use of the pencil, ended by saying: "If you were to draw me, for example, tell me what part you would draw first." The pupil, with a significant meaning in his eye, looked up in his master's face and quietly said, "Your neck, sir."

It is said that there is a superstition in China to the effect that a famine like the present one is evidence of divine displeasure with the Emperor. The present Emperor indulges in this belief, and cuts down his table fare one-half, sending out from time to time edicts of self-abasement. A British Consul thinks the present famine is the result of reckless tree destruction.

A very fine numismatic collection has lately been sold in Paris, namely, that of the late M. Jarry, of Orleans, who had collected during a long life one of the most complete series of Roman coins to be found anywhere. Some of the prices obtained were very large—e. g., a medal of Julia, daughter of Titus, fetched $800; a medal of Laelianus, with an emblematical figure of Spain, $700. The first four days' sale amounted to $25,073.

A curious controversy over a woman's heart has arisen at Nice. An American lady, who had been converted to Roman Catholicism, left $60,000 to the church of Father Lavigne, on condition that she should be buried within the precincts of the edifice. The municipal authorities opposed such a step as being against the health regulations, but the ecclesiastical legatees thought to get over the difficulty by burying the heart only in the church. The family, however, would not permit the body to be out.

PARLOR MAGIC.

It is only a flower that I give you,
  A hundred-leaved, damask-dyed rose;
Shut it in there between the dark pages
  When that book of enchantment you close.
But when it is crushed there, and withered,
  And you—still a rose in your bloom,
Lift it up with your careless white fingers,
  Take it out of its magical tomb.
It will spread with its fragrance around you
  The spell of a breeze-shaken tune,
An hour in a garden of roses,
  A morning of sunshine and June;
A face that implored with pale passion,
  Empty arms that entreated you, sweet,
And a heart that had perished to please you,
  Trodden under your pitiless feet!

THE FORECLOSURE OF THE MORTGAGE.

Walk right in the sittin'-room, Deacon; its all in a swaddle, you see.
But I hadn't no heart to right it, so I've just let every thing be.
Besides, I'm goin' to-morrer—I calk'late to start with the dawn—
And the house won't seem so home-like if it's all upset and forlorn.
I sent off the children this mornin'; they both on 'em begged to stay,
But I thought 'twould be easier, mebbe, if I was alone to-day.
For this was the very day, Deacon, just twenty year ago,
That Caleb and me moved in: so I couldn't forgit it, you know.
We was so busy and happy!—we'd been married a month before—
And Caleb would clear the table and brush up the kitchen floor.
He said I was tired, and he'd help me; but, law! that was always his way—
Always handy and helpful, and kind, to the very last day.
Don't you remember, Deacon, that winter I broke my arm?
Why, Caleb skarsely left me, not even to 'tend to the farm.
There night and mornin' I saw him, a-settin' so close to my bed,
And I knew him in spite of the fever that made me so wild in my head.
He never did nothin' to grieve me, until he left me behind—
Yes, I know, there's no use in talkin', but somehow it eases my mind.
And he sot such store by you, Deacon, I needn't tell you now,
But unless he had your jedgment, he never would buy a cow.
Well, our cows is gone, and the horse too—poor Caleb was fond of Jack,
And I cried like a fool this mornin' when I looked at the empty rack.
I hope he'll be kindly treated: 'twould worry poor Caleb so
If them Joneses should whip the cretur—but I s'pose he ain't like to know.
I've been thinkin' it over lately, that when Mary sickened and died,
Her father's spirrit was broken, for she was allus his pride.
He wasn't never so cheery; he'd smile, but the smile wa'n't bright,
And he didn't care for the cattle, though once they'd ben his delight.
The neighbors all said he was ailin', and they tried to hint it to me;
They talked of a church-yard cough; but, oh! the blind are those who won't see.
I never believed he was goin' till I saw him a-layin' here dead.
There, there! I don't be anxious, Deacon; I haven't no tears to shed.
I've tried to keep things together—I've ben slavin' early and late—
But I couldn't pay the int'rest, nor get the farm-work straight.
So of course I've gone behindhand, and if the farm should sell
For enough to pay the mortgage, I s'pose 'twill be doin' well.
I've prayed ag'inst all hard feelin's, and to walk as a Christian ought,
But it's hard to see Caleb's children turned out of the place he bought;
And readin' that text in the Bible 'bout widows and orphans, you know,
I can't think the folks will prosper who are willin' to see us go.
But there! I'm keepin' you, Deacon, and it's nigh your time for tea.
"Won't I come over?" No, thank you; I feel better alone, you see.
Besides, I couldn't eat nothin'; whenever I've tried it to-day
There's somethin' here that chokes me. I'm narvous, I s'pose you'll say.
"I've worked too hard?" No, I haven't. Why, it's work that keeps me strong;
If I sot here thinkin', I'm surtain my heart would break before long.
Not that I care about livin'. I'd rather be laid away
In the place I've marked beside Caleb, to rest till the jedgment-day.
But there's the children to think of—that makes my dooty clear,
And I'll try to foller it, Deacon, though I'm tired of this earthly speer.
Good-by, then. I sha'n't forgit you, nor all the kindness you've showed;
'Twill help to cheer me to-morrer, as I go on my lonely road,
For— What are you sayin', Deacon? I needn't—I needn't go?
You've bought the mortgage, and I can stay? Stop! say it over slow.—
Jest wait now—Jest wait a minute—I'll take it in bimeby
That I can stay. Why, Deacon, I don't know what makes me cry!
I haven't no words to thank you. Ef Caleb was only here,
He'd sech a head for speakin', he'd make my feelin's clear.
There's a picter in our old Bible of an angel from the skies,
And though he hasen't no great-coat, and no spectacles on his eyes,
He looks jest like you, Deacon, with your smile so good and trew,
And whenever I see that picture, 'twill make me think of you.
The children will be so happy! Why, Debby will 'most go wild;
She fretted so much at leavin' her garding behind, poor child!
And, law! I'm as glad as Debby, ef only for jest one thing—
Now I can tend the posies I planted there last spring
On Caleb's grave: he loved the flowers, and it seems as ef he'll know
They're a bloomin' all around him while he's sleepin' there below.

STYLES.

For the Ladies to Read.

Plaids will be the rage next winter.

The Gainsborough hat is as popular as ever.

Belted dress waists will continue to be the style.

Gold trimmings and embroideries are again revived.

High back combs are popular and in great demand.

A new style of India cashmere for fall is called Shoudas.

Feather trimmings will be used on everything next winter.

The fall openings will not take place until late in September.

The bonnets next winter will be much larger than the present style.

Felt bonnets embroidered in gold will be one of the styles next winter.

Brightly flowered belts will be much worn next winter with black silk dresses.

It is not good style to wear colors in mourning, not even violet, lilac, or lavender.

Hoops five yards around will not reappear so long as common scoops are in existence.

Most of the new fall fabrics have eastern names, and are oriental in colors and designs.

The nobby jacket will be all the style this fall as an accompaniment of the walking suit.

Elegant costumes next winter will be a combination of camel's hair stuffs and satin.

The pockets and cuffs for elegant dresses next winter will be made entirely of feathers.

Pattern pieces of the new woolen stuffs for fall have been received in many of our stores.

Low-necked corsages, with belts, will be the style next winter for ball and party dresses.

The new satin and velvet brocades are magnificent—but they are a magnificent price, too.

The new fans are black satin, embroidered with shaded floss in ferns and feather patterns.

Cloaks this coming winter will be shorter. The bills, we suppose, will consequently be larger.

In dressing the hair there will be less ornamentation, so far as ribbons, flowers and feathers are concerned, than has been seen for many years. It will be the style to preserve the form of the head and simply add to it the grace of beautiful tresses.

Aprons are again in style, and are much worn by young ladies and young married ladies, giving them a pretty, housewifely appearance. The most fashionable are of white linen or linen lawn, delicately tucked, and trimmed with lace or embroidery

The brunettes will have it all their own way next winter. Red, black and gold are to be the fashionable colors. Blonds who, on reading this are made to feel bad and need consoling, will please call at this office. Ask for the editor of this column.

The somber grays and yellow browns so long in favor in dress goods are replaced in the new autumn goods by clearer hues and by the most softly-blended rich colors.

For afternoon sociables very elegant aprons are now made of black satin, embroidered in colored silks. They are square, three-quarters of a yard in depth, with square pockets and embroidered belt.

A Friendly Horse.

[Christian Advocate.]

A few days since, as we were leaving our residence on our usual morning visit to the office, a sorrel horse belonging to us galloped up and caught our arm, and made an attempt to pull us in the direction he wished to go. He then left, and went off on a quick gait towards a pasture on a farm about a quarter of a mile distant from our residence. In a few minutes he approached us again, making an unusual noise, and seemed by his action to desire us to follow him. This we did, and when we reached the pasture we observed the mate of the horse entangled in a bridge, which had broken through with him. After we had extricated his companion from his dangerous position, the horse which had given us notice of his companion's danger, came up and rubbed his head against us, showing great signs of satisfaction.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

A Frenchman is interpreting Indian names. He says the Sioux Indians name their papooses after events happening at the time of their birth. As illustrative of this peculiar trait, Red Cloud is known to have taken that name from the fact that the western sky was overspread with red clouds at the moment of his birth; while the bringing in of a captive horse with a spotted tail gave to another chief the singular cognomen of Spotted Tail. Sitting Bull received his name because a buffalo bull, was by a lucky shot, thrown upon his haunches in sight of his mother's resting place at the natal hour; while the struggle of a fractious pony furnished a title for the redoubtable Crazy Horse.

NOTICE TO CONSUMERS —OF— Tobacco

LORILLARD

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many imitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such imitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metal label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

The genuine Lorillard Tin Tag Tobacco can be distinguished by a Tin Tag on each lump with the word Lorillard stamped thereon.

Over 7,088 tons tobacco sold in 1877, and nearly 3,000 persons employed in factories.

Taxes paid Gov'mn't in 1877 about 3, [illegible] and during past 12 years, over 20 [illegible].

These goods sold by all jobbers at manufacturers rates.

Democratic Doctrine.

The Platform of the Party Adopted at the State Convention.

A Clear and Unequivocal Enunciation of Principles—Sentiments which the Masses Will Endorse.

The democracy of the State of Indiana, assembled in delegate convention, declare;

That national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are, by the terms of the original contracts under which they were issued, expressly made payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money, as well as coin, is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

That we are in favor of such legislation by congress as will authorize the taxation by the states, of the United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad through the means of home syndicates or, other methods: and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislating so as to distribute said debt among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practicable opportunity for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation as shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public any private; and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon the same terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

That we are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced,

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employes of corporations engaged in the business of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that such lien shall be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation.

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and owner.

That the democratic party is the friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last apportionment of the state for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonorable, and we demand that the next legislature, in apportioning the state for legislative purposes, as will be their imparative duty, shall have regard alone to population and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the circuit courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the states tends to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the interests of the people; and we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the constitution and expressed in the judiciary act of 1789.

That we are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the federal government either in lands, bonds, money, or by the pledge of the public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders of the republican party who secretly conceived and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for president and vice-president, were wrongly kept out of the position to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that only can be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the president of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the act of federal officers in attempting to interfere with the rights and powers of the state courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our senators and representatives in congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to the soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

Financial Facts for the People.

The following exhibit gives the amount of money in circulation in 1865, composed as follow, to-wit:

Matured debt, not presented for payment	$ 1,503,020
Temporary loans, 4, 5 and 6 per cent. 10 days notice	107,148,718
Certificates of debt issued to public creditors	85,093,000

At that time we had universal prosperity; the laboring classes were all employed on full time and at good wages. The great manufacturing establishments of every description were running at their fullest capacity and finding ready markets and good prices for all their products. Farmers were working the soil to its utmost capacity, and finding ready sale and the best of prices for every species of grain and stock they had to sell. Mechanics and men of moderate means were enabled to build and own homes for themselves, and the poor tramp now so common in this country was then unknown in the land.

WHY ARE THE PEOPLE NOT PROSPEROUS TO-DAY?

Because our circulating medium has been contracted to the extent of $1,246,377,494. We had a circulating medium, March 1st, 1878:

Of legal tender greenbacks	$348,618,024
Of national bank notes	320,557,871
Total circulting medium	669,175,895

What has become of the people's money? It has been destroyed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and funded into Government Bonds, and our bonded interest-bearing debt is greater today than it has ever been. While it appears that the Secretary has been decreasing the public debt, he has not decreased the BONDED debt, but has simply withdrawn the circulating medium, thereby depriving the people of the means of paying our bonded debt. We have paid interest to the bond holders on our bonded debt to June 30th, 1877, one billion, five hundred and ninety-six millions, eight hundred and fifty-four thousand, nine hundred and one dollars and thirteen cents, ($1,596,854,901 13) nearly the amount of our bonded debt paid in interests, and yet not one dollar of our bonded debt liquidated, but still on the increase.

The net earnings of the National Banks, after deducting the pay of the Presidents, Cashiers, Tellers, Watchmen, Messengers and all other employes, and including taxes paid to the general Government, State taxes, County taxes, Municipal taxes, rents and all incidental expenses, during the last twelve years, have been over sixteen hundred millions of dollars.

Can you, reader, sustain such a policy that is virtually pauperizing the people by the villainous contraction of the currency? We ask all honest men to reason and ponder over these facts and figures, and then ask themselves if they are still determined to continue to cast their votes for a policy which is reducing themselves and their families to starvation, and the entire laboring classes of the country to a state of absolute pauperism?

For the COURIER.

MR. EDITOR.—Having received through the post office in Newville the following problem written by some scientific Republican, and it being an anonymous epistle I am at a loss to know how to answer it, and as an answer seems to be required, I will endeavor to answer it through your valuable paper with your permission.

I will first give you a copy of the problem as stated by the writer.

Problem No. 1: "If 1 drink less of whiskey for each man paying tax on $1000 will pay the appropriation for the State House, how many less drinks will pay the national debt."

This is an exact copy of the letter I received verbatim, et literatim, et punctuatim. Now I do not know why they addressed this difficult problem to me, as I do not set myself up as a teacher of mathematics; neither do I set myself up as a model of temperance par excellence, for I do sometimes take a glass of beer and sometimes something stronger, (when I deem it necessary) but I do not try to conceal it from the public by tying a red ribbon in my vest to deceive the public whilst drinking all the time as some of those that belong to the party, claiming to have all the temperance, morality and virtue on their side. The only reason that I can see for their addressing this problem to me was, perhaps they heard me repeat the language of Gov. Williams at Auburn when he spoke about the appropriation for building the State House Now, I did not state that one drink of whisky less for each man paying tax on one thousand dollars would pay the appropriation for the State House, but that the Governor stated that the man that was taxed one thousand dollars last year paid but ten cents, and that he could tell him how to save the money to pay it, and that was to take one drink of whisky less, and that they saw fit, in order to facilitate the work of building the State House, that the tax should be doubled this year and that would make it twenty cents, and in order to save money to pay their tax they could just take one drink less and smoke two cigars less and that would pay it this year. As far as I am concerned this would not be imposing a very grievous burden on me, as I do not smoke, and can do without the whisky, as I do not see fit to drink more than once or twice a year and sometimes not that. But this would not answer the Republican party, as whisky has been its chief source of revenue. They collected in the year 1867, thirty-five millions on whisky, 15,240,577 dollars on tobacco, $3,661,984 on cigars, making in all 53,902,561 dollars, and still this did not diminish the debt; but it is over six hundred millions larger than it was before, the Grant's, Babcock's, Belknap's and the balance of the whisky ring, stole all this and millions besides to carry to Europe to buy whisky and thus assist to pay the European debt by filching it from the laboring class in this country to play the snob in a foreign land by robbing the toiling millions at home. But I deem it a hopeless task to undertake to pay the debt either by drinking or abstaining from drinking, for if the Atlantic Ocean was all made up of poor whisky and the Republican party would drink it all, as I doubt not they would if they had Grant for their leader, the debt would do as it has been doing, increase, for they would keep their ring in running order so they would have money to buy more. The Rochester Republican, good authority, says "there is a particular spot in Tophet reserved for writers of anonyous letters." It is the north-east corner, where a south-west wind blows ashes into their eyes through all eternity. This is a hard doom, according to some writers, as the climate is tolerably hot and uncomfortable.

Lew Wallace Paid—Now for Elza Pinkston.

[Washington Special to the N. Y. World.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—Lew Wallace has been appointed governor of New Mexico in place of Axtell, removed. Axtell was notoriously unfit for the position which he held. There are political reasons why Wallace should be given an office far from his native heath. He is a resident of the Ninth congressional district of Indiana, where Godlove S. Orth, of Venezuelan claims fame, has recently been nominated by the republicans for congress. Wallace, assisted by his father-in-law, ex-Senator Lane, has been vigorously fighting Orth on the ground of the latter's connection with the Venezuelan claims scandal. He has circulated a petition among the voters of the district asking Orth to resign his candidacy. The dissension in the republican ranks will certainly be followed by the election of a democratic candidate unless Orth withdraws, as he did when nominated for governor two years ago, or Wallace is induced to stop his fight. Orth refuses to withdraw again, and General Wallace has been made governer of New Mexico for the sake of harmony in the district.

Voorhees' Matchless Oratory.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The grand receptions extended to Senator Voorhees wherever he has appointments to address the people are in the highest degree complimentary. They resemble ovations, and are unequivocal indorsements of his course as a senator. His speeches are the masterly efforts of his life, with the dignity of statesmanship and mature years there is the fire of his early manhood, the cultured wealth of matchless oratory and the wisdom of experience. He draws the people to him, he holds them by the magic of his wonderful eloquence, convinces them by his logic, and leaves them wiser and better prepared for the duties of citizens. Honest republicans are convinced; hide-bound rads are terrified; democrats are built up in the faith; nationals swear he is the man for Morton's seat in the senate, and the outlook grows daily more cheering.

Pay for Florida Frauds.

[Baltimore Gazette.]

General Lew Wallace, of Indiana, has been appointed to succeed Axtell as governor of New Mexico. Mr. Wallace assisted in the great work of counting Florida for Hayes. He secures his reward at last and at the same time is withdrawn from Indiana in time to stop the organization of opposition to Godlove S. Orth, the claim swindler, who is running for congress in the Ninth district. The work of reform goes on.

A Horse's Epitaph.

Ben. Hill, of Georgia, has just buried his war charger, and is having a monument prepared to erect over the grave. The following is the inscription: "Albert Sidney Johnson, a noble, gallant, faithful and true horse, after bearing his rider and master, B. J. Hill, through forty-seven battles, receiving three severe wounds, and surviving them through many years of usefulness, died July 21, 1878, in the twenty-fourth year of his age."

The Outrage Mill.

[Denver Democrat.]

The outrage mill has begun to work. Two hundred wicked ku-klux hung a negro near Shelbyville, Tennessee, on Wednesday night. The wretch had ravished a white woman, and the punishment is death in the state, but that did not prevent the press agent from terming them "ku-klux" for political effect.

A New Greenback Idea.

[Toledo Commercial.]

A greenback orator down in West Virginia the other day proposed that the general government should issue greenbacks which should be loaned to the state at one per cent., the state to loan the money to the counties at two per cent., and the counties in turn, to loan the money to the people at three per cent.

Just About the Size Of It.

[New Orleans Picayune.]

The alarm cry of Southern claims is one of those bugbears invented to scare children and silly people. Its utterance at this time proves the contempt which the Republican leaders entertain for the intelligence of that indeterminate mass which in this country is styled the majority.

A True Picture.

[Burlington Gazette.]

The picture of Blain, of Maine, is now hanging up in the post office. It does not show the fingers of that eminent "statesman." Were they in some other man's pocket when the picture was taken?

TO LABOR IS TO PRAY.

Pause not to dream of the future before us;
Pause not to weep the wild cares that come o'er us;
Hark how Creation's deep musical chorus,
Unintermitting, goes up into heaven!
Never the ocean wave falters in flowing;
Never the little seed stops in its growing;
More and more richly the rose-heart keeps glowing,
Till from its nourishing stem it is riven.

"Labor is worship!" the robin is singing;
"Labor is worship!" the wild bee is ringing;
Listen! that eloquent whisper, upspringing,
Speaks to thy soul from out nature's great heart.
From the dark cloud flows the life-giving shower;
From the rough sod blows the soft-breathing flower;
From the small insect, the rich coral bower;
Only man, in the plan, shrinks from his part.

Labor is life! 'Tis the still water faileth;
Idleness ever despaireth, bewaileth;
Keep the watch wound, or the dark rust assaileth;
Flowers droop and die in the stillness of noon.
Labor is glory!—the flying cloud lightens;
Only the waving wing changes and brightens;
Idle hearts only the dark future frightens;
Play the sweet keys, wouldst thou keep them to tune!

Labor is rest—from the sorrows that greet us;
Rest from all petty vexations that meet us;
Rest from sin-promptings that ever entreat us;
Rest from world-sirens that lure us to ill.
Work—and pure slumbers shall wait on thy pillow;
Work—thou shalt ride o'er care's coming billow;
Lie not down 'neath woe's weeping willow;
Work with a stout heart and resolute will!

Labor is health! Lo, the husbandman reaping,
How through his veins goes the life-current leaping!
How his strong arm in its stalwart pride sweeping,
True as a sunbeam the swift sickle guides.
Labor is wealth! In the sea the pearl groweth;
Rich the Queen's robe from the cocoon floweth;
From the fine acorn the strong forest bloweth;
Temple and statue the marble block hides.

Droop not! though shame, sin and anguish are round thee!
Bravely fling off the cold chain that hath bound thee!
Look to the pure heaven smiling beyond thee!
Rest not content in thy darkness—a clod!
Work for some good, be it ever so slowly!
Cherish some flower, be it ever so lowly!
Labor!—all labor is noble and holy;
Let thy great deed be thy prayer to thy God.

THE LOST DIAMONDS.

"You remember me the time of the Crimean war? Of course you do, though. Well, at that time I held a tolerably long lease of my old shop in Barbican. I did not, it is true, keep much of a show in the window; but my customers knew that I had a rare and valuable stock in drawers inside, and that was enough alike for me and them.

"Well, my lad, as I have before said, it was the time of the Crimean war. It was about as near as I can remember 11 o'clock in the morning of a bitterly cold day in December—a Tuesday—when either the slush or the piercing, biting cold, or the leaden, ominous sky that loomed overhead and threatened a snow-storm, kept people who had money by their fireside or in bed; indeed, few people of any kind were abroad, and all things outside were as gruesome and dispiriting as they well could be. I had drawn near my counting-house fire, and was looking into the glowing coals, my thoughts very far away from Barbican, E. C. My shop-door opened and there entered a fine, tall, handsome-looking gentleman, who, by his dress and bearing, was evidently a clergyman. At least I thought so at the time, as would anybody else, for that matter. His attire was of the best material and make, and scrupulously neat, and his neck-band was as white as driven snow. Moreover, gold-rimmed spectacles and heavy seals depending from his watch-fob gave him not only a highly respectable appearance but stamped him as wealthy withal. That's to say, I thought so. Well, up he marched to my counter with tolerably long strides, removed his hat (of the first quality), and placed it upon my counter (his well-arranged silver hair became him immensely), and gave me a "good-morning" and a smile which was incalculably pleasing and good to see. This man is a Christian; goodness and gentleness beam on every feature, I mentally told myself. I put on my very best manner and politely asked him his pleasure.

"'I have been recommended to you, sir' (he mentioned a firm with which I dealt largely in the way of bar-silver). 'I am given to understand,' he continued, 'that you have a varied and very valuable selection of ladies' diamond ornaments.'

"I signified that such really was the case.

"'Well,' he proceeded, 'I am somewhat anxious, sir, to see and examine some of your possessions. The fact is, my daughter—my only daughter, sir, a pure, sweet-tempered child—is on the eve of marriage, and I (naturally, you will say) am desirous of giving her a substantial wedding present. Very good. Mind! I want nothing gaudy; nor—pardon me, Mr. Filby—nor do I desire any artfully-contrived specimen of the jeweler's art of deception. I want something solid and substantial—articles that look what they really are—and I do not mind how high I go as to price.'

"All this was fair and square and above-board. Undoubtedly my prospective customer, though a clergyman, was an excellent man of business, and one that wouldn't brook trifling. I made up my mind to acquiesce to his every wish—and charge him as long a price as I reasonably could.

"I placed before him several trays of exquisite workmanship, upon which I looked with pride. I expected, I must own, that my customer would appear surprised, to say the least, at the dazzling array. Not so, however. And that's to put it mildly; for when I uncovered my goods, and looked up at him, with a self-satisfied look on my face, there was a look on his which bore a semblance of indifference, not to say disdain. This nettled me somewhat; but, on second thoughts, I told myself that it was possible he, personally, did not care for the pomps and vanities of this world, though anxious to procure such commodities for his daughter.

"After careful examination he selected a pair of diamond ear-rings (£80); a butterfly brooch—one mass of glitter and dazzle—and a half-hoop diamond ring (the two, £152 10s.) A tolerably good morning's work, you will say. We shall see.

"Well, after I had fitted the trinkets to superior cases, and when I had packed them in as small a compass as well as I could, the reverend gentleman felt in his pockets for the money wherewith to pay me. He drew forth from his breast-pocket a goodly-sized Russia-leather case, and, tenderly singling out some bank notes and a check, proceeded to settle for his purchase.

"'The check is good; you will perceive——' he began.

"My dear sir," I interrupted (the check was perfectly genuine, I was convinced, seeing that it bore the signature of the firm that had mentioned my name).

"'I know what you would say, sir,' he said, holding up his hand, while a look of extreme shrewdness covered his face; 'you would say that you have implicit faith in me. That is wrong—utterly wrong! As a business man, you should be ever careful. It behooves us all to be so at times. Clearly, you know me not; and deception abounds. For instance, I may not be a clergyman at all. I may, in fine, be none other than a knave—a wolf in sheep's clothing.' Saying which he laughed a laugh, which, somehow or other, seemed to grate upon my ear.

"However, he proceeded to pay me the amount due, as I have said.

"'Let me see,' he continued, musingly: 'it will be in all, four—three—two—ten. Good! If you will kindly look over these, Mr. Filby, you will find there is threepence short of the required sum, which I will pay you in copper coin immediately.' He removed his spectacles and pushed over to me three 100-pound Bank-of-England notes, ten 5-pound notes, and the check spoken of, which was for eighty-three pounds nine and ninepence. Satisfied that the notes were genuine, I looked up at my wealthy customer and found him fumbling in pocket after pocket for the copper money.

"'My dear sir!' I exclaimed, 'pray don't bother about the trifling pence. If you are satisfied, I am thoroughly so.'

"'Nay,' he rejoined; 'that will not do. Business is business. You are entitled to your demand—ay, and to the uttermost farthing. I buy goods of you for a certain amount; I therefore must pay you every iota of that amount or I shall not be easy in my mind.'

"A really upright man, this; lucky the congregation that had so justly and evenly balanced a man for their pastor. So ran my thoughts as he counted out the remaining threepence and placed them in my hand with a kind of dig, as though he were glad to get rid of them, and set his mind at ease.

"Then there ensued an awful pause, awkward because, for the life of me, I could not think of anything to say; and, as for my reverend customer, he seemed in all but a brown study. At any rate he seemed by no means in a hurry to take his purchase and be gone—appeared, indeed, to wish to linger awhile, seemingly for no earthly purpose, seeing that our transaction was at an end, and that he seemed not to care to talk. Presently he again took out his pocket-book, counted over six or seven five-pound notes, and became absorbed in casting up some figures; that done, he began fiddling with some leaves, turning them over and over and then back again.

"By way of turning my attention to other matters, I took up the Times; but before scanning its pages I chanced to look toward my shop-door, and saw a tall, heavily-built man peering through the glass. He was somewhat curious to look upon, I must confess; for the snow that had been threatening, was fiercely, rapidly descending outside, and this man was covered with the white, feathery flakes from head to foot. On seeing my gaze steadily fixed at him, he pushed open the door and entered with a firm tread. He had a kind of eagle eye, this man—eager, sidelong, piercing; thoughtful brows, too, and there was huge determination about the lower part of his face. Shaking the snow from off his coat, stamping his feet upon my shop carpet (which I thought a rather cool proceeding), and unfastening the lappets of his sealskin traveling-cap, he gave a deep-drawn grunt of relief, and exclaimed in a bluff, boisterous manner: 'In time, after all! My bird's not flown, by all that's palpable! Congratulate thyself, though man of gold and silver and precious stones; and, furthermore, congratulate me on my aptitude for scenting "Slippery Dick!"' Then, letting fall his voice, he added more seriously: 'You've had a narrow escape, sir. I've no doubt that our reverend friend here has contrived to lessen your stock of goods pretty considerably—has been a pretended (mark that) purchaser to a very tidy tune!'

"'If you mean, sir, whoever you may be, that this gentleman has paid a good deal of money to me,' I returned, somewhat indignantly, 'you are right in your conjecture. But may I ask, pray, who are you, that you enter my shop in this manner, and insult myself and customer by asking such—well, impertinent questions? * * * Who are you?' I again asked, feeling that I should be compelled to call my shopman to turn him neck and crop into the street.

"'You'll very soon know who I am,' he returned coolly. 'Suffice it at present that I am fully justified in what I ask and do. * * * Bear—kindly bear with me a little. I have a stern duty to perform. This man is not what he pretends to be. He is a blackleg—a canting humbug—a swindler; in a word, as dangerous and troublesome a customer as we have to deal with!'

"I looked at my customer. His face was terrible to look upon; I could scarcely believe my eyes—the passion concentrated in his features was absolutely demoniac in its intensity; the ebullition of rage which held possession of him shook him from head to foot.

"The boisterous stranger laid his hand heavily on the clergyman's shoulder, grasped it roughly, and whispered something in his ear, at which his passion left him as quickly and suddenly as a flash of lightning. He became, in fact, as pale as death, and finally culminated in trembling violently, while his face assumed a kind of brick-dust hue.

"I did not put this down to guilt; no, I laid it rather to the just indignation that would be naturally felt by a high-souled minister of the gospel accused of such enormities.

"The rough-and-ready intruder regarded the reverend gentleman with unfeigned admiration, at least so it appeared to me. He folded his arms across his broad chest and stood regarding him for a few moments. Then he looked at me and winked knowingly.

"'Our Christian friend is clever, oho! He is doing the work of a certain evil personage who shall be nameless very admirably, aha!' he ejaculated, reverting again to his boisterous manner. 'But we old birds are not to be caught; we are accustomed to this kind of thing. O dear, yes, I—your very obedient servant, Mr. Filby—belong to the fancy iron trade, and I do my utmost to get as much of my stock on other people's hands as I possibly can.' Saying which, he unbuttoned and threw open his shaggy overcoat, and laid bare to my gaze the uniform of an inspector of police. Then, as quick as thought, he drew forth and fastened on the clergyman's wrists a pair of handcuffs.

"'This is shocking—really horrible,' I couldn't help saying.

"'No sentiment, please,' returned the inspector, angrily. 'Leave me to do my work, and take care you do yours.'

"'But, my good friend,' the man of the white neckcloth exclaimed in whining tones, 'you are utterly mistaken. I like—I in fine have naught but admiration for your zeal; but I am not the man you suppose me to be. * * * If you will remove these things—they hurt my wrists—I will go—'

"'No; you won't.'

"'I mean I will go into the details of our transaction. * * * The notes are good, genuine, sir!'

"'Perfectly so,' I responded; 'I would stake my life on their soundness.'

"'Then, sir, permit a public servant to tell you that you would lose your life. Kindly let me look at these sound and genuine Bank of England notes.'

"What could I do but hand them to him!

"'Ah! as I thought,' he then exclaimed. 'Very skillful, very clever; decidedly so! Pity our pious friend here doesn't contrive to turn his thoughts in another direction; sad that he disdains to use his talents more honorably. Given such consummate cleverness, he might have surmounted almost anything by honest means. * * * These, sir, are rascally forgeries; splendidly worked out, I'll admit; but forgeries for all that!' he declared, emphatically, laying the notes down on my counter and placing his elbow on them. 'Now, I shouldn't wonder,' he resumed, 'if our reverend specimen of humanity here did not persuade you that he desired to make his daughter—his daughter a wedding present.'

"I said that such was really the fact.

"'Ah, just so! The old, old game; the old story. * * * I wonder, Dick ("Slippery Dick" is the name by which he is known among us and his companions)—I wonder, Dick, you don't alter your modus operandi—it is so stupidly stale, you know.'

"'Dick' looked daggers, looked as though he would like very much to annihilate the inspector on the spot, and retorted in language not at all befitting a clergyman: 'You're very clever, ain't you, now? Pah! I could "do" fifty like you. * * * It doesn't matter much, though. You've got me. You've trapped me nicely. What more d'ye want? * * * Look sharp, and let us go.'

"From this kind of talk I began to think him none other than what the inspector affirmed him to be—especially so when the man in office whipped off the silvery locks from his prisoner's head and disclosed to my wondering gaze a closely-cropped iron-gray head of hair beneath.

"'I should hope you don't want further proof?' the inspector interrogated, triumphantly.

"I replied that I was satisfied. That I had been singled out for a victim I now felt certain. In short, my dear boy, I was completely taken aback, and fell into the whole scheme."

"The whole scheme!" I exclaimed; "how? I scarcely understand."

"Don't interrupt. You shall hear directly; my melancholy story is fast drawing to a close. * * * Well, I looked from one to the other with perplexity on my face.

"'What are you thinking of doing, Mr. Inspector?' I asked.

"'Why, take this predatory individual—this pike among gudgeons—to the station (they'll have no mercy upon him this time); and you must accompany us thither. * * * I'll take care of these bits of paper; as in like manner I'll be the safe custodian of the artfully-contrived wedding-present.' Saying which he deposited the notes, the check and the diamonds in the breast-pocket of his overcoat.

"There was no help for it; of course I must go to the station. So, calling my assistant from the backroom, I instructed him to get a cab, and look after business during my absence. Of course I did not tell him the errand I was bound on; and, as luck would have it, he appeared not to notice that anything was wrong. It would, I must confess, have been difficult for Thomas, my then shopman, to have seen the handcuffed wrists of the pious-looking gentleman; for, to his credit be it said, the trapped fox had contrived to fasten the bottom buttons of his unusually long-tailed frock coat, and, placing his hands beneath, had thus managed to keep the iron bracelets out of sight. Still, there was a decidedly awkward appearance about him, and the heavily-limbed inspector certainly did not, by his attitude or manner, at all resemble a man bent on buying my wares or selling me his. However, Thomas seemed oblivious to what was taking place under his very nose, and hied him for a cab.

"The cab brought, the two entered first, while I remained behind for a few moments to give instructions to my shopman. Then I got inside the cab, and we started for Moor Lane Police Station, Fore street. I hadn't been seated long before I found that the prisoner's hands were free.

"'That's all right,' the inspector said, noticing my look of surprise. 'He's promised me to behave himself; and, between ourselves, I don't like to iron a man if I can get him to give in quietly. Besides, our designing friend, with all his cunning, knows who he's got to deal with—that I am more than a match for him. Don't you fear, sir; he won't easily slip through my fingers!'

"Well, at length we arrived at the station-house. I was the first to alight from the cab, and was about to enter the station. The inspector, still seated with his prisoner, called to me with evident annoyance: 'There's no light in the superintendent's room; we'll have to wait a little. However, there's no help for it. You go into that room there, the first door on the right; you'll find newspapers and records there. Amuse yourself. I'll cage my bird—put him under lock and key (safe bind, safe find, you know), and then I'll come to you. I'll be here in a few minutes. If I remain away any length of time, ask for Inspector John Tricklet. * * * Pray do not mention our business to any living soul.'

"Like a fool and the unsuspecting jackass I was, I did as I was bid. I turned the handle of the door, and entered the room, a square, dreary apartment, possessed of nothing to speak of save a huge deal table, four spindle-legged chairs, a map of London and an almanac, and, excepting a framed engraving representing a life-boat making slow progress over a boiling sea, the walls were bare of pictures. In my then state of mind the place seemed horribly monotonous. However, I took up the only newspaper the room boasted of, and seated myself to wait for the end.

"It speedily came. I hadn't been seated long before I heard the cab drive away. 'Ah,' I said to myself, 'the man in blue's too economical to let "cabby" wait; I suppose I shall be detained here some time. Was there ever anything so disagreeable!'

"Fifteen minutes passed. During that time I fidgeted about. There is no disguising the matter; I was terribly perturbed. The most idiotic thoughts passed through my brain. 'What if,' I found myself asking, 'this sham clergyman should prove my destruction? What if, after serving his punishment, he should out of revenge come to my shop and blow out my brains! What'—But I thought all manner of things which I won't bother you with. Suffice it that another fifteen minutes passed. I rose from my seat, but, before I could move a yard toward the door, it opened, and a fine-looking old gentleman—evidently the superintendent—stood before me. We were soon on good terms; I gave him my name, and explained my advent, and explained why I was cooped in what he called his 'private-inquiry office.' He seemed, when I had finished, to labor hard to keep down a laugh.

"'Well,' he said at length, 'you've been done nicely! But you have this consolation, that others have been bit—and to a pretty tidy tune, too. You say you are waiting for "Inspector John Tricklet." There's no such party of that name connected with this station. They've carried on a similar game, varied a little, very successfully in all the large towns in Ireland, Scotland and Wales, to say nothing about what they've done abroad. * * Tricklet! Ah, a very apt name! The game's been contrived by a trick—and he—they—have let you in the hole. * * * You mustn't suppose me a Job's-comforter when I say that dozens have been swindled by these two clever vultures. They are nothing else; they prey on their kind as best they may. But this is poor talk, Mr. Filby. Let me assure you, to be serious, that all that can be done shall be done. But what can we do? What can Scotland Yard do? They can only issue a caution to tradesmen generally, and put the matter in the Hue and Cry, which probably won't amount to much. And between you and me, Mr. Filby, I've repeatedly thought (and very seriously, too,) that they've got some of our fellows in their pay; I could all but swear it; for, were it not so, I am confident they'd have been taken long ago.'

"Heartily disgusted, I bade him a surly good-day, and hied me for my shop and counting-house fire. Its genial blaze, however, cheered me not. I was dispirited and chagrined, and possessed of a deep-rooted idea that my hitherto clear brain had gotten a superabundance of mud in it. I felt that I could tear my hair and beat my breast and yell out that I was profoundly miserable.

"But why dwell upon the matter. The story is told."—Chambers' Journal.

Comparing a Sermon to a Shirt.

While on the subject of sermons, I cannot resist repeating a conversation between a friend and his farm-servant, which illustrates the remark already made, that an Irishman is rarely at a loss for a reply or an excuse.

"That was a good sermon, was it not, that we had last Sunday?" said the gentleman.

"True for you, yer honor, an illigant one! It done me a power of good intirely."

"I'm glad of that. Can you tell me what particularly struck you! What was it about?"

"Oh, well," scratching his head, "I don't rightly—not just exactly know. I —a—I—A'—where's the use in telling lies? Sure, I don't remember one single 'dividual word of it, good or bad. Sorra a bit of me knows what it was about at all."

"And yet you say it did you a power of good!"

"So it did, sir. I'll stick to that."

"I don't see how."

"Well now, yer honor, look here. There's my shirt that the wife is after washing; and clean and white it is, by reason of all the water and the soap and the starch that's gone through it. But not a drop of 'em all—water, or soap, or starch, or blue—has stayed in, d'ye see. And that's just the same with me and that sermon. It's run through me, yer honor, an' it's dried out of me; but all the same, just like my Sunday shirt, I'm the better and the cleaner after it."

There was more philosophy than he was aware of in the quaint reasoning of the man. An impression for good or evil is often left upon the mind and bears fruit, when what has caused the influence has passed away from our memories.—Chambers' Journal.

The Perils of Being Wealthy.

An interesting case involving the personal liberty of the individual is that of Capt. Holm, just tried in Boston. The case is a very remarkable one thoughout. A son of Capt. Holm, who owed his father a large sum of money, hit upon the novel way of paying the debt by having his father locked up as a lunatic, and in this bold plot the wife conspired with the son. The ground for the abduction was that he was not able to take care of the property that he had himself made. Two doctors, on the strength of very short interviews—one breakfasted with him and noticed that he did not enter into conversation with the family—readily signed the certificate of his insanity, and the son, under pretense of desiring an interview, got the father in a hack and he was carried off. Some of the Captain's friends finally interposed in his behalf, but it took over a week to secure his freedom, which only shows how much easier it is to get a man into an insane asylum than it is to get him out. Among other rich developments that came out on the trial was the confession of one of the doctors that he was paid and retained by the dutiful son's counsel to certify that the old gentleman was crazy. Another doctor, testifying as an expert, gave it as his opinion that Capt. Holm was insane, although he was not asked, as he should have been on the cross-examination, if he had been bribed by the son or the wife to give such an opinion. It is simply shocking to think that a sane man may be deprived of his liberty and locked up in an insane asylum, as the result of a conspiracy on the part of the members of his own family, in order that they may gobble the estate.

PRECIOUS METALS.

Entire Amount Taken from the Earth Since the Creation.

Apropos of this golden epoch and age of silver bonanzas, we learn from the most reliable sources of information that, from the earliest times to the commencement of the Christian era, the amount of precious metals obtained from the surface and mines of the earth is estimated to be $4,000,000,000; from the latter epoch to the discovery of America, another sum of $4,000,000,000 was obtained from the date of the latter event to 1842, an addition of $9,000,000,000 was made; that extensive working of Russian gold mines in 1843 to the close of 1842 was $1,000,000,000 more; the double discovery of the California gold mines in 1848 and those of Australia in 1851 added to the close of last year $5,000,000,000, making a grand total at the present time of $23,000,000,000.

The average loss by abrasion of coins is estimated to be a tenth of 1 per cent. per annum, and the average loss by consumption in the arts and destruction by fire and shipwreck at $2,000,000 to $8,000,000 per annum. The amount of the precious metals now in existence is estimated to be $13,000,000,000, of which gold furnishes $7,000,000,000 and silver the remainder. Of the amount now in existence, $8,000,000,000 is estimated to be in coin and bullion, $3,000,000,000 in watches, and the remainder in plate, jewelry and ornaments. Of the amount now in existence, $7,000,000,000 is estimated to have been obtained from America, $3,000,000,000 from Asia (including Australia and New Zealand), $2,000,000,000 from Europe and the remainder from Africa.

Prior to the commencement of the Christian era the annual product of the precious metals was about $2,000,000; from the commencement of the Christian era to the discovery of America it was $3,000,000; in 350 years it attained to $25,000,000; during the decade immediately succeeding, 1842 to 1852, it was $1,000,000,000, and since the double discovery of the California and Australia mines, 1853 to 1872, it has averaged $256,000,000. The annual production of the precious metals attained its acme in 1853, when it was $282,000,000.

The increase in the amount of the precious metals in existence has been greater during the last twenty-five years than during the previous 140. With such magnificent results before us, is it not singular that California and the Pacific slope do not cut a more imposing figure in the world of commerce?—San Francisco Era.

Murdered Her Children.

A most brutal murder was recently committed near Victoria, Mo. A widow woman named Mary Dean had been living in a little farm house with three of her children. She told her little boy, Willie, aged 8 years, to sit on the side of the bed and hold the youngest child in his arms for a few moments, and, as he did so, she drew a razor from her bosom, and told him she was going to kill him and the rest of the children. As she attempted to put her threat into execution, the little fellow grabbed the razor with his left hand, and succeeded in wrenching it from the handle, badly lacerating two of his fingers. He then made his escape, and, running to the house of a neighbor, gave the alarm. Two of the neighbors went to the scene, but before reaching the house they met Mrs. Dean on the road and asked her where she was going. She replied that she had put her children out of the way and was going to give herself up, and they could do as they pleased with her. They took her in charge and went back to the house, and there a most sickening spectacle presented itself. The two youngest children, aged about 18 months and 5 years respectively, were lying stretched in death on the bed, with their throats cut from ear to ear.

American Officers in Egypt.

The bankrupt Khedive of Egypt has been forced to disband seven-eighths of his army of 40,000 or 50,000 men, including all the American officers who organized it, except Gen. Stone, chief of staff. There was quite an exodus of Northern and Southern officers (some of them recommended by Gen. Sherman whose daughter the Khedive presented with costly diamonds in return) to Egypt between 1869 and 1875, where "the richest Prince in the world," as the Khedive was believed to be, received them with open arms. Not only were they given prominent positions, but the most influential of them were furnished with private residences and retinues of fellah servants. They overcame many obstacles, and built up an army that was a credit to Egypt, though a costly one. Some of the American officers conducted successful expeditions of exploration or conquest, as that of Col. Long to the Nyassa lakes and of Maj. Prout to Kordofan. They became Pashas, Beys and lesser dignitaries, but many of them have left the service since the Khedive's financial troubles began. Those who remained to be discharged have been unable to get anything from the Egyptian treasury for some time, and most of them are still trying to settle up their accounts with the Government and the native traders.

A Speaking Calculation.

"I have calculated," said the eminent arithmetic man, "that the average man speaks three hours a day, at the average speed of 100 words a minute, say twenty-nine octavo pages an hour, or 600 a week; consequently, in the course of a year, the average man talks fifty-two large volumes."

"Sir," said one of the audience, a man of scant respect for the sex to which he owed his mother, "does your calculation also apply to a woman?"

"It does, sir," coldly replied the eminent arithmetic man; "all you have to do is this," and he added a 0 to the 52.

THE MODERN FARMER.

The pipe of the quail in the stubble-field
The scent of the new-mown hay;
And all day long the shout and the song
Of the reapers so far away.

The restless racket amid the grain,
The noise of the reaping-machine
And ever again the howl of pain
Comes over the meadows green.

Oh, sweet is the field where the meadow-lark lits
And sings, as it soars and dives;
Where the Granger sits, and yells as he gits
His fingers among the knives.

No longer we hear on the hillside sere
The scythe-stone's clinkety-clink;
But the reaping-machine cuts his leg off, I ween,
Before ever the man can think.

With foreboding and fears his good wife [illegible]
The map of the [illegible]
To return, in sooth, with a horse-rake tooth
Sticking four inches out of his eye.

When the threshers come with halloo and din,
How [illegible]
When they pause to scan what is left of the man
Chewed up in an eight-horse power.

Oh lithe and listen! From over the hills,
What [illegible]
'Tis the stoker who fell, and, awful to tell,
The steam harrow ran over his legs.

Thus all day long, with mirth and song,
They laugh at the dread alarms;
Though the waving field shall its harvest yield
Of fingers and legs and arms.

Then pity the sorrows of a poor old Granger,
Whose mangled limbs have borne him to the fence;
Who braved, with reckless courage, untold danger,
And ran his farm with modern implements.

BRONZE JOHN.

Horrors of the Southern Scourge.

(Condensed from our Southern Exchanges.)

The driver of a charity wagon, while passing a house on Poydras street, New Orleans, heard a shriek of agony within, and, entering the premises, quickly ascended a flight of rickety stairs leading to a side alley. He hurried into a back bedroom, and was startled to behold the yellow corpse of a child lying upon a filthy bed. Seated in a rocking-chair and clutching a palmetto fan in one hand and resting heavily upon the bed sat a woman, whom, upon closer inspection, he was shocked to see was stark and stiff. The cries continued, and he hurried to the front apartment, into which the room opened. There upon the floor lay a mother and daughter dead. The older woman had evidently thrown herself on the floor in a frenzy of delirium. Upon the only bed in the room, writhing with fever, lay the man whose call attracted attention, and a child 18 months old had at the time crawled over her dead sister and was pulling the dress from off her dead mother's breast.

In the loft of an old dilapidated building on Bienville street, New Orleans, was discovered a family of seven, five of whom were delirious; one, a child of 2 years, dead, and a mother prostrate upon a pallet with a new-born babe. The mother, with many tears, stated that, utterly unassisted and unable to move, she lay in the pangs of childbirth and saw her little daughter die.

One of the visitors of the Howard Association, in Memphis, encountered a scene of horror upon entering a house on Commerce street. Upon a bed lay the living and the dead; a husband cold and stiff, and a wife in the agony of dissolution. On the floor, tossing in delirium, were two children of this pair, and beside them their two cousins, two little girls, themselves sick. To complete the sadness of the scene, and give it a touch of disgusting horror, a drunken man and a drunken woman, parents of the little fever-baked girls, were reeling, and cursing, and stumbling over the dying and the dead.

A lady who recently arrived in St. Louis from Grenada, Miss., says: "The scene was terrible. The dead were buried in the clothes in which they died. Sometimes the hearse hurried away, leaving the remains on the ground, no grave being dug. Food was terribly scarce for over a week. She had eaten only bread. The atmosphere was heavy with poison. It could be tasted in the air, and it was impossible to remove it with disinfectants."

"Inhuman deeds, some of the most atrocious," says a Memphis paper, "hourly come to notice. Undertaker Walsh, who buries the paupers, has for some days collected the bodies in piles at a livery stable, allowing them to lie until he has enough to make up a wagon-load before hauling them to the potter's field. A young man named Hudson left his mother and sister low with fever, with only strangers to care for them, and fled the city. A man named Charles Bennett has a wife and children sick on Robinson street. A darkey nurse from the Howards is alone in attendance. The husband and father goes each morning to look over the fence, and inquires how they are, but does not venture nearer."

A charity wagon containing two dead bodies, in rough, unpainted pine coffins, drove up to the office of the Recorder of Deaths, in New Orleans, for a burial permit. One, containing a woman, was piled upon the top of the other, and surmounting the ghastly heap sat a faithful dog and the woman's husband, who accompanied her to the potter's field to note the spot where they laid her. Empty coffins had been brought from the work-house and driven around to the scenes of death as one might drive around and gather up so much garbage. The driver started on a round through the rain, and after about an hour returned with two other bodies for two permits. The clerk on duty said that this was his fifth visit, and three other wagons perform the same office. It is of course understood that these instances are exclusively confined to the miserably poor. They have indeed suffered terribly. Instances do sometimes occur which are extremely sad. A little girl of 11 years was so unfortunate as to be attacked in the house of a cousin on Magazine street, where two children died and two were sick. The evening she expired another of the household was attacked and the unfortunate girl's body lay in the undertaker's warehouse during the night, and was not buried till the next day.

Of the horrors of the plague in Memphis, a correspondent graphically writes:

"When I look out on the dark, silent street, and these vapors are wafted through the open window, I feel the oppressiveness of the presence of death with that horrible odor of carbolic acid which arises from the little saucers beneath the coffin. It is a city without a people, this. The echo of my music, as I whistle to keep my courage up, comes back with a sort of a wail which jars on my ear. It is almost as bad as a midnight stroll in a graveyard, one's imagination assisting to picture the hand of death reaching out from the corner of every bad-smelling alley. To have lived in Memphis for the past ten days is almost to have grown gray with fright. The wild panic which seized the city, the scramble for foothold on steamboat-deck or car-platform, the agony of fright pictured everywhere, on every one's face, were trying enough to the stoutest. More trying, however, it has been to see the death-rate gradually crawl up, to see familiar names on the death-roll and in the record of the smitten, to witness the monster fingers of death relaxing and stretching forth to grasp a wider hold on the doomed city. Then the hearses begin to go by on a trot, and a man mathematically inclined could sit down and figure on his chances, and from the ratio of 'deaths' to 'new cases' learn that if attacked by fever he would hold the chance of one out of two principals in a duel where but one pistol was loaded with ball, the space being over a handkerchief, and he must choose his weapon blindfolded. Ugh! I am but human, and I shiver myself at the thought. No wonder, then, that so few are left, held by necessity, or a higher purpose, noble and philanthropic. No wonder that five physicians have turned patients themselves, and on their own prescriptions sought a cooler clime. The panic that made ours a silent, sleeping city, however, was a godsend. It snatched from the monster the human lives upon which he feeds. To increase the exodus has been the aim of the benevolent societies. You have read of the Government's charity, of its thousands of tents and its thousands of rations, a gratis presentation to our distressed city. The tents are pitched on high hills in regularly-governed camps about the city.

"The benevolence of a hundred cities is sending food for their poor unemployed occupants, and 'leave the city or die,' is the cry of the true men who are fighting with all of human strength this awful scourge. Strange to say, many will not accept their offer of safety, but cling to their hovel homes though death grins upon them from every crack in the wall.

"I could 'a tale unfold' which would harrow the soul of every person who read this—a long, pathetic tale, made up of dark chapters of human suffering, where death has played his horrible part in hundreds of domestic tragedies. It touches the heart, it makes the sympathetic soul bleed, the sight of such things as are being enacted in this city to-night. Terrible deaths of delirium, horrible ravings of fever, widowhood born, orphanage brought into life—great God! what miseries, what anguish, what sorrows! I could write you of families buried from the same hearse the same day; of waifs picked up trying in baby way to kiss the pale, vomit-splashed features of a mother back into life—but then I cannot. The man who lives through these surrounding scenes turns with horror from their description."

Considerable excitement was raised on Second street, Memphis, by the appearance of a patient, who, in the delirium of fever, escaped from his nurse and walked into a saloon, calling for a drink of whisky and a glass of ice water. The bar-tender did not notice the man's condition until he had drunk the whisky, when the nurse rushed in, accompanied by two or three others, and, securing the patient with great difficulty, returned to his room. He proved to be J. B. Barker, a compositor on the Appeal.

ROYAL WAGES.

The Pecuniary Allowance Paid to Foreign Potentates.

Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, born in August, 1830, has a civil list (as his salary is commonly called) of $4,650,000 a year.

Leopold II., King of Belgium, born in April, 1835, has a civil list of $660,000 a year.

Christian IX., King of Denmark, born in April, 1818, has a civil list of 500,000 rigsdalers, or $277,775. His eldest son has an annual allowance of $33,333.

Marshal MacMahon, President of the French republic, has an annual salary of $120,000, with an extra $60,000 for household expenses. President Thiers had the same salary, with $77,560 for housekeeping.

Napoleon III. had the largest civil list in the world. It amounted to $5,000,000 a year, in addition to which he received the income of the crown domains, amounting to $2,400,000, and the free possession of a number of palaces, parks, forests and mansions kept at the expense of the state. His total income reached the sum of $7,800,000. Nevertheless, the debts on the imperial civil list were stated in 1867 to amount to $16,000,000.

William I., born in March 1797, receives no salary as German Emperor. His annual salary as King of Prussia is $3,079,790. Most of the expenditure of the royal family and the court is defrayed out of the sovereign's immense private property.

Ludwig II., King of Bavaria, born in August, 1845, has a civil list of $1,378,865. Karl I., King of Wurtemberg, born in March, 1823, has a civil list of $391,685, with an additional annual grant of $1,357,350 for the other members of the royal family. Albert I., King of Saxony, born April, 1828, has a civil list of $635,000, with an additional $127,950 a year for the Princes and Princesses. This latter grant may be justifiable, as in 1830 the reigning monarch surrendered his domains to become the property of the state.

The Grand Duke of Baden has a civil list of $374,655 for himself and the members of his family. The hereditary landed property of this dynasty, valued at $20,830,000, has been made over to the state. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who claims to be the only European sovereign of Slavonic origin, pretends that he can trace his descent to Genseric, King of the Vandals, who conquered Spain in the fifth century, and, going over to Africa, took Carthage in 439 A. D. In his full title he styles himself "Prince of the Vandals." He has no civil list, but is absolute owner of one-fifth of the whole area of the Liliputian duchy which he governs. The Grand Duke of Hesse, son-in-law of Queen Victoria, has a civil list of $328,716 for the support of himself, his near relatives and his little court at Darmstadt.

The civil list of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg is $125,000; of Brunswick, $250,000; of Saxe-Weimer, $210,000; of Saxe-Meiningen, $90,000; of Anhalt, $145,000; of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, $100,000; of Saxe-Altenburg, $107,250; of Waldeck, $183,675; of Lippe, $50,000; of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, $60,000; of Schwarzburg-Sonderhausen, $110,000; of Schaumburg-Lippe, $125,000.

The Grand Dukes of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Reuss-Schleiz and Reuss-Greiz absolutely own most of the states which they govern. It is full time for the whole of these petty sovereigns to be absorbed under one ruler, so as to constitute a real German empire.

Victoria, Queen of England, born in May, 1819, has a civil list of $1,925,000, with $300,000 from the Duchy of Lancaster, one of the crown lands which she did not surrender, according to contract with Parliament, to the state. Thus, her annual income is $2,225,000. To her children and to the Duke of Edinburgh is paid a further sum of $880,000, making a total of 3,105,000 to British royalty.

George I., King of Greece, born in December, 1845, has a civil list of $260,800 a year. Humbert of Italy, born in 1844, has not accepted the large civil list ($3,250,000) granted to his late father. William III., King of the Netherlands, born in February, 1810, has a salary of $250,000, with an addition of half as much more for members of the royal family. He and the King of Wurtemburg are believed to be the richest sovereigns in Europe. The whole grants to Louis I., of Portugal, born in 1838, and his family amount to $660,000 a year.

Alexander II., of Russia, born in April, 1818, possesses the revenue from the immense crown domains, equal to $10,000,000 a year. Alphonso XII., of Spain, born in November, 1857, has a civil list of $2,000,000. Oscar II., King of Sweden and Norway, born in January, 1829, has a civil list of $338,330 from Sweden and $94,445 from Norway. He also has an annuity of $83,330, voted many years ago to Carl XIV. (Bernadotte) and his successors on the throne of Sweden; the total is $416,105 per annum.

The President of the Swiss republic, who has only a single-year term, receives $3,000 per annum. Nevertheless, Switzerland is well governed.

There is no knowing what is the salary or income of Abdul Hamid, Sultan of Turkey, born September, 1842. The civil list of Abdul Aziz, who was almost his immediate predecessor, varied from $4,557,580, in 1868, to $5,351,020 in 1875, but it has been calculated on good authority that in the latter years of his reign, which closed in May, 1876, Abdul Aziz spent $22,500,000. It is not near that amount just now.

Lord Lytton receives £25,000 a year salary, and £12,000 for "allowances" as Viceroy of India. The Duke of Marlborough gets £20,000 a year as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Earl of Dufferin had £10,000 salary as Viceroy of Canada.

Keeping Things Lively.

Two women caught sight of each other in one of our dry-goods stores the other day, and, rushing forward simultaneously with outspread arms, nearly dislocated one another's noses in trying to find each other's mouths.

"Why, la! bless you, Mrs. Hixley, I'm so glad to see you," said one, with a quick, nervous voice, as she fell back a little after the scrimmage, and furled her features into a look of satisfied joy, warm enough to soften ice. "You're looking so splendidly well, too; it's a wonder I knew you. I wouldn't, though, I don't think, if you hadn't smiled first. But, dear me, what a dreadful long time it's been since I saw you—it seems an age. You live in Middletown yet, I suppose?"

"Oh mercy, no—we left three months ago and moved to Hamilton."

"You don't say!"

"Yes—but you? I was remarking to Hix the other day that I'd lost all track of you."

"We're in Lawrenceburg now, and I do so wish you could come and see us. I've got so much to tell you. You wouldn't believe how times have changed with us. Got a nice home now and everything nice—three bedrooms up stairs, large hall, elegant parlor, lovely sitting-room, splendid dining-room, pantry and kitchen, big yard and garden and the sweetest lot of plants you ever saw—and d'ye think? Alex has really got to like flowers—anyhow he don't upset 'em any more and growl all the time about their always being in the way."

"But Louise?"

"What! hadn't you heard it? We sent you a paper with the notice. Why, she's been married six months nearly."

"You don't tell me! But how did she do?"

"Splendid! A widower with a farm and three children, and a church member, too. He's not so much for looks, but he's an awful good man, and stands high in the neighborhood. She couldn't 'a done better."

"That is nice; but is he good to her?"

"Oh, yes—too good, I tell him sometimes. But they do get along the nicest kind—as happy as larks all the time. It almost brings the tears to hear her call him an old fool and a bald-headed idiot as soon as he steps into the house. She always was so lively, you know."

"What! Do they quarrel a'ready?" inquired the Middletown lady, with a pained look of anxiety.

"Why, no—certainly not, never—you couldn't hire 'em to."

"But you said she called him horrid names, and threw up his looks."

"Oh, yes, of course, and she may even spank the children right before his eyes, and tell them they are a pack of good-for-nothing thick-headed little beggars; but then it's only her way, you know, and she don't mean anything by it, of course. It's only a way she has of being cheerful and keeping things 'livened up around the house. I tell you, Louisa ain't going to let the dust settle around her much, no matter where she is."—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

How They Buy and Sell in Madrid.

A nut-brown maid is attracted by a brilliant red and yellow scarf. She asks the sleepy merchant, nodding before his wares:

"What is this rag worth?"

He answers, with profound indifference:

"Ten reals."

"Hombre! are you dreaming or crazy?"

She drops the coveted neck-gear, and moves on, apparently horror-stricken.

"Don't be rash! The scarf is worth twenty reals; but, for the sake of Santissima Maria, I offer it to you at half price. Very well! You are not suited. What will you give?"

"Caramba! Am I a buyer and seller as well? The thing is worth three reals—more is simple robbery."

"Maria! Jose! and all the family! We cannot trade. Sooner than sell for eight reals I shall raise the cover of my brains! Go, thou! It is 8 in the morning, and still thou dreamest."

She lays down the scarf reluctantly, saying:

"Five."

But the outraged merchant snorts, scornfully:

"Eight was my last word! Go!"

She moves away, thinking how well that scarf would look in the Apollo Gardens, and casts over her shoulder a Parthian glance, and bids—

"Six!"

"Take it! It is madness, but I cannot waste my time in bargaining."

Both congratulate themselves on the operation. He would have taken five, and she would have given seven.

IRELAND'S DECAY.

How Emigration and Famine Have Depopulated the "Old Sod"

[From the Cincinnati Commercial.]

Reliable statistics of the history of Ireland during the last thirty years present some startling facts. At the beginning of the present century the population of that country was about 5,400,000. From that it increased until in 1841 it was over 8,000,000, and, before the great famine of 1846–7, it probably was 500,000 more. The following table shows the changes that have taken place since 1800:

Year.	Population.	Year.	Population.
1800	5,395,456	1855	6,013,103
1810	5,960,917	1861	5,764,543
1821	6,801,827	1871	5,366,708
1831	7,767,401	1876	5,321,618
1841	8,196,597	1877	[illegible]
1851	[illegible]	1878	[illegible]

The improvement since 1876 is comparatively so small as to hardly justify an expectation that it will be permanent. The causes of this rapid decrease in the population may be accounted for by the enormous emigration of this people to this country, the number, in round numbers, being nearly 2,000,000, and another 1,000,000 to Australia, Canada, and other countries. The number of emigrants to this country was as follows:

Period.	Emigration.
1820 to 1840 inclusive	56,234
1841 to 1850 inclusive	162,332
1851 to 1860 inclusive	748,740
1861 to 1870 inclusive	444,786
Fiscal year 1871 (three-fourths)	36,624
Fiscal year 1872	69,761
Fiscal year 1873	75,848
Fiscal year 1874	47,688
Fiscal year 1875	29,989
Fiscal year 1876	16,500
Fiscal year 1877	13,792
Fiscal year 1878 (estimated)	12,000

In addition to the number here given, several hundred thousand have come here either by the way of Canada or as if from "Great Britain." Among other causes to which this abandonment of Ireland is attributed is the diminished area of land sown, and the diminished production of grain, potatoes, and other food. The decrease in population has been uniform with the decrease in the area cultivated. The following table shows the acreage of each principal crop for the years given:

	1857. Acres.	1867. Acres.	1877. Acres.
Wheat	2,748,380	261,034	149,214
Barley		172,032	226,601
Oats		1,660,511	1,471,691
Rye, beans and peas		21,229	20,227
Potatoes	1,159,707	1,001,781	871,531
Turnips and swedes	....	335,728	336,201
All other green crops	....	94,843	147,130
Flax	97,721	253,257	123,363

With the exception of the great increase of horned cattle from 1857 to 1867 there has also been a general decrease in the number of live stock. The official estimate of live stock in Ireland is as follows:

Live Stock.	1857. Number.	1867. Number.	1877. Number.
Horses	610,718	....	552,701
Cattle	640,701	3,702,378	3,996,027
Sheep	3,487,785	4,826,015	3,989,171
Pigs*	1,402,812	1,234,893	1,467,990

*Exclusive of those kept in towns and by cottagers.

While in proportion to the population the number of live stock has slightly increased, the picture presented is not a pleasing one.

There are evidences of increasing poverty on every hand. In 1857 the number of paupers receiving assistance from unions, etc., was 50,094; in 1867, 68,650, and in 1877, 85,530—about double the proportion of twenty years before.

Rapid Transit in New York.

Another new link in the great chain of rapid transit has been completed. The New York Elevated railroad, running up on the east side of the city, was opened recently to the public. Trains are now running from the Grand Central depot to the South Ferry. It is thought that the east side road will prove less noisy than that on the west side. In any case, steam transit was a necessity for the metropolis, and, though the companies are in duty bound to do all they can to abate the noise, yet individuals will be compelled to put up with any unavoidable annoyance due to the presence of the elevated railroads in view of the benefits which they are destined to confer on the community at large. The horse car had its day, and gave rise to its annoyances. We now enter definitely upon the era of rapid transit, which, unfortunately, cannot be free from annoyances of its own. No rose without a thorn.—New York Graphic.

A GERMAN writer recalls how, at the Paris Exposition in 1855, Louis Napoleon visited the German department of the great show. Just as he arrived, a Prussian helmet, the topmost one of a lofty pyramid that had evidently for days retained its position by the frailest tenure, rolled down and along the floor to his feet. The German attendants were in consternation, and Bonaparte himself gazed at the warlike headgear for a moment in astonishment. Soon, however, the expression changed to a sardonic smile. He evidently saw in the helmet at his feet the augury of defeat and humiliation for the power that it represented.

AN active volcano has put in an appearance in Humboldt county, Cal., and is throwing up stones and fire. This is in harmony with the periodical earthquake shocks experienced on the Pacific coast.

When We Demoralize the Stomach

By excesses or imprudence in eating, we cannot hope to escape the consequences for any great length of time. The most robust digestion must succumb to abuses of that important function. But, supposing that we have been foolish enough to enfeeble the stomach, is the damage irreparable? By no means. The dyspeptic has only to do two things to insure his ultimate recovery. First he should adopt an easily-digestible diet. Second, he should use with regularity and persistence Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the leading gastric invigorant of the age. The multiform symptoms of dyspepsia, and the almost invariably attendant disorders, biliousness and constipation, will assuredly cease to persecute the sufferer, if the above advice is attended to. Who that has suffered the torments that chronic indigestion inflicts will neglect to take advantage of a remedy which, if the most positive evidence of the medical profession and the public is to be received with due credence, is an absolute specific for the complaint.

WILHOFT'S TONIC.—THE GREAT FAVORITE!—The popular Chill Cure of the age! Composed of pure and simple drugs. Wilhoft's Tonic has long had the highest place in the long line of remedies for Chills and Fever. It is not only Anti-Periodic but is Anti-Panic, for it curtails the heavy expense of doctors' visits, where friendly calls are all itemized in the account current. A penny saved is a penny gained, and saving it in this way adds to health and comfort. Try Wilhoft's Tonic as a certainty and you will never regret it. FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Can the Truth Overtake a Lie?

Investigation discloses the fact that the lady reported in the Associated Press dispatches, about August 15th, to have died in Chicago after two weeks' use of some reputed remedy for corpulency, had not taken Allan's Anti-Fat, but had used a preparation put up by a regular physician in Luzerne, Pa. Allan's Anti-Fat is manufactured in Buffalo, N. Y., by the undersigned. We have already sold over 100,000 bottles of it. It has therefore been taken by thousands, and we challenge proof that it has ever harmed anybody, unless the reduction of obese persons from 20 to 60 pounds, leaving them healthy and strong, is considered a misfortune. Furthermore; we hereby offer $5,000 reward for evidence showing that it contains poisonous or injurious ingredients. We also offer $5,000 if we cannot prove that it has reduced numbers of persons as stated herein, and always without injury. It is said a lie will outtravel the truth any time; but we trust that those newspapers that have misled the public by saying that physicians attributed the lady's death to the use of Anti-Fat (which is only put up by us, the term "Anti-Fat" being our trade mark), will correct the false impression they have conveyed, by publishing this refutation.

BOTANIC MEDICINE CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

They Don't Know It.

Some people don't know that they are being swindled every time they buy an inferior, short-weight, baking powder. It would be far better to buy and use the old reliable DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER. Public Speaking!

WATERLOO, THURSDAY, SEPT. 19,
At 2 o'clock P. M.

HON. D. W. VOORHEES.

AT WATERLOO, SEPTEMBER 14th, in the evening.

Hon. J. G. Shanklin.

Hon. John B. Stoll,

Democratic candidate for Congress, will speak at Corunna, Tuesday evening Sept. 17th, 1878.

Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks speaks at Columbia City, Friday, Sept. 13th, and at Albion, September 24th.

John E. Lamb, Esq., will speak at Waterloo Thursday, Sept. 19th with Hon. D. W. Voorhees.

The Garrett Herald devotes a great portion of its editorial page to the ridicule and abuse of the Greenbackers.

The Warsaw Union is inclined to feel a little sore over Stoll's nomination for Congress. What's the matter, Frank?

The Republicans of Noble county have endorsed Nelson Prentiss the greenback candidate for the Legislature. Oh, no! the Republican party don't trade any.

The Democrats of Indiana would do well to raise a campaign fund sufficient to induce John Sherman to stump the state in the interests of radicalism. Every speech he makes in the west will add to the Democratic majority.

On Thursday, Sept. 19th, Hon. D. W. Voorhees will address the people of Northeastern Indiana at Waterloo, upon the questions that concern the interests of the great mass of people in this remarkable epoch.

Col. Williams, the Greenback candidate for Congress spoke to a small but attentive audience at the Court House last Saturday evening, devoting most of his time to the arraignment of the Republican party, claiming that it was responsible for the present hard times; before closing however he took occasion to object to the democratic party on the grounds that it might not better the condition of the country if it came into power, holding of course that the Nationals were the only hope of redemption.

Have You Heard From Maine?

The western "idea" on currency reform has struck her and shattered the rotten barge of radicalism to pieces. The democrats and greenbackers have carried the State Legislature which will elect a Democratic Governor, (the first in 30 years) and a successor to Hanibal Hamlin, besides electing Democratic—Greenback congressmen from the fourth and fifth districts in place of Hall and Powers. The united efforts of Hamlin, Blaine, Hale and Garfield were of no avail, fate was against them as it will be everywhere henceforth.

Auburn's Pet.

The following from the Chicago Tribune needs no explanation in this community: "Hazzard, the alleged Ind. fraud, was before Justice Pallack yesterday, and was discharged in the absence of prosecution. Before he had time to leave the court room he was rearrested by Constable McNabb upon a warrant issuing from Justice Meech's court, alleging 'obtaining money under false pretenses. The officer started down stairs with his prisoner, when a gang of Hazzard's friends, attorneys and witnesses crowded round the couple, separated them, and by systematic elbowing managed to prevent McNabb from securing his charge. Hazzard made use of the chance to escape and ran off, while McNabb was unable to free himself in time even to make a good showing in the chase. Hazzard had not been found up to the hour of closing court.

The yellow fever is still on the increase in the south, and late reports indicate danger even in our own state. The disease is spreading rapidly, large numbers of persons coming north are not permitted to stop in cities, but are allowed to pass through on fast trains and scatter about through northern States. Up to last Saturday the total number of cases and deaths in the most afflicted localities were as follows: New Orleans—total number of cases 4,669. Total number of deaths 1,395. Morgan City, La., cases 22, deaths 6, Vicksburg, Miss., cases 2,500, deaths 366, Grenada, no estimate, the town almost depopulated, Canton, Miss., cases 190, deaths 30, Holly Springs, cases 100, deaths 25; Memphis, cases cannot be ascertained, deaths over 500 per week; Hickman, Ky., cases 60, deaths 24. The fever exists at other places, but not to an alarming extent.

The history of the suffering and the incidents connected with this dreadful scourge will furnish subjects for a volume worth reading.

The following is a recapitulation of the number of destitute laboring people in DeKalb county, made so by the action of the Democrats in congress, according to a showing made last week by the leading Republican organ of the county, as follows:

"Nearly every Democrat in Congress voted to reduce the army, thus closing all the recruiting offices and sending an army of tramps over the country to pilege, murder and steal."

Number of tramps in DeKalb county who would have enlisted, . . .000

"In consequence of this reduction also, manufacturers of army supplies were compelled to shut down and thousands of families were made destitute."

Number of employes from DeKalb county engaged in the manufacture of army supplies. 000

"The Democrats refused to vote an appropriation to keep up the navy, and in consequence thousands were here discharged and thrown out of employment and deprived of the means of supplying their families."

(It is a fact beyond dispute that most soldiers in the regular army and navy are single men.) The number of this class of persons from DeKalb county who were discharged from the navy. 000

"They refuse to appropriate means for continuing the improvement of the harbors, and here again thousands are compelled to surrender ever-active employment."

Number of persons from DeKalb county who were engaged in the harbor improvement. 000

"Sixty-four girls were dismissed from their desks in the land office on Monday because the Democratic Congress failed to appropriate means to keep up this department fully."

SIXTY-FOUR, and of that number DeKalb county was represented by. 000

Total number of destitute persons in DeKalb county, made so by the action of Democrats in Congress. . .0000

This is a, a very fair showing, to be made by an acknowledged Republican leader, and will apply in the same rato to every county in the west. No person will deny that we are in the midst of hard times, but such argument as that quoted above fails to shift the responsibility from the Republican party, where it properly belongs.

Spencerville Items.

—We noticed the friendly form of C. Emanuel in town last week.

—Mr. Calvin Jones, of Wisconsin, is visiting friends in and near town.

—Dr. L. Houghton has finished his new house and now has the finest residence in town.

—Mr. T. Bishop will remove to St. Joe in a short time for the purpose of entering the mercantile business with Mr. J. D. Leighty.

—On Friday night of last week some person or persons entered the barns of John and Martin Davis, living south of town, and took from each a set of harness.

Sacrificing Principles for Men.

Under this head we find an article in the Columbia City Post of last week which we most heartily endorse. The argument produced concides with our views as published recently in the COURIER. The Post says: "Just at present it is no uncommon thing to hear men say, 'I do not care for party; I intend to vote for the best man.' This sounds well enough if we allow ourselves to be captivated by the mere sound, but if this principle were carried out our new democratic form of government would in a short time fall to the lowest standard of anarchy. It is by and through principle that governments are formed, and by ever rising issues that they are improved and perfected upon; and, in order to do this there is a necessity for two or more parties to exist, and these parties at the opening of every campaign make a declaration of the principles they will carry out if placed in power by the people. These platforms originate from representative men of either party, and are supposed to be what these men believe for the good of the country. These principles are submitted to the people; they are explained and elaborated upon by representative men of both parties, and the people must ultimately decide as to which principles are necessary for the maintenance of the government. Every vote cast should be and is a vote for principle, the man being a secondary matter, and is only the agent to put in force those especial issues. If a man receives the nomination upon a platform that you fully endorse, and you on account of a personal dislike for him or any other cause of greater or less consequence, refuse to vote for him, and cast your vote for the man standing upon a different platform and in a party whose principles you do not endorse, you are voting contrary to your own sentiments, and are, morally speaking, doing a great wrong by voting for principles that you believe are antagonistic to the good of yourself and your fellowman. This holds good in a local as well as in national or State politics, though the election of men of your own party to local offices may not be directly of as vital importance as that of national offices, yet it is the local organization that gives strength and vitality to the party in national matters, and the one cannot exist without the other. The local organization in each locality makes the necessary preparation for the advancement of the national organization in that especial locality. Consequently a strike at the humblest candidate is a strike at the greatest.

Cedar Creek Items.

—Frank Houser's wife has taken sick with the bilious fever.

—John Harvey, Esq., is sick with bilious fever.

—O. M. Merica and wife have recovered from their sickness.

—John Ammons is Dr. Kester's assistant and when the old doc is sick the assistent will go.

—Why not let our government establish the price on our produce and labor and have a standard price for all.

—Friends remember D. W. Voorhees on the 19th, the good old greenbacker. All go and hear him, it won't harm you in the least.

—Our friend F. M. Bacon came down to his lot in Butler Center last Saturday and on his way home he had bad luck. The bridge gave way and cast him and his horse into the swamp. It was hard to tell which was the best swimmer.

OCCASIONAL.

—James Reynolds is very poorly.

—Geo. Catlin has returned to his home in Ohio.

—Farmers are late sowing wheat on account of the wet weather.

—Occasional has quit work at the saw mill; he is now threshing.

Died Sept. 10th, Mrs. Anna Prince, the former wife of Noah Long.

—Sickness is still progressing, making sad havoc wherever it finds its way.

—Business is flourishing, the roads are getting good and the bridges are being re-built as fast as possible.

RAMBLER.

Hon. John E. Neff, Secretary of State, and Hon. J. G. Shanklin, candidate for that office, entertained the citizens of Auburn and vicinity at the Court House last evening. The political argument used by these gentlemen is presented in such a manner as to be effective and convincing. We knew of Mr. Neff's ability as a public speaker in former campaigns, therefore we were prepared to hear his forcible argument, but we must confess an argreable surprise at the ability of Mr. Shanklin as an orator, he presents ideas in beautiful language, and almost every sentence is closed in eloquence. He is but a young man and not generally known by the masses, though the time is not far distant when he will be acknowledged one of Indiana's ablest and most popular orators.

This gentlemen will speak at Waterloo next Saturday evening. Go and hear him.

The appointments for Mr. S. M. Hench and D. D. Moody at Jackson Center and Butler Center, Sept. 12 and 13 have been withdrawn, owing to prior appointments made for Mr. Hench for the same dates in Whitley county. Other appointments will be made for those places, and due notice will be given.

LaOtto Items.

—LaOtto has a carpet factory.

—George Bilger opened a select school last Monday at LaOtto.

—Howard of Wallen yelled a greenback oration to the good people of this place last Tuesday evening.

—Jess Hosack, in connection with Mr. Hilt has opened a wagon and carriage shop at Young's old stand.

—O. M. Reed, of Waterloo, gave LaOtto a call last Saturday for the purpose of organizing a musical convention.

—Thomas Shields, of Platsburg, N. Y., is visiting with his son Bob, who is at present a guest of the 'Exchange."

—We desire "Rambler" of Cedar Creek to return that lost lady belonging to LaOtto if he finds her, as we are rather "short" in that production." My daughter, Oh, my daughter."

—The greenback convention at Swan took place last Friday as advertised. The honest sons of toil—or in other words—Ben Harrison's "Idiots," turned out to a man.

Major J. W. Gordon, of Indianapolis, in an interview a few days since was asked:

"Are you for Orth because you believe him to be an honest, pure man?

To which the Major replied:

"I am for Orth because he is the Republican nominee for Congress. He was nominated by a Convention of his neighbors, and I haven't time to go behind the returns and investigate. I advocate the principles of the party."

How does that tie up with republican doctrine up this way?

A large lot of hats and other millinery goods of the latest styles just received and will be closed out with the balance of the stock at cost, to quit business, by H. H. Stamets.

School Library Benefit.

Ever since the opening of the public schools in the new building one of the most serious obstacles to the work of the upper grades has been the want of suitable books of reference.

We have no reference books at all, and yet we need them every day. Text-books are brief; and many things concerning which pupils would like to have and ought to have more information, necessarily receive but a passing notice.

Pupils ought to be gratified in their desire to know more about certain things than they can learn in their text-books; and they should by all means be encouraged in the formation of habit of careful investig ation and independent study.

To this end it is proposed to make an effort to raise money enough to buy a set of encyclopedias. We can get nothing from the School Board, for there seems to be no money in the treasury But we have succeeded in making arrangement with the Rev. Langdon Sanders for a benefit lecture to be delivered on Friday evening the 27th inst. The members of the Official Board of the Presbyterian church having kindly consented to favor us, the lecture will be given in this church. Tickets will be sold at 25 cents each. The price is low, but if we can succeed in thoroughly filling the church, we shall realize a sufficient amount to make the desired purchase.

We are most sanguine in our expectation that the people of Auburn will not permit this enterprise to fall short of a complete success. Let the church be filled. Your own children are to reap the benefit of your patronage.

Resolutions of Respect.

At the regular meeting of Auburn Lodge No. 116 I. O. O. F., Sept. 11th, 1878, the following resolutions were presented by a committee and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Great Grand Master has been pleased, through His great fiat "Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return," to remove from our midst Brother Wyllys Griswold, whereby, we heave sustained the loss of a member, the community a neighbor, the city a citizen, and his family a dear friend and protector; therefore be it

RESOLVED, That in the removal of our Brother, we have lost one who was prompt and punctual at all gatherings, one whose cheerful countenance and fraternal greetings gave evidence of his love for and deep interest in the tenents of our Institution, ever bespoke the strong interest he felt in the welfare and happiness of his fellows.

RESOLVED, That the community and the large circle of acquaintances, in which he moved, have by his death been deprived of the society and friendship of a neighbor and friend who was true to all the demands of each.

RESOLVED, That while we may miss the greetings of our Brother, the community a kind and obliging neighbor, and the city a worthy citizen; the family have experienced an irreparable loss—the children a kind father and the wife an affectionate and devoted husband. And while we mourn with the family in their deep bereavement and hereby extend to them our heartfelt sympathy as all we can do. We would point them to that One who has been "touched with the feeling of our infirmities" and who could weep with the Sisters of Bethany in their sorrow; and be it furteer

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family of the deceased and to each of the city papers for publication.

COMMITTEE.

IN MEMORIM.

At a regular meeting of DeKalb Lodge No. 214, F. & A. M. at Auburn, Ind., Sept. 10th, 1878, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, Our beloved brother, Wyllys Griswold, the oldest, and one of the most devoted members of this Lodge, has been called from the transitory existence to his eternal home, therefore:

RESOLVED, That this Lodge hereby express its unbounded grief at the loss of our departed brother, who was foremost at all times not only in the labors of Masonry and of his Lodge, but in every good wook of his time. As a conscieutious christain, an unswerving advocate of temperance and morality, and a faithful and earnest Mason we will ever remember Bro. Griswold. Let us imitate his virtues, and imitate his examples that we may meet the just reward which his christian life, no doubt, has won for him.

RESOLVED, That as a manifestation of our respect for the memory of our deceased brother, our lodge room be draped in mourning for thirty days, and that a copy of these resolutions be delivered to the family and friends of the deceased.

On motion, the Secretary was directed to request the publication of the foregoing in the Auburn papers.

The Farm and Asylum for the Poor in DeKalb County.

During a recent visit to the "Poor Farm" we took a few items that may be of some interest to the people of the county, especially those who pay the taxes and desire the money realized in that way to be judiciously expended. At the time of our visit we found Mr. Rummel busily engaged in laying a double row of large tiling in the main ditch through the farm, and upon inquiring ascertained that a complete system of underdrainage had been in progress for the past two years, in which time about 22,000 feet of tile had been put in with very satisfactory results, the amount yet required to complete the work is about 3,000 feet, which will make 25,000 feet in all, and will add to the value of the farm at least five times the value of labor and material required in the improvement. There is now scarcely a foot of waste land on the farm, and when the underdrainage is completed the low grounds will prove the most valuable for all purposes. Mr. Rummel is now raising excellent crops on land that two years ago could not be cultivated at all. We were surprised at the great variety and large quantities of grains and vegetables now being successfully cultivated on that amount of land, only 160 acres, of which 25 acres is woodland. The yield of wheat from 11 acres was 238 bushels, of oats from 12 acres was 328 bushels. There is now growing 35 acres of corn which will yield not less than 4,500 to 5,000 bushels in the ear, five acres of potatoes which will yield from 400 to 500 bushels, besides two acres of tobacco which will supply all the inmates of the asylum with enough to chew and smoke during the year, two acres of buckwheat which promises a good return, three and one-fourth acres of roots, such as turnips, beets, rutabagas, &c., to be used in feeding stock during the winter and spring months, and a crop of onions estimated 100 bushels. One of the most profitable crops is beans, of which an abundant supply is now being cured. Besides the grain and vegetables raised this year the farm is supplied with a fine lot of thrifty hogs for winter meat, as well as 35 head of cattle and a flock of sheep, which certainly speaks well for the managgment of the present Superintendent. The asylum is as neat and clean as a well kept hotel, the paupers (28 in number) have comfortable quarters and are required to keep themselves neat and cleanly. We noticed as they passed into the dining-room that each one had clean face and hands, and hair combed as if done by an artist.

Mrs. Rummel deserves great credit for her untiring energy in providing for the comfort of the inmates, her position is anything but pleasant and can only be appreciated by those who have visited the institution and studied the different characters with which she has to contend. A woman serving in that capacity is certainly entitled to a golden crown without any questions being asked on the day of final reconing.

The second Tri-State Fair at Toledo opens Sept. 16th and continues during the week. The fair last year was a great success, and no doubt will be the same this year. Those having business in Toledo would do well to go during the fair.

The Hicksville News, of last week, contains the premium list for the first annual fair of North-eastern Indiana and North-western Ohio to be held at Hicksville, Sept. 24th to 27th. The list is very complete and the premiums offered are liberal. If the managers are careful in this their first attempt, the future success of the enterprise will be established.

A Miss Alice O'Donnel, of Sandusky, Ohio, was recently outraged and murdered by a negro named Wm. Taylor, who conveyed the dead body to the woods and covered it with hay. The negro was arrested by the Sheriff, but before being confined was attacked by an infuriated mob and unceremoniously strung up as an ornament on a lamp post in one of the principle streets. The mob compelled law-abiding people to take back seats during the ceremony.

TERMS.—One fourth down,—one fourth in six months,—one fourth in one year, and the balance in eighteen months

Keep it before the people that the Democracy of Indiana 'abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders of the republicanparty who secretly connived, and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme, by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for president and vice president, were wrongfully kept out of the positions to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against free government, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that only can be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged."

$100.00 REWARD.

STOLEN, from my Livery Barn at Corunna, DeKalb county, Indiana, Aug. 19 1878, one pair of Sorrel mares, top carriage and harness. St. Joe Items.

—Mrs. Mary Woodcox and Maurice Headley have been visiting friends near Rome City the past week.

—Mrs. Bell, wife of Elias Bell, boss at the bridge shanty, is stopping at D. Testison's.

—John Sommerlot who has been sick several days is again on the street looking a little the worse for the wear.

—It is rumored that Mel Bishop of Spencerville will shortly remove to St. Joe and take an interest in the mercantile business with J. D. Leighty.

—We learn that an M. D. from Orlan Ind., has purchased the property owned by Frank Hart, and will move here immediately and commence the practice of medicine.

—It is reported that Johnny Jenkins backed square out of a horse trade a few days ago when he was getting $50 of a difference in cash. Horses must be improving in price in that vicinity.

—Jackson, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Widney, died very suddenly Aug. 28th of congestion of the lungs, being sick only 24 hours, aged 13 years. Little Jack will be sorely missed, for a better little boy would be hard to find. Especially will he be missed by Sylvester, a crippled brother of whom little Jack was very fond. Often have we seen Jack hauling the wagon that contained his brother, and nothing seemed to give him greater pleasure than to administer to the wants of the little cripple. The sympathies of the entire community are with the afflicted family.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

ORVILLE GRANT, brother of ex-President Grant, has been taken to the insane asylum at Morris Plains, N. J. Application for his admission as a private patient was made by his family. The step has been under consideration for some time. His friends say that his reason has been gradually giving way since he applied for the trading post on the Missouri. He always contended that his political associates robbed him of the emoluments of that office, and he afterward plunged into speculation.

THE WEST.

WHILE three men were ascending in an elevator in Kingsland, Ferguson & Co.'s building, St. Louis, the other day, the wire rope broke, and elevator and men were precipitated to the ground floor. Two of them were killed and the third mortally wounded.

A LOUISVILLE (Ky.) dispatch gives the following shocking incident of the yellow fever plague: "Andy Armstrong, late mate of the John Porter, the Ohio river steamer, has arrived here. He is the only survivor left of the entire crew who remained on board, and the picture he paints of the terrible fate of the Porter is horrible in the extreme, and recalling in some of its ghastly details the ancient mariner of yore. The men who shipped at Louisville were all taken down before they reached Cincinnati, himself excepted. He says the situation of things frightened away both nurse and doctor. At Gallipolis, Ohio, people with shot-guns prevented the boat from landing, and when his last companion died they would not permit him to come ashore to bury the body, which was cast into the river."....Gen. James Baker, who has just returned to St. Paul from the north shore of Lake Superior, reports forest fires extending almost continuously for 160 miles. The fires started near Duluth, and spread back of Beaver bay, Grand Mare's and Horse-shoe bay, encircling Grand Portage; thence to Thunder bay and Silver Islet.

THE Indian difficulties in the far Northwest have been extinguished in a council in Washington Territory, at which Gen. O. O. Howard presided. The chiefs promised to give up the Indians who had murdered whites, and announced their future peaceful intentions.

PRESIDENT HAYES, accompanied by Secretaries Devens and Thompson, arrived at Chicago on the morning of Tuesday, Sept. 3, took rooms at the Grand Pacific Hotel, at noon of that day reviewed the firemen's procession, formally opened the National Firemen's Tournament on Wednesday forenoon, and on the afternoon of that day departed for St. Paul, to attend the Minnesota State Fair.... Reports from man localities in Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota and Dakota, says the Chicago Tribune, indicate that there will be no No. 2 barley this year. The crop was seriously damaged by wet weather during harvest....Chicago's contributions for the relief of the yellow-fever sufferers at the South amount to over $30,000....During the last week of the existence of the Bankrupt law, the enormous number of 734 petitions in bankruptcy were filed in Chicago. Total liabilities, $23,356,253; total assets, $4,140,765.

OMAHA's finest hotel—the Grand Central—built at a cost of $300,000, has been destroyed by fire.

THE city of Sandusky, Ohio, was thrown into the wildest excitement, last week, by a cruel murder, followed by the summary execution of the author of the crime. Alice O'Donnell, aged 19 years, employed as a domestic in the family of A. K. West, was missing. Suspicion fell upon William Taylor, aged 28, a negro coachman of West. Taylor was arrested and confessed to ravishing and murdering the girl, telling where the body was concealed. He conducted officers to the spot, six miles out of the city. The body was found, the brains knocked out, and the throat cut. On arriving in the city again, the officer found the city in the greatest state of excitement, as the news of the confession had spread like wildfire. He was fearful that he could not keep his prisoner, and, on consultation with the Sheriff, it was decided to take him to Norwalk for safe-keeping. Accordingly they started as privately as possible, but had only got a short distance when they were overtaken by a posse of mounted men, and the buggy containing the Sheriff, deputy and prisoner was turned back toward the city. Soon this party was met by thousands of excited citizens on foot, and, as soon as the city limits were reached, the whole cavalcade halted. Every moment the excitement became greater. The Sheriff had, meanwhile, disappeared, and the crowd, picking up the buggy, turned it over and took charge of the prisoner. The mob was now led by the brother of the murdered girl, and his rage approached that of a wild animal. The defenseless prisoner was beaten in the most horrible manner possible. Howls of rage and shouts of fiendish triumph went up. At length he was evidently insensible, but the mob was not satisfied. The murdered girl's brother had adjusted the rope around the prisoner's neck, and now, with a shout of vengeance, threw it over a lamp-post. A thousand hands reached for the other end, and as many as could grasp it held it fast and drew the limp, lifeless form from the ground and fastened it there, thus satisfying the ends of justice before the law could take its course.

AN Omaha dispatch announces the death of Hon. Frank Welch, Member of Congress from Nebraska....The citizens of Jefferson, Ohio, are considerably excited over an oil-strike there, which promises to be a regular bonanza. For some time past the workmen have been engaged in deepening the town well in the public square. Upon reaching a depth of about forty feet, the other day, the excavators were surprised and the citizens delighted to discover oil dripping from the sides of the well in considerable quantities.

PRESIDENT HAYES was accorded an enthusiastic reception at the Minnesota State Fair, in St. Paul. He delivered a lengthy speech to an audience of 50,000 people. The speech consisted largely of tabular statements showing the reduction of the public debt, the decreased rates of taxation since the war, the condition of the currency, etc. He concluded as follows:

> Now, my friends, with this picture, as I think, so full of hope for the future for you and I as individuals, I do not venture with confidence upon predictions of prosperity reviving. I have no spirit of prophecy, but, reasoning, let us see how it stands. The debt is a great burden upon labor and capital. It is greatly diminished, and is still diminishing. Taxation is a great burden upon labor and capital, and it is greatly diminished and still diminishing. So, too, as to the expenses of the Government; and then with that which helps us, a sound currency coming, and immigration coming, may I not confidently say that these are indications, at least, that we are marching to the threshold of reviving general business prosperity? And now shall we look around for a new way to pay old debts, or shall we march in the paths marked out by the fathers—of industry, of economy? Shall we do what Washington and Franklin would advise? That is the question before the people to-day, my friends. I enter upon no argument on a disputed question, but I say, as my opinion—we may be mistaken all of us, but I believe it—that a restored financial condition depends largely upon an honest currency, and I say this: The commerce of the world is the commerce now in which we are taking part and that is the same thing the globe around. * * * * *
>
> Where there are very hard times in one great nation, sooner or later it goes clear around. We should then base our financial system on principles and instrumentalities that are sanctioned and approved by the best judgment of the whole commercial world. Then, I repeat, if we want our standard financial prosperity to be based upon sure and safe foundations, let us remember—let us all remember—that its best security is an untarnished national credit and a sound, constitutional currency.

THE SOUTH.

BEN HADLEY and Diamond Powell were hanged in the presence of 4,000 people at Long View, Texas, on the 30th ult., for the murder of Aug. Reincke.

YELLOW-FEVER bulletin for Aug. 31: New cases in Vicksburg for the preceding twenty-four hours, 160; deaths, 18. Memphis—New cases, 100; deaths, 57. New Orleans—The deaths increased to 80, the largest number of the season to date. Canton, Miss.—The disease frightfully fatal; half the cases reported had died, and very few had recovered. Grenada—Slight increase in the death rate; no material for the spreading of the fever.

THE deaths in New Orleans on Sept. 4 numbered eighty-eight, and the fever was on the increase; whole number of deaths to that date, 1,003. At Vicksburg there were ninety-eight new cases of fever and twenty-five deaths. A Memphis dispatch of Sept. 1 says: "This Sabbath day has been a sad one for Memphis, death having visited eighty-one households, and sickness more than [illegible]. People go about the streets in mourning, and Christian burial for their dead is a boon which few are blessed with. At Elmwood shallow graves are dug, and sometimes a short prayer is uttered by a minister, but, more frequently, there is no service, and the dead are put away hastily."

REPORTS of the yellow plague in the Southern cities up to Sept. 4 show no abatement of the epidemic. At Memphis there were eighty-six deaths for the previous twenty-four hours, about half of them colored people. Physicians and nurses were well-nigh worn out, and the situation was extremely discouraging. A Vicksburg dispatch thus describes the situation in that city: "This truly has been the saddest day Vicksburg has experienced for fifty years. There is no telling of the suffering within our midst. No pen can picture the dreadful state of existing affairs here, and the outside world can form only a faint idea of the misery of the poor of this plague-stricken city. If this devastating disease keeps up the strides of the past twenty-four hours there will not be one left to tell the tale in a short time. There is no way to-day of getting at the correct list of new cases. The death-list—oh! horror!—exceeds any during the scourge of the never-to-be-forgotten 1853. No person seems to be exempt from attack, not even those who have had the yellow fever before." At New Orleans the plague was on the increase, so far as the number of new cases was concerned, though the mortality was not so great, only 36 deaths being reported for the twenty-four hours. The fever had broken out at Brownsville, Tenn., Holly Springs, Greenville, and Delphi, Miss., and Hickman, Ky., and the inhabitants of those towns were fleeing as fast as they could get away. At Hickman the epidemic raged several days before it was ascertained that the disease was really yellow fever, and then a wild panic ensued. Owing to the terror of the people, the suffering in these rural towns will be greater, proportionately, than in the large cities.

THERE were eighty-nine deaths from yellow fever in Memphis on the 5th inst. A dispatch from that city of that date says: "We have settled down into a state of despair that is hard to break by the closest home-thrusts from the plague. We know nothing of what the outside world is doing, nor do we care. Doctors, nurses, drugs, sick-rooms, coffins, graves, engross our attention by their petrifying monotony of occurrence." At New Orleans 201 new cases and eighty-six deaths were reported on the 5th. In Vicksburg the plague showed no abatement, the number of deaths being greater than on any preceding day, namely, 45; number of new cases reported, 183. At Holly Springs, Miss., Hickman, Ky., and Brownsville and Union City, Tenn., the situation was truly distressing. Business was completely suspended in all these places, everybody having fled that could get away. There was sore need of supplies and nurses.

GENERAL.

SAMUEL ALLAN MCCOSKRY, Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, has been solemnly deposed from the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church by the unanimous action of the House of Bishops. This action was a surprise to all save the members of the House, it having been generally understood that the resignation of Bishop McCoskry, submitted immediately before his departure for Europe, would be accepted. His deposition from the ministry and from all its offices, however, is not the result of a former trial of charges of immoral conduct, but has been made simply on the technical grounds of his abandonment of his diocese and departure from the territory of the United States while allegations affecting his morality were in existence.

WASHINGTON

THE Postoffice Department has taken important action with regard to the transportation of gold and silver coin through the mails. Circulars have been prepared directing postoffice officials to receive gold and silver coin as third-class mail matter in packages not to exceed four pounds in weight, with the additional charge of 10 cents for registration. The new system of registration of third-class matter will go into effect Oct. 1.

THE President has appointed Gen. Lew Wallace Governor of New Mexico, vice Axtell, removed....The Secretary of the Interior has rendered an additional decision to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the well-known Dudymott case. The appeal was taken for the reversal or suspension of the former decision. Secretary Schurz declines to do either, and the former decision by which large tracts of land covered by land-grants to railroads were opened to settlement is to stand, unless reversed by a decision of the courts.

IT is announced from Washington that the Secretary of the Treasury has finally decided that 10,000,000 silver dollars now in the vaults must go out. To accomplish that he has caused to be issued a circular which provides that silver dollars may be obtained by any person in the same manner in which fractional silver currency can now be obtained. The treasury proposes to send out, at its own expense for transportation, silver dollars in sums of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000 to any person who may make corresponding deposits in currency with any sub-treasury, designated depository or national bank designated as a depository. In addition to that, for the present at least, all national-bank notes sent for redemption in multiples of $1,000 and not exceeding $10,000 will be redeemed in standard silver dollars.

POSTMASTER CHAUNCEY I. FILLEY, of St. Louis, has been removed for alleged looseness in the management of the office and violation of Order No. 1. He is succeeded by Samuel Hays.

MR. THEOPHILUS FRENCH, the Auditor of Railroad Accounts, states that all the companies except the Central and the Union Pacific of which he has requested reports have either complied or expressed a willingness to comply with such requests, as well as with all the provisions of the two acts in relation to them enacted at the last session of Congress. The Central and the Union Pacific have not as yet informed Auditor French whether they will obey the law or not, but the opinion generally prevails that these companies intend to contest the constitutionality of both the Sinking Fund act and of the act creating the Auditor of Railroad Accounts.

POLITICAL.

BENJ. F. BUTLER, in response to a call signed by 50,000 voters of Massachusetts urging him to stand for Governor of the Commonwealth, has written a letter accepting the nomination....Col. Mosby, of rebel guerrilla fame, has been commissioned by the President as Consul at Hong Kong, China....The following ticket was nominated by the Republicans of Kansas in convention at Topeka, last week: Governor, J. P. St. John; Lieutenant Governor, L. U. Humphrey; Secretary of State, James Smith; Treasurer, John Frances; Auditor, B. I. Bonebrake; Attorney General, Willard Davis; Chief Justice, A. H. Horton; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Allen B. Lemon.

THE Republicans of Minnesota held their State Convention at St. Paul on the 4th inst. The Hon. John M. Berry was renominated for Judge of the Supreme Court by acclamation; Sam H. Nichols was renominated for Clerk of the Supreme Court without opposition, and O. P. Whitcomb was nominated for Auditor. The platform urges "persistence in the policy of speedy specie resumption," warns "the people against the doctrine of an unlimited and irredeemable paper currency," and declares that "in the efforts to restore harmony at the South, in administering the various executive departments, so that no taint of corruption rests upon them, in emancipating the primary councils of the people from the domination of officeholders, in its redemption of the pledges of civil-service reform, and in its financial measures and policy, the administration of President Hayes merits the confidence and hearty co-operation of the people."....Vermont voted for State officers on the 3d inst. Proctor was elected Governor by about 18,000 majority. In the First and Second districts Joyce and Tyler, Republicans, were elected to Congress. In the Third district Barlow, the Greenback candidate for Congress, received about 5,000 votes, against 3,800 and 2,000 by the Republican and Democratic competitors; consequently there is no election, Vermont requiring a majority of all the votes cast to elect....The Kansas Democrats met in State Convention at Leavenworth Sept. 4 and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, L. W. Barton; Treasurer, C. C. Black; Attorney General, J. F. Cox; Superintendent Public Instruction, O. F. McKeln; Chief Justice Supreme Court, R. M. Ruggles; Auditor, Gibun Shannon.

THE Minnesota Democratic State Convention was held at St. Paul Sept. 5. William Mitchell was nominated for Supreme Court Judge, Dillon O'Brien for Supreme Court Clerk, and M. M. Black for Auditor of State. ....The Greenbackers of New Hampshire met in State convention at Manchester last week—362 delegates being in attendance—and nominated Warren G. Brown for Governor....The New York Republican State Convention has been called to meet at Saratoga on the 26th inst.

FOREIGN

AT a public dinner in Paris, the other day, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, Waddington, said that he considered the general peace of Europe perfectly secure.

THE town of Mickalez, in Hungary, has been almost entirely destroyed by a great flood. One thousand houses were swept away, and almost 500 people drowned. The town of Erlau was also visited by a disastrous freshet, by which whole rows of houses were demolished and a number of people drowned....Berlin dispatches announce the departure of four prominent German financiers for America, under orders from the Government, the object of their mission being to examine the American system of taxing manufactured tobacco—whether for the purpose of adopting it or avoiding its blunders the dispatches omit to say....Eight persons were killed and thirty badly injured by a railway accident between London and Dover, Eng.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch says the Austrian army of occupation has been guilty of many excesses and cruelties in Bosnia and Herzegovina....The Bosnians interned at Nicsics revolted. Great numbers were killed and wounded by the Montenegrins before the revolt was suppressed.

AN appalling disaster occurred on the English coast on the evening of Sept. 3. The excursion steamer Princess Alice, returning from Gravesend, that evening, with about 800 passengers, was run down off Barking by a screw steamer, and between 500 and 600 people found a watery grave. The drowned include an extraordinary proportion of women and children. Several of the survivors speak of having lost as many as three, five, and six children. They describe the water was covered with hundreds of shrieking children. The Captain and nearly all of the crew of the Princess Alice were drowned. They had no time to lower boats, and there were but few life-buoys on the steamer....The new 5 per cent. Russian loan, 300,000,000 rubles, which was to be issued by the Russian Imperial Bank at 93 as the issue price, has proved a partial failure. At the close of the subscription only 101,000,000 rubles had been taken.

Germans in California.

There are 40,000 Germans in San Francisco, and 30,000 more in the States and Territories of the Pacific coast. They take an active interest in politics and in stock speculations. There are two daily newspapers published in German in the California metropolis, and five weeklies, two of them illustrated. A large proportion of the German element is devoted to agriculture and stock-raising, and many lead a seafaring life. Most of the trade with the Mexican coast, and much of the bay and Sacramento river trade is in the hands of the German ship-owners and shipping and commission agents.

Tramps in Petticoats.

Tramps in the vicinity of Pittsburgh have adopted a new and original plan to gain access to the houses of such persons as they desire to rob. They don female attire, and, under the plea of seeking housework, gain admittance to many private residences where, if their true characters were known, they would be excluded. The plan has worked successfully in several instances.

MR. J. L. CROSLEY, of the great carpet firm of Halifax, Yorkshire, has had a microphone placed in the pulpit of a chapel and connected with his residence a mile from the town, by wire. He heard the whole service except a few words rendered indistinct by the preacher disturbing the microphone.

THE CHERRY VALLEY MASSACRE.

The Dreadful Work the Tories and Indians Did One Bleak November Morning, 100 Years Ago.

Maj. Douglass Campbell, in his address at the recent unveiling of the Cherry Valley (N. Y.) Monument, thus describes the massacre, it commemorates, which took place Nov. 11, 1778:

"Col. Alden and Lieut. Col. Stacia, with a small guard, lodged at the house of Mr. Wells, which stood on a little eminence just below the village. The place had formerly belonged to Mr. Lindesay, and is now owned and occupied by Mr. Phelon. Some of the other officers also lodged in private houses. The enemy, learning these facts from the scouts whom they had captured, disposed their force so that a party should surround the residence of each officer, while the main body attacked the fort.

"Even the elements combined against the hapless settlement. The night before snow had fallen to the depth of several inches; in the morning it turned to sleet, and the air was dark and heavy. The people, trusting to the assurances of Col. Alden, were resting quietly at home, unconscious of approaching danger. One man only was abroad. He lived several miles below the fort, and was coming to town on horseback. When a short distance from the house of Mr. Wells he was fired upon and wounded by the Indians. Putting his horse to full speed he turned out of his way to inform the Colonel of their approach, and then hastened to alarm the fort. Still Alden was incredulous; he thought it was a party of stragglers, and sent out orders to call in the guard. Before his orders could be obeyed the Indians were upon him. The advance was formed mainly of the Senecas, the most untamed and bloodthirsty of the Six Nations. Now, at length the Colonel realized the danger, and fled down the hill toward the fort. Behind him followed a fleet-footed savage with uplifted tomahawk. Several times Alden turned and snapped a pistol at his swift pursuer, but in the damp air the treacherous weapon failed him. At last the fort was nearly gained, its doors stood open for his reception, when the Indian's tomahawk, hurled with unerring aim, cleft his skull. As he fell the savage rushed upon him, knife in hand, and, under the very muskets of the soldiers, tore off his bleeding scalp.

"Meantime, at the house of Mr. Wells, a dreadful scene had been enacted. When the savages rushed in, the father of the family was engaged in his devotions, but a Tory slew him while he knelt at prayer. With him perished his wife and mother, three children, his brother and sister, and three domestics. One daughter, endeared to all by every Christian grace, escaped from the house and sought safety behind a pile of wood. She was pursued by an Indian, who, as he approached, wiped and sheathed his bloody knife and drew his tomahawk. Having some knowledge of the Indian language, she begged piteously for life, and a Tory, who had formerly been a servant of her father, interceded for her, claiming to be her brother. With one hand the savage pushed aside the Tory, and with the other smote her to the earth. Of the whole family, but one escaped the carnage. He was a young boy who was absent in Schenectady at school. Thus his life was spared. He grew to manhood, and, settling in New York, made the name of John Wells famous as the foremost lawyer of his time. Looking down upon the desolation of his homestead, he might have said with Logan, 'There runs not a drop of my blood in the veins of any living creature.' Like Logan, however, he was fitted alone to represent a race.

"Another party of Indians surrounded the house of Mr. Dunlop, the venerable clergyman whose ministrations the colony had followed from its cradle. Through the intercession of a Mohawk chief the old man's life was spared, but only that he might witness the fiendish murder and mutilation of his wife and the destruction of his little flock. Carried away prisoner, he was soon released, but within a year went down to his grave broken with age and sorrow.

"One other incident and I have done with these sickening details. I tell them that you may know what border warfare meant in Tryon county; that you may know what our fathers meant when they said they were 'resolved to die.' A Mr. Mitchell was absent from his house when the Indians came. Finding return impossible, he fled to the woods for safety. When the fiends had departed he approached his home, and there a fearful sight awaited him. He saw before him the bodies of his wife and four children. Extinguishing a fire which had been kindled to destroy the house, he bent over his little ones, hoping that life might still remain. In one, a girl of 10 or 12 years of age, a spark seemed yet to flicker; he raised her up, brought her to the door, and with beating heart was watching over her return to life when another party of the enemy appeared. He had hardly time to hide himself behind a log fence near by, when they approached the house. From his hiding-place he beheld an infamous Tory named Newbury bury his hatchet into the skull of the little girl. The next day the desolate father, all alone, bore the five corpses to the church-yard, and with the soldiers' aid buried them in a common grave. I am glad to say that the following year Newbury was arrested in the Mohawk valley as a spy, convicted on the testimony of Mr. Mitchell, and hanged as a common malefactor.

"The victims of the massacre numbered about forty-eight in all, sixteen of whom were Continental soldiers, the rest were mostly women and children."

Parepa and Carl Rosa.

The public smiled at the union between the great Parepa and little Carl Rosa, when she might at least have been a Countess. The story of the engagement is characteristic. Rosa was a leader, quiet, worthy, modest and adoring. He never ventured to press his claims, but his faithful services made a deeper impression than he had an idea of. The company was traveling by rail one day, when Parepa seated herself beside her silent lover, and remarked his melancholy. Rosa was blue and downhearted, and the good creature tried to cheer him up. She recommended matrimony to him, and, receiving a despondent reply that no woman would marry a man in his position, she is reported to have patted him patronizingly on the head with the remark: "Cheer up, my little man; if that is all, I will marry you myself." And she did. A happier or more devoted couple than the big-hearted prima donna and her little manager never existed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

He Remembered One Thing, at Least.

A fair story from one of the Canadian courts is told by the Toronto Globe. As it runs, one of those sharp and sarcastic lawyers, who take unspeakable pride in twisting a witness into a labyrinth of difficulties, had occasion to cross-examine a gentleman of some little prominence. The sharp lawyer managed, after skillful maneuvering, so to confuse the witness that the only answer he could obtain to his question was, "I don't recollect." When the lawyer had this answer returned to him, a score or so of times his patience gave out. "Tell me, Mr.," he exclaimed, "do you ever remember anything?" "I do," was the response. "Can you carry your memory back for twenty years, and tell me a single incident that happened then?" "Yes, I think I can," returned the witness who had regained some composure. "Ah!" exclaimed the lawyer, gleefully rubbing his hands in orthodox legal fashion, "now, that is consoling. Come now, sir, what is this instance which you remember so well?" "Well, sir, I remember that twenty years ago, when you were to be admitted to the bar, your father came to me to borrow $30 to buy you a suit that you might make a respectable appearance, and I have a distinct recollection that your father never paid the $30 back to me." Confusion changed hands at this point in the proceedings, and the lawyer dismissed the witness without any more ado.

Honors Awarded at the Paris Exposition.

Among the awards to American exhibitors announced by cable telegram is the diploma of honor to the United States Government Printing Office. In a private correspondence received from Paris anticipating this diploma it is stated that the wording of this instrument recognizes in the specimens of engraving and printing exhibited by our Treasury Department the highest degree of perfection attained in the preparation of Government securities. Among the competitors for honorable distinction in the Paris Exhibition is the Bureau of Engraving and Printing which executes the work in those arts for the Government of France. It is admitted, so says the correspondence, by competent judges who have inspected the specimens of the Exhibition, that the engraving and printing executed by our bureau in Washington surpasses in excellence of art any other work of that character in the world. In connection with this it may be stated as a fact that the engraving and printing companies in New York and Washington have, for a number of years, been doing the like work for several foreign Governments, the latter recognizing the excellence of the engraving and printing executed in the United States.

Overcrowdedness.

A belated and rather poverty-stricken foot traveler, whose railway ticket was good on all country roads and cattle-paths, stopped at a small mansion of apparently four rooms and a kitchen, in the South Hill suburbs, the other evening, to beg a night's lodging. As he stood timidly knocking at the half-opened door, he heard the shrill, commanding tones of the lady of the house, disposing of the garrison for the night: "Tommy, go hunt up Charley and Ben, and tell them to go to the grocery and tell your father to bring Ella and Willie right home, its their bed-time, and, if they see Louise on the way, send her to Miss Crozier's for Alice and Jim, and see if they know where Ezra is; you take this lamp up to grandma's room and ask her if she won't take care of the baby while I go and find Dick, and while I am gone you undress Mabel and put her to bed, and if Cousin Harry comes while I am gone tell him he's to sleep with you." And the traveler sighed and turned away, so oppressed with a feeling of overcrowdedness that he walked out into the country, and slept all night in the middle of a prairie nine miles long. —Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Fortune-Teller's Almanac.

To dream of having a great number of servants is—madness.

To dream of a bear foretokens mischief, which your vision shows you is a bruin.

When a fashionable young lady dreams of a filbert, it is a sign that her thoughts are running upon a Colonel.

To dream that your nose is red at the tip is an intimation that you had better leave off brandy and water.

To dream of a millstone about your neck is a sign of what you may expect if you marry an extravagant wife.

If you dream of clothes it is a warning not to go to law; for, by the rule of contraries, you will be sure of a nonsuit.

To dream of a fire is a sign that if you are wise you will see that all the lights in your house are out before you go to bed.

It is very lucky to dream that you pay for a thing twice over, since afterward you will probably take care to have all your bills receipted.

For a person in unembarrassed circumstances to dream that he is arrested is very fortunate, for it is a warning to him on no account to accept a bill.

That Silken Hair.

"Beautiful, beautiful silken hair," Philip murmured fondly, toying lovingly with one of her nut-brown tresses; "soft as the plumage on an angel's wing; light as the thistle-down that dances on the summer air; the shimmer of sunset, the glitter of yellow gold, the rich red-brown of autumnal forests blend in entrancing beauty in its—"

And just then it came off in his hands, and he forgot what to say next. There was a moment of profound silence, and then Aurelia took it from him and went out of the room with it. When she came back he was gone. They meet now, but they meet as strangers, and the eyes that were wont to beam upon each other with the awakened love light now glare as though life was an eternal wash-day.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

SMUGGLING.

How It Is Carried On on the Mexican Border.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune telegraphs as follows:

A treasury official who was sent to examine the El Paso Customs District on the Rio Grande, has made a general report on the condition of affairs on the Mexican border, which will attract attention. The officer maintains that smuggling is the normal condition of the inhabitants along both sides of the border, whether Texan or Mexican; that it is impossible to enforce the existing tariff laws of either country; and that the only real solution of existing complications is in a reciprocity treaty with Mexico, if not absolute free trade. The agent has traveled from the Colorado river to the Rio Grande. He thinks the presence of the army there is practically useless, as it cannot be used for a posse comitatus, or participate in the quelling of local disturbances. The country, he reports, is the smuggler's paradise. Smuggling is the business of the people. There is no public sentiment opposed to it. Merchants openly sell goods that they know are to be delivered by pack-mules in Mexico. They arrange to receive goods, knowing that they have been smuggled into Texas. The customs authorities upon either side appear to have no conscience as to the international wrong of smuggling, and countenance it by their silence. The agent considers that this condition of affairs shows the necessary dependence of the two countries upon each other; that products must be mutually interchanged, and that existing tariffs can never be enforced.

The burdens of the Mexican tariff, he says, are particularly oppressive against this country, and Mexican Minister Zamacona, in his Western trip, might properly be called upon to explain some of the peculiarities of the Mexican Tariff law. The agent says that the Mexicans still plow with a stick and still drive an ancient Roman chariot with heavy wooden wheels, yet their tariff upon American carriages and wagons is from $66 to $396 each. The Mexicans export quantities of hides, yet the tax on boots and shoes is from $7 to $16.50 per dozen. Vast quantities of ammunition and arms are imported from the United States, yet the duty on powder is from 80 cents to $2 per pound. The Mexican tax upon American cotton goods is, in many cases, more than the original cost, being from 11 cents to 34 cents per square yard.

A Great Printing Feat.

The Government Printing Office, at Washington, recently performed a feat that cannot easily be surpassed by any other institution of its kind. Ex-Secretary Boutwell having finished his authorized revision of the United States Statutes about the close of the session, it was deemed advisable to have a few copies printed for the examination of the Senate Committee on the Revision of Laws during the recess of Congress. The manuscript was given to the printers on Wednesday morning, and on Saturday evening at 6 o'clock a huge octavo volume of 1,400 pages, printed, stitched, and bound in full calf, was delivered to every member of the committee. The manuscript had previously been approved by the Secretary of State. Mr. Boutwell is now completing the index to the revised laws.

Stealing Safe and All.

A daring robbery was committed at the Delavan House, Atlantic City, N. J., a few mornings ago. When the proprietor went down-stairs he found his 400-pound safe missing and the parlor door open. Later, pieces of money and bundles of paper were discovered in a neighboring meadow, and finally the remnants of the safe were found. Nitro-glycerine had been used by the thieves. The door was blown completely off and the contents scattered for yards. A slight noise was heard about 2 o'clock by the barbers in an adjoining room, but nothing was thought of the matter. The safe looked as if it had been in a great fire and a number of heavy walls had fallen on it. Fortunately the proprietor had removed most of the money, and the thieves were ill paid for their trouble.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

According to a French horticulturist, the occasional bitter taste of cucumbers is entirely due to immoderately slow growth. The prevention is judicious watering in time of drought, but when cold is responsible for the mischief treatment is not so clear.

A very prominent leak on a great many farms is found in the careless manner in which the owner allows his stock to destroy both the growing and matured crops, and it is no uncommon thing, where this kind of a leak is allowed on a farm, to find the farmer first-rate in helping to drain his neighbor's farm in the same way.

Nothing can be done for black knot in plum trees but to cut out the diseased part, or the parts showing any kind of disease, and burn them. If the trees are very badly affected, burn all of them. It will be of no use to try to grow healthy plums if your neighbors have diseased trees, so you should induce them also to cut out and destroy the black knots.—Toronto Globe.

The most active fertilizers for wheat in the autumn are Peruvian guano and nitrate of soda, but it is not advisable to use these as early as October, except in small quantity, as they are very soluble and quickly washed away by the fall rains. One hundred pounds of either are sufficient at this time, and an equal quantity may be used in the spring.—American Agriculturist.

I would recommend the following as a sure cure for gapes in chickens. It has been tried repeatedly by myself and several others in the neighborhood, and has always proved effectual: To every 100 chickens take three teaspoonfuls of tincture of assafœtida and mix it daily in their food. There is no patent on this—it is an old remedy for the ailment.—Cor. Moore's Rural.

During the past week, a couple of days have been devoted to destroying caterpillars, which at this season infest the orchard. We used a wagon, driving it between the rows, and severing the nests from the tree, then throwing them into a box, when they were afterward burned. If every orchardist would follow this system up, in a few years we might almost free our State of these pests.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

"Waldo" says, in the Ohio Farmer, that the more he experiments with it the less he likes the drilled corn. If he could always do the plowing himself, and choose his own tools, he could get a field of drilled corn tended well, but it is hard to get hands to do it rightly. He is satisfied that there will be less corn drilled in the next five years than in the past five. In traveling on the cars, three or four years ago, he paid careful attention to the corn, and found it the rule to drill and the exception to hill. Recently in traveling he counted 100 fields, 83 of which were hilled and 17 drilled.

The marked success which has attended the seeding of timothy in the fall is making that the favorite season for sowing meadows. Some, however, make a mistake by not making the ground as rich as possible. We should prefer to manure heavily, plant to early potatoes, and dig them early in September. Then, by plowing the ground well, and sowing and rolling at once, we should, in favorable seasons, have a meadow that would yield a ton and a half of fine hay the first season. When manure is not attainable oat stubble may be turned under with good results. Should the grass grow too large before freezing, it may be slightly pastured; but too much will do it injury.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Cows accustomed to a great variety of food are invariably good eaters, and almost always heavy milkers. Thus, the best cows in the neighborhood are usually those of poor men, whose one cow is made a pet of, and has all sorts of food. Such cows are usually a good bargain at almost any price, though they rarely do so well when taken from their own old homes and turned in with the less-varied fare accorded to larger herds. Milkmen have learned that it is important to give cows a variety of food. Hence their purchases of bran, meal, roots and oil-cake. It may not pay farmers to take so much pains, but they can promote the thrift of their herds and their own profits by changing the animal's food as often as possible.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Orchard in Grass.—An old friend writes us: "There is a great deal of nonsense talked and written about apple trees requiring cultivated ground. The reason why the trees do not do so well when the ground is in grass is because it is not grazed and kept short as it is in England, where all the orchards, or at least ninety-nine out of 100, are kept in grass, and never, under any circumstances, plowed. But the grass is grazed with sheep and calves and never mowed, as it is well known to be wrong to grow what is not returned to the soil in some shape. Americans do not understand the difference between the fine old permanent sod, which is never plowed, and the timothy and clover temporary grass here. When the sward is grazed in England, there is nothing to prevent sun and air from benefiting the roots, and the sheep lie a good deal under the trees and leave droppings and urine.—Rural New Yorker.

About the House.

Baking Powder.—Eight ounces of flour, eight ounces of bicarbonate of soda, seven ounces of tartaric acid; mix thoroughly by passing several times through the sieve.

Frosting With Gelatine.—Dissolve a large pinch of gelatine in six tablespoonfuls of boiling water; strain, thicken with sugar, and flavor with lemon. Enough for two cakes.

To Wash Lavender Organdie or Lace.—Put a table-spoonful of sugar of lead in the water, and let it soak for an hour before washing it. Wash carefully and hang in the shade to dry.

Sweet Omelet.—Beat four eggs very lightly, add a little salt and one spoonful brown sugar; pour all into a hot, buttered fry-pan; when well set, lay in two spoonfuls raspberry jam, cook one minute; roll up, and dish it, sprinkling well with powdered sugar. This is a very delicate and rich dessert.

Grated Pineapple.—Peel them carefully; cut out the eyes, and then weigh them; to each pound three-quarters pound of sugar. Grate the pineapple on a grater; put all in the skillet together and let boil until the juice is thick and clear; don't add any water to them, but save all the juice as you grate them.

Baker's Pound-Cake.—Two large cups sugar, one and three-fourths cups butter, six eggs, three-fourths of a pint of cold water, seven teaspoonfuls, or one-half ounce, even full of ammonia, six coffee cups, even full, of flour; to be baked in small tins, or patty pans; half the recipe is enough for any common family.

Berry Pudding.—Stew a quart of blueberries and whortleberries; sweeten to taste. Take stale bread, and butter each piece; immerse each piece in the berries, and lay in a pudding-dish first a layer of bread, then a layer of berries, taking care to have the last layer one of berries. To be eaten cold, with milk and sugar.

Boned Ham.—Having soaked a well cured ham in tepid water over night, boil it until it is perfectly tender, putting it on the range in warm water; take it up in a wooden tray, and leave it to cool. Afterward remove the bone carefully, and press the ham again into shape; return it to the boiling liquor, remove the pot from the fire, and let the ham remain until it is cold.

A Disappointed Brother.

He was a class-leader from the country, a stranger in the midst of multitudes. He felt lonesome and forlorn, and longed for the soothing companionship of those of kindred ways and thought. Whenever he neared a group in the rotunda or side-rooms of the hotel, profane expressions and ribald jests pained his ear and held him aloof. He wandered about aimlessly, sad and silent, till at length he approached three or four sanctimonious-looking men talking earnestly. He felt sure they were dropping manna for the hungry soul, and edged up to get a taste of the spiritual food.

"I tell you, friends, it was good to be there. I went away refreshed in spirit, and full of hope that all would turn out well with us this season," said a man with side whiskers and a look of woe, as he threw out a heavy sigh and rolled his eyes.

The brother from the country strengthened the sigh with a little one of his own, looked solemn and felt tip-top.

"It was the same with me," said another, with an undertaker's placidity of countenance. "I was full of doubt at first—for you know the men are constantly under temptation—but, when I saw how earnestly they entered into the work, I felt easy, and didn't let a chance slip to make it an occasion of profit."

The rural man looked his gloomiest and felt warm around the heart.

"I never saw better work in the field," said a feeble-voiced man with weak eyes.

"Nor I," said the side-whiskered one. "I didn't like that kick at the decision, though; I thought the judgment was correct."

The bucolic brother put a hand over one ear and hitched up closer. He always took a deep interest in doctrinal points.

"That's what I told Thompson. I could see plain, and I knew the umpire was right," said another of the trio.

The man in the background began to feel uneasy.

"Of course; anybody could see it with half an eye. It wouldn't have made any difference, though. Our boys had 'em foul before that inning. Did you ever see better batting or nicer base-running? By the way—how much did you salt down on the game?"

The cat was out of the bag—all the time these sober-looking men had been discussing nothing higher than a game of base-ball. The badly-deceived brother moved hastily away, and sat down in a corner by himself to brood and shake his head and wonder what the world was coming to.—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

The Decimal System of Notation.

Ten is, theoretically, ill-suited for the radix of a system of notation, because it permits of only one bisection. The half of it is five, an odd number. It also is incapable of any other division. On account of these defects the system is ill adapted to the operations of the shop and the market. Although our calculations are universally made in the decimal system, none of our tables of weights and measures are decimal in any one of their subdivisions. In all departments of trade the current prices have been derived from the process of successive halvings. The shopman reckons by halves, quarters, eighths, sixteenths and thirty-seconds, and not by fifths or tenths. The yardstick is divided, in its practical use, into halves, quarters, eighths, etc., by successive bisections. Even the sixteenth of a unit is more commonly used in trade than the tenth. In the stock exchange, shares change in price by eighths of a dollar, and not by tenths. Even with our decimal system of money, we require coins for half and quarter of a dollar for practical use in trading. Almost the entire price-list of our stores advances and recedes by these fractions of a unit formed by successive bisections.

The attempt by the French to compel the use of the decimal system shows the difficulty of such an undertaking. Popular necessities compelled the introduction of binal divisions. The prices of their money and stock markets are still frequently quoted in quarters and eighths. The attempt to divide time decimally was a failure. After trying to give to their decimal metrology a universal application, they have been compelled to modify it in many of their weights and measures. From the inherent defects of a ten-scale, all attempts to introduce an international decimal system of weights and measures have met with strong opposition.—Popular Science Monthly.

PAPER MONEY.

Until the Advent of Paper Money the World Never Had a Currency.

A certain plant, charged with being poisonous, was formerly tolerated in private gardens because of its pretty fruit called "love-apples." Could the owners of those gardens revisit the world they would be very much surprised to find their evil-reputed fruit not only credited with being exceptionally wholesome, but everywhere a favorite article of food; and, were our earlier ancestors permitted to look in upon us, they would be astonished to learn that a substance dispensed by the apothecaries of their day, in grain doses to suffering humanity, had become an article of leading commercial value, and that many thousand tons of it were annually consumed at the tables of all classes, from the highest to the humblest, throughout the world. Likewise, it shall come to pass that our descendants will wonder how we, their forefathers, could regard their favorite, indispensable greenback as a poison to be avoided like the once-contemned tomato, and as a drug of the political pharmacopœia to be sparingly used only for the cure of national distempers, even as, in old times, sugar was classed nowhere but among the materia medica for the cure of febrile complaints.

Popular prejudice and the want heretofore of favorable opportunities have thus far prevented more than a limited recognition of the fact that a paper currency can, under certain conditions, become of permanent, of inestimable value to the political and industrial economies of a great nation. The general impression concerning it is similar to that entertained of a nauseous medicine to be reluctantly accepted as a remedial agent, but to be gotten rid of as quickly as possible if only to confirm the convalescence of the patient. That this prejudice, this unfavorable impression, should not exist would seem strange, indeed when we consider the circumstances which have invariably inspired and attended the appearance of a paper currency; for there are no well-authenticated instances of a government paper currency having been issued except in great national emergencies, except when the political existence of the people was at stake and every other consideration had to be subordinated to the paramount one of rescuing the vessel of state from the perils of surrounding shoals and breakers; or, if not so critical, the emergency has always been sufficiently grave to arouse those serious apprehensions which are thought to justify a resort to paper currency as one of the last heroic methods left for averting an impending general calamity; a kind of Cæsarean operation that sacrificed everything for the preservation of the parent state. Thus it is not surprising the people should have been led to associate the presence of a paper currency with the idea of there being something abnormal in the condition of the commonwealth, and to deem the absence of it a sure indication of national wealth and strength.

It should, however, be borne in mind by those who are inimical to the use of paper currency that the issue of it upon the occasion above referred to implies for it no inconsiderable amount of virtue; otherwise it would not have been resorted to so frequently as a means of safety in times of danger, and therefore, if beneficial upon occasions when all kinds of money, not excepting gold coin, are the least capable of doing good, it follows that a proper knowledge of its inherent qualifications ought to enable us in times of peace to make it one of the most efficient and valuable of all currencies. It should also be borne in mind that the mere fact of a paper currency being put forth in seasons of general distrust and uneasiness would very naturally cause it, however intrinsically good it might be, to acquire the bad reputation attached to its surroundings, and suffer the same vicissitudes to which all other things are then subjected, and therefore it is neither just nor logical to condemn its use during peace and prosperity merely because it has heretofore been, through no fault of its own, associated with periods of anarchy and ruin.

Nor should it be overlooked that paper currency has been more often issued by those who were incapable of properly using it and of comprehending its legitimate office than by those in whose hands it became an instrument for the accomplishment of much good. People with an outer crust of civilization, to conceal the inner mass of their barbarism and ignorance, have, monkey-like, imitated their more enlightened fellow creatures in this as in other respects with no better idea of what a paper currency really is than a dim, chaotic notion that it is in some sort the offspring of a combined modern alchemy and necromancy, whereby, through the use of certain cabalistic characters, ordinary paper is transmuted into a precious metal; whereby an ounce of dried pulp is metamorphosed into an ounce of virgin gold. Under such auspices and because it failed to meet the extravagant expectations of its projectors, this currency rapidly came into bad odor, and so tainted the financial atmosphere with its violent death and decay, as to utterly disgust many of the warmest friends of monetary reform. I am fain to reluctantly admit that even in this land, this paradise of the peripatetic school-master, there is, in certain quarters, concerning this subject, as much benightedness as exists in the minds of the most outwardly polished of barbarians. Publications supposed to reflect the intelligence of their writers ventilate opinions about the nature and characteristics of a paper currency that remind one very much of those which were uttered when the feasibility of using steam as a propelling force was under discussion. Among other objections was one from a very learned writer who demonstrated, with the aid of the highest mathematics, that, owing to atmospheric resistance, the faster a locomotive went the slower it would go. Many of the objections urged against a greenback currency are of this description. They have a potent influence upon that large class which never reflects and always accepts what is false in preference to the truth; but there are other objections, which, because of the few grains of truth scattered through their mass of errors, pervert minds that do think; and it is for the benefit of these I have in this paper endeavored to point out where the few grains of truth, made to serve a false cause, really belong, and what little or no connection they have with the great issue at stake in this country.

It is no argument against the use of a paper currency that it has not been voluntarily used by any government until very recent times. This is an argument that applies with equal force against the employment of every modern invention; neither steam nor electricity were in use a hundred years ago, but does anyone in his senses contend that they should be discarded, be laughed and sneered at, because the world, from the beginning down to the days of our grandparents, got along with an immense degree of comfort and happiness without them? I know some would reply: The two cases are not identical; that steam and electricity are wholly new motors applied to the car of progress; that they are new because the world had not previously been prepared for them, and were adopted because the age in which they appeared was ripe for their application; but that currency is as old as the hills, has stood the tests of hundreds of generations, and, therefore, when you ask us to adopt greenbacks instead of gold and silver, you are simply asking us to place confidence in a stranger to perform the same duties which have from times immemorial been faithfully discharged by a long-tried friend and servant. I would answer: That long-tried servants, be they never so faithful, must succumb to the same fate of change and death that ultimately overtake all things, however immutable and fixed they may seem; and that, so far from proposing to supersede any metallic currency heretofore in use, we utterly deny having such an intention, for the plain reason that there is no currency of the kind to supersede; that until the advent of paper money the world never had a currency. Currency, like the steam engine and telegraph, is a modern, a very modern invention.

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE GREENBACK.

(By Hon. D. B. Stubbs, of Muscatine, Iowa.)

But we are told that Congress has no power under the constitution to issue money except as a war measure. Republican orators, and many that the people never looked upon as orators, loudly proclaimed last fall that the constitution positively forbide the issuing of money by the General Government except as a war measure. In fact both of my opponents last year proclaimed this, and the Democratic candidate said it was evident that we could have no further issue of greenbacks unless we went to war for the power.

I submit this proposition: If Congress does not possess the power to issue money, how can it delegate the power to the national-banking corporations to issue money? How can it delegate greater power than it possesses? All corporations are creatures of the Government that creates them, and have only just such powers as the creator—the Government—gives them, and no other. If the Government does not have the power to issue money then it gives the corporations that it creates greater power than it possesses itself. How this can be is more than I can understand or solve after more than twenty years' arduous study and practice of the law. Perhaps some of these all-knowing orators of the old school of politics, who never read a law book, can explain the mystery.

Some of the wisest of these men have gone further, and told us that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided by its solemn opinion that the greenback was only a war measure and that the constitution absolutely prohibits the issue of legal-tender currency only in time of war. When you hear one of these high-toned clackers make this assertion you may rest assured that he has never read the legal-tender decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States or else he has no sort of regard for truth.

Our Supreme Court has been called upon in various cases to decide as to the constitutionality of the Legal-Tender acts of Congress. The leading ones are those of Hepburn vs. Griswold, reported in 8 Wallace United States Supreme Court reports, p. 603, and the two cases of Knox vs. Lee, and Parker vs. Davis, reported in 12 Wallace, 457. In the first case mentioned one Hepburn made a promissory note in the usual manner and form, dated June 20, 1860, promising to pay Henry Griswold $11,250 on the 20th day of February, 1862. This note both bore date and became due before the passage of the Legal-Tender act of Feb. 25, 1862. In this case the question that was presented for the determination of the Supreme Court was whether or not the payee of a note, made before the Legal-Tender act took effect, was obliged by law to accept in payment United States notes equal in nominal amount to the sum due according to its terms when tendered by the maker.

In this case the court held that all contracts for the payment of money, not expressly stipulating otherwise, were, in legal effect and universal understanding, contracts for the payment of coin, and ruled that defendant's tender of United States treasury notes was not a satisfaction of the debt, but that the contract, being made before the law making these notes a full legal tender took effect, must be governed by the law in force at the time of the making of the contract, and that Hepburn must pay Griswold in coin.

There does not seem to be any new law in the doctrines here laid down, which is that legislative enactments cannot change or impair the obligation of contracts.

This decision was made in February, 1870, and may have made some men seriously reflect upon the status of the 5-20 bonds, notwithstanding the passage of the act to strengthen the public credit passed March 18, 1869, and it had the effect no doubt to hasten the enactment of the refunding bill passed July 14, 1870, so as to have our 5-20 bonds refunded and made by contract payable in coin, which was done on that date.

And it transpired that the decision in the Hepburn-Griswold case did not then suit the ends of the party. Many of them had debts to pay off that had been contracted before the passage of the Legal-Tender acts, and it suited their convenience to pay just then in greenbacks instead of coin. Bear in mind that no decision had then or ever has been made declaring that debts contracted while the Legal-Tender law was in force could not be paid in United States treasury notes, only that they would not pay the debts contracted before the passage of these acts.

And, having the power, this party no doubt increased the number of Supreme Judges from seven, the number on the bench at the time of the Hepburn-Griswold decision, to consist of nine members, a Chief Justice and eight Associates, and on the 18th day of February, 1870, Justice Strong was appointed, and on the 21st of March Justice Bradley was appointed. Now, with a Supreme bench organized for the very purpose of making a decision that the greenback was constitutional and would discharge any and all debts, whether made before the Legal-Tender acts took effect or subsequent, the case of Knox vs. Lee, and Parker vs. Davis, the one from Texas and the other from Massachusetts, were consolidated and brought before the Supreme Court, and at the request of the court the question of the constitutionality of the Legal-Tender acts was to be fully argued and finally settled by the court, so that the question should be forever put at rest.

I have both arguments and the opinion of the Supreme Court before me. But I cannot read the whole opinion, as it would require much time. I will say that I hope each man who feels an interest in this question will procure and read the decision. I characterize it as the most elaborate and strongest greenback document that is now in print, and of the very highest authority, however, to the jurisprudence of the land. In this case the court held that the Legal-Tender acts were constitutional as applied both to past and future contracts.

The court says:

"Before we can hold the Legal-Tender acts unconstitutional we must be convinced they were not appropriate means, or means conducive to the execution of any or all of the powers of Congress, or of the Government, not appropriate in any degree (for we are not judges of that degree of appropriation), or we must hold they were prohibited."—12 Wallace, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 509.

"The degree of the necessity for any Congressional enactment, or the relative degree of its appropriateness is for consideration in Congress; not here. When the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative ground.—Ibid, 542.

So you see that the question is not decided upon the contingency of war, but the whole matter of the necessity of any constitutional enactment is left to Congress. The whole of this decision leaves the right to issue legal-tender money upon the same authority in the constitution that there is for the Government to make contracts, to require an oath from officers, to build a Presidential mansion, a Capitol or any of the department buildings; to punish robberies of the mails and postoffices, to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature, to provide for taking the statistics of Territories and of the United States, respecting age, sex, health, etc.; to improve rivers and harbors, to establish buoys and light-houses, to establish a United States Bank. All of these things have been and are being done without any express power stated in the constitution. The court says:

"The constitution was intended to frame a Government as distinguished from a league or compact—a Government supreme in some particulars over States and people. It was designed to provide the same currency, having a uniform legal value in all the States. It was for this reason the power to coin money and regulate its value was conferred upon the Federal Government, while the same power as well as the power to emit bills of credit was withheld from the States. The States can no longer declare what shall be money or regulate its value. Whatever power there is over the currency is vested in Congress. If the power to declare what is money is not in Congress, it is annihilated.—Ibid, 545.

"And, generally, when one of such powers was expressly denied to the States only, it was for the purpose of rendering the Federal power more complete and exclusive; how sensible then its framers must have been that emergencies might arise when the precious metals might prove inadequate to the necessities of the Government and the demands of the people—when it is remembered that paper money was almost exclusively in use in the States as the medium of exchange, and when the great evil sought to be remedied was the want of uniformity in the current value of money, it might be argued, we say, that the gift of power to coin money and regulate the value thereof was understood as conveying general power over the currency, and which had belonged to the States, and which they surrendered."—Ibid, 546.

"By the obligation of a contract to pay money is to pay that which law shall recognize as money when the payment is to be made.

"If there is anything settled by decision it is this, and we do not understand it to be controverted. No one ever doubted that a debt of $1,000, contracted before 1834, could be paid by 100 eagles coined after that year, though they contained no more gold than ninety-four eagles coined when the contract was made, and this is not because of the intrinsic value of the coin, but because of its legal value. The eagles coined after 1834 were not money until they were authorized by law, and, had they been coined before, without a law fixing their legal value, they could no more have paid a debt than uncoined bullion, or cotton, or wheat. Every contract for the payment of money is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is, therefore, assumed with reference to that power."—Ibid, 548-9.

"If, therefore, they (the legal-tenders) were, what we have endeavored to show, appropriate ends, they were not transgressive of the authority vested in Congress."—Ibid, 552.

"It is hardly correct to speak of a standard of value. The constitution does not speak of it. It contemplates a standard for that which has gravity or extension; but value is an ideal thing. The coinage acts fix its unit as a dollar; but the gold or silver thing we call a dollar is, in no sense, a standard of a dollar, it is a representative of it. There might never have been a piece of money of the denomination of a dollar.

"It will be seen that we hold the acts of Congress constitutional as applied to contracts made before or after their passage. In so holding we overrule so much of what was decided in Hepburn vs. Griswold as ruled the acts unwarranted by the constitution so far as they apply to contracts made before this enactment."—Ibid, 553.

So the question of the constitutionality of the power of Congress to authorize the issue of legal-tender currency has been settled.

It may be that Wall street and British gold will force from our Judges a reversal of this decision, and foist upon the country a ruling as infamously wicked and baleful as was that in the Dred Scott case. It may be, for gold has become more potent than justice, philanthropy or the rights of the people, but let the perpetrators of such a deed remember the termination of Belshazzar's impious meetings.

The Te-hee.

Perhaps you don't know them by that name. Well, then, suggest a better. They are the salt of our society, in one sense—girls of good minds, minds that will be good if they survive the giggling age, girls of good families, well dressed, polite and fine looking, but possessed of the insane idea that they must laugh upon all occasions, whether there is anything to warrant it or not, else they are not jolly, gay girls and lively company. When a man is amused he laughs with gusto, and then straightens his face till next time, and it has some meaning, but the perpetual grin or giggle is detestable. At a lecture recently I saw six young ladies seemingly convulsed with laughter for five minutes or more at the accidental dropping of a paper of candies over the floor. I think I can go into a social parlor and select the groups of married ladies from those of the girls, not by their faces or their dress, but by the amount of giggling done; matrimony subdues the snicker. Now we are not an old maid with corkscrew curls and vinegar lips and nose out of joint, and we do not speak for sulkiness; but we leave it to THE FREE PRESS or any other philosopher if there isn't a call for reform in this branch of young lady behavior.

An Ignorant Man.

After all, says a quaint writer, George Washington was a very ignorant man. "He never travelled on a steamboat, never saw a railroad or locomotive engine; was perfectly ignorant of the principle of the magnetic telegraph, never had a daguerreotype, Colt's pistol Sharpe's rifle, or used a friction match. He ate his meals with an iron fork, never used postage stamps on his letters and knew nothing of the application of chloroform to alleviate suffering, or the use of gas for illumination." And yet Washington and his associates, whose deficiencies are thus quaintly pictured by the humorist, had some advantages which, with all our boasted modern improvements, we seem to miss in these later days. It is, indeed, not wholly without reason that we lament the disappearance of those gentlemen and ladies of the old school who went out with powdered hair, knee-buckles and brocade dresses. Their picturesque faces linger among us on the canvass of Copley, but their living forms, like their manners and customs, have long since disappeared.

The Indiana Programme.

[Detroit Free Press.]

Some republican papers claim that the republicans are sanguine of carrying the legislature of Indiana this fall, and thus secure the gain of a United States senator. The democrats of the state have little fear of this, and express great confidence in their ability to carry the state by a majority so large as to bring with it a democratic legislature They do not close their eyes to the fact that republican gerrymandering has made the election of a democratic legislature a task of no inconsiderable magnitude. It was calculated at the time of the last legislative apportionment that the districts were so arranged that with a democratic majority of less than 20,000 in the state the legislature would be safely republican. They also remember that although they carried the state handsomely in Oct., 1876, the congressional districts were so gerrymandered that they elected less than one-third of the representatives in congress. But they propose to give a little extra push this year and overcome these obstacles.

Five Lives Saved by a Wonderful Accident.

[Bridgeport Farmer.]

Five Italian rag pickers plied their vocation in the neighborhood of the Naugatuck freight house yesterday, and when night came all lay down on a track in the Housatonic yard to get a sleep before starting to New York on the boat. While they were lying there wrapped in slumber, a Housatonic switch engine came along on the same track, and drawing nearer and nearer to the apparently doomed sleepers, was just about to roll its ponderous weight upon them, when from some cause it jumped the rails and cleared. The rear of the engine swung around and stopped with its hind truck over the foremost sleeper's head. A narrower escape could not be immagined. The Italians did not realize their danger until it was all over, but when they understood what had happened, and what might have happened, they became panic stricken, and ran off as if a deadly peril was still pursuing them. Probably such an opportune jumping off the track by an engine never occurred before.

DRY GOODS, CLOTHING,

HATS & CAPS, GROCERIES.

TO THE FRONT ONCE MORE!

Sending glad tidings to all. High-priced merchants grumble, but the poor are made glad by the news.

$10,000 STOCK of Dry Goods, Clothing, Hats and Caps, Groceries, all bought under the pressure of the great financial embarrassment in the east, that forces wholesalers to turn merchandise into money regardless of loss to themselves. These goods are to be sold at the very lowest possible prices, as our motto is "live and let live."

TO SELL CHEAP GOODS They must be bought cheap. As we handle immense quantities of goods each year and buy them direct from the manufactories, we save the Jobber's profit.

DRY GOODS. In our dry goods department we have all kinds of staple and fancy goods, such as dress goods, muslins, prints, shirtings and jeans. We have the best assortment that can be found in the county.

CLOTHING! CLOTHING! In this department we call especial attention to the styles and prices. We have on hand $5,000 worth of ready-made clothing for fall and winter wear. Suits from $4.00 up to the finest of broadcloth and trecots. Don't fail to call on us when you want anything in this line, if you want to save money, as we have no rents nor clerks to pay, we can sell you clothing from 10 to 15 per cent. less than any other house in the county.

GROCERIES. In our grocery department we have a full supply of staple goods, all at hard-time prices. Remember that we buy our goods on a cash basis, and in order to sell goods low we must sell for cash.

Thanking the public for their generous patronage in the past, we solicit a continuance of the same. By close buying and selling, we hope to convince the people of DeKalb and surrounding counties that Auburn is the place to do their trading. Come to town and get our prices and they will convince you that you can save at least 15 per cent. by buying of the only genuine cheap store in town.

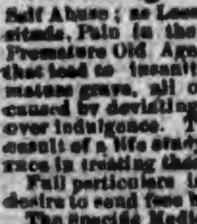
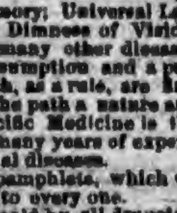
The Great English Remedy.
GRAY'S SPECIFIC MEDICINE



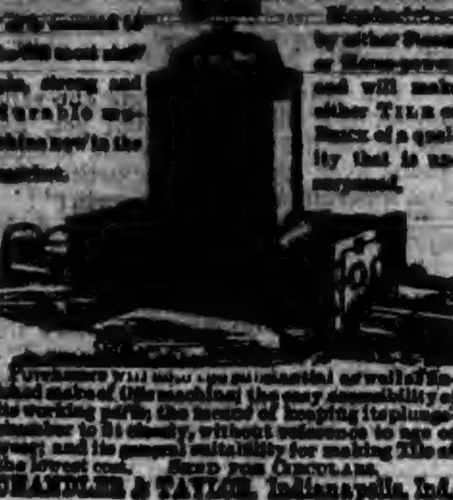


Is especially recommended as an unfailing cure for Seminal Weakness, Spermatorrhea, Impotency and all diseases that follow as a sequence on Self Abuse; as Loss of Memory, Universal Lassitude, Pain in the Back, Dimness of Vision, Premature Old Age, and many other diseases that lead to Insanity, Consumption and a premature grave, all of which, as a rule, are first caused by deviating from the path of nature and over indulgence. The Specific Medicine is the result of a life study and many years of experience in treating these special diseases.

Full particulars in our pamphlets, which we desire to send free by mail to every one.

The Specific Medicine is sold by all druggists at $1 per package or 6 packages for $5, will be sent by mail on receipt of the money by addressing THE GRAY MEDICINE CO.
No. 10 Mechanic's Block, Detroit, Mich.
Sold in Auburn by F. E. Davenport, and all Druggists everywhere.

The PHOENIX DRAIN TILE MACHINE



is pronounced to be the most simple, strong and durable machine now in the market. Manufactured by either Steam or Horse-power, and will make either TILE or BRICK of a quality that is unsurpassed.

Purchasers will note the substantial as well as finished make of the machine; the easy accessibility of its working parts, the means of keeping its plunger chamber to fit closely, without reference to age or wear; and its general suitability for making Tile at the lowest cost. SEND FOR CIRCULARS.

NOTICE TO CONSUMERS
—OF—Tobacco

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many imitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such imitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metallic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade-marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

The genuine Lorillard Tin Tag Tobacco can be distinguished by a Tin Tag on each lump with the word Lorillard stamped thereon.

Over 7,085 tons tobacco sold in 1877, and nearly 3,000 persons employed in factories.

Taxes paid Gov't in 1877 about 3,[illegible], and during past 12 years, over 20,000,000.

These goods sold by all jobbers at manufacturers rates.

45 Years Before the Public.
THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

Democratic Doctrine.

The Platform of the Party Adopted at the State Convention.

A Clear and Unequivocal Enunciation of Principles—Sentiments which the Masses Will Endorse.

The democracy of the State of Indiana, assembled in delegate convention, declare;

That national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are, by the terms of the original contracts under which they were issued, expressly made payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money, as well as coin, is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

That we are in favor of such legislation by congress as will authorize the taxation by the states, of the United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad, through the means of home syndicates or other methods; and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislating so as to distribute said debt among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practicable opportunity for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation as shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public and private; and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon the same terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

That we are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employes of corporations engaged in the business of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that such lien shall be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation.

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and owner.

That the democratic party is the friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last apportionment of the state for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonorable, and we demand that the next legislature, in apportioning the state for legislative purposes, as will be their imperative duty, shall have regard alone to population and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the circuit courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the states tends to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the interests of the people; and we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the constitution and expressed in the judiciary act of 1789.

That we are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the federal government either in lands, bonds, money, or by the pledge of the public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders of the republican party who secretly conceived and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for president and vice-president, were wrongly kept out of the position to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that only can be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the president of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the act of federal officers in attempting to interfere with the rights and powers of the state courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our senators and representatives in congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to the soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

Old Settlers' Meeting.

At a meeting of the Old Settlers of DeKalb county, at Auburn, Ind., on September 12th, 1878, Maj. S. W. Sprott was appointed chairman and T. C. Mays secretary.

Nelson Prentiss, Esq., of Noble county being present, was called upon to suggest a way to proceed to organize an Old Settlers' Association, which he did after the manner followed in Noble county. He read a synopsis of the By-Laws of the Noble county Old Settlers Association, which were amended and adopted. The following persons were in attendance, and the time given when they located in this county.

On motion it was decided to hold the next meeting at Auburn.

On motion each member of the Ex. Committee was requested to take the names of all old settlers in their respective townships, who settled in DeKalb county prior to January 1846, and report them with the date of their arrival to the Secretary of this association.

S. W. SPROTT, Chairman.
T. C. MAYS, Sec'y.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Eld. S. B. Ward	President
P. B. Nimmons	Vice President
W. H. Dills	Secretary
Cyrus Bowman	Treasurer
J. E. Rose	Biographer and Librarian

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Butler	John Hogue
Keyser	O. C. Clark
Jackson	Wm. Carr
Concord	R. Culbertson
Newville	B. F. Blair
Wilmington	Samuel Headly
Auburn	T. D. Gross
Waterloo	John Butt
Richland	N. Griffith
Fairfield	Philip Gushwa
Smithfield	R. G. Daniels
Franklin	R. N. Keep
Troy	Wm. Emerson
Stafford	Henry Wannemaker

The following articles of association were adopted:

1. This association shall be called the Pioneer Association of DeKalb county, Indiana.

2. The officers shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, Biographer and Librarian, and and Executive Committee consisting of one from each township, who shall hold their offices for one year and until their successors are elected.

3. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the Society, and in his absence the Vice President shall preside, and in the absence of both, the meeting shall elect a President pro tem.

4. The Secretary shall procure at the expense of the Society a substantial book in which he shall record these articles of association, and the proceedings of all meetings annual and special together with all written and printed addresses delivered before the annual meetings, and all biographical sketches of such members as shall die during each year, and shall conduct all correspondence of the society, and perform such other duties appertaining to his office as the Society may direct.

5. It shall be the duty of the biographer to present to the Society at each annual meeting the names of all such members as have died since the last annual meeting, together with a sketch of their lives.

6. The Librarian shall take charge of all relics and mementoes of the early settlement of DeKalb county, and of all books and papers deposited with him, and shall carefully preserve the same, and shall record in a book kept for that purpose all such relics, the name and residence of each donor and the date of the gift.

7. The Executive Committee shall have a general supervision of the affairs of the Society. Seven of whom shall constitute a quorum. They shall have power to call special meetings when in their opinion the interest of the society shall demand, and arrange the programme of proceedings of regular meetings, procure speakers and see that a suitable place is provided for holding the meetings, and in addition to their general duties it shall be the duty of each member for his respective township to report to the biographer the names of such members as shall die during each year within ten days after each death, such information to give the name, date and place of birth; time of settlement in Indiana, date of death and such other facts as he shall deem of importance.

8. The annual meetings of the society shall be held on the third Thursday in June in each year.

9. All persons who were residents of Northern Indiana prior to January 1st, 1846, and who are residents of DeKalb county, shall be considered members of this society.

10. Amendments to these regulations may be made at any regular or called meeting, by a vote of a majority of the members present, provided that no change shall be made at a special meeting, unless notice of such proposed change be given in one or more of the newspapers of DeKalb county not less than thirty days before such meeting.

School Library Benefit.

Ever since the opening of the public schools in the new building one of the most serious obstacles to the work of the upper grades has been the want of suitable books of reference.

We have no reference books at all, and yet we need them every day. Text-books are brief; and many things concerning which pupils would like to have and ought to have more information, necessarily receive but a passing notice.

Pupils ought to be gratified in their desire to know more about certain things than they can learn in their text-books; and they should by all means be encouraged in the formation of habit of careful investigation and independent study.

To this end it is proposed to make an effort to raise money enough to buy a set of encyclopedias. We can get nothing from the School Board, for there seems to be no money in the treasury. But we have succeeded in making arrangement with the Rev. Langdon Sanders for a Benefit lecture to be delivered on Friday evening the 27th inst. The members of the Official Board of the Presbyterian church having kindly consented to favor us, the lecture will be given in this church. Tickets will be sold at 25 cents each. The price is low, but if we can succeed in thoroughly filling the church, we shall realize a sufficient amount to make the desired purchase.

We are most sanguine in our expectation that the people of Auburn will not permit this enterprise to fall short of a complete success. Let the church be filled. Your own children are to reap the benefit of your patronage.

M. SEILER, School Supt.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes.

Dr. Price has been years perfecting these exquisite odors. They are not given a title that does not belong to them, but called just what they are—Unique Perfumes, and the makers are not ashamed of their name or afraid to allow them to stand on their own merits.

THE THREE COFFINS.

Three coffins await their final repose
In the ancient cloister's keeping,
And a brief hour hence the lids will close
On the forms beneath them sleeping.

The first is a King who hath ruled the land,
As his fathers did before him;
A jeweled scepter is placed in his hand,
To show how well he bore him.

The next is a chief from the battle-field,
Wounded and bronzed and hoary;
By his side are resting his sword and shield,
The emblems of martial glory.

The third is a lowly son of song,
With no state pomp attended;
The lay of his lyre hath sounded long
Through the aisles—but now is ended.

Hark! what is that at the postern gate
Like the roar of distant water?
'Tis the foe, with bounding hopes elate,
Intent on the work of slaughter!

"Ho! King, awake! remount thy throne,
And 'round thee summon thy sages!"
From the pale, mute lips there is answer none,
While the storm without still rages.

"Ho! chief, awake! to the tents repair—
In the van lead on thy legions!"
They listen, but all is silent there,
Still and hushed as the Polar regions.

From the poet's coffin a sigh is heard,
And the lyre at his bare feet laying
Starts into life, like the trill of a bird
Whose melody knows no staying.

'Tis an old, old theme, but it fires the blood
Of the troops with none to lead 'em,
And they fight, as the valiant always should,
For the love of their faith and freedom!

When the sun goes down in a radiant glow,
With molten clouds attendant,
The three nailed coffins are now laid low—
The cross is in the ascendant!

ROMANCE OF A POSTAGE-STAMP.

I breathed more freely after it was over. It was a temptation resisted, but I felt better after having done it. As I was assorting the letters, preparatory to putting them in the mail-bag for New York, one letter turned up and sent a jealous shock through me that set my heart throbbing and my brain swimming with a sudden dizziness. I might have expected to have seen it, but not the less did it affect me when I did see it—"Joseph Morris, India dock, New York." That was the address, and I knew that it was his. I had a dear little note in that same handwriting next to my heart then—a few graceful words thanking me for a book I had sent her—a little note that I had read over countless times, and kissed as often, wondering would it displease her to know how fondly I cherished it. I thrust the hateful letter out of my sight, and, leaning my head on the table, lived over again the hopes, the fears, the wretchedness of the last twenty-four hours.

The day before, while distributing the mail matter, I came across a letter addressed to myself, and on opening it I learned that, through the generosity of a distant relative, whose name I bore, I had been left in California an inheritance of $20,000. What a change a few strokes of a pen had made—transforming Karl Bergmann, Postmaster of a secluded Connecticut village, into Karl Bergmann, the possessor of a competence, well invested, yielding a certain income! And how before my good fortune I had thought of Annie Merrill as separated away from me by my poor circumstances, my salary barely supporting my mother and myself, and how could I ask any woman to share my poverty! Now that the burden of poverty was most unexpectedly lifted from me, I felt at liberty to tell her the hopes I never dared to entertain till now. What would her answer be? That I would learn that very night. In the same mail with my letter was one addressed to her, postmarked New York. Her correspondence all passed through my hands, but I had never seen that writing before. That was no weak, wavering, feminine style. It was large, clear, decisive, the writing of a self-possessed man. Who could the writer be? Annie's uncle, Dr. Merrill, had male correspondents in New York. But this letter was the first that had come to her since she came orphaned from the great city a year before, and had been received into her uncle's heart and home. But other thoughts put the question of the letter out of my mind. I sent, by a messenger, a few hurried lines to my mother, to prepare her for our good fortune, and then counted the hours that would pass before I could offer my inheritance to Annie, encumbered with its possessor. When I reached home I found her there before me. My mother, who had taken her into her favor from the first, her sweetness and orphaned situation proving a passport to her heart, had sent for Annie to communicate the good news to her. She was strangely quiet, I thought, and there was a troubled look in her blue eyes I never saw there before. In fact, after a while, a subdued feeling stole over us all. Annie's disquiet seemed to impart itself to us. I was thinking how I could venture to tell her all my hopes, and my mother, guessing what my thoughts were, left us together most of the evening, but my heart failed me. It was only when I was walking home with Annie to Dr. Merrill's that I found courage to speak. She led me on by saying that I must not think, from her silence, that she did not rejoice in the happy change in my prospects, but no one could be more sincere in their congratulations than herself. I answered that my good fortune would be valueless to me unless I could share it with the girl I loved.

"The girl you love?" she repeated, questioningly.

I felt her hand tremble on my arm.

"The girl I love," I answered, in tones that she might have interpreted, but failed to do so.

"She ought to be a happy woman," she continued. "May I ask if I know her?"

"If you know her?" I cried. "If you know her! O, who could it be but you?"

"Me?"

She drew her hand quickly away from my arm, and stood quite still before me.

"Me! O, did you say me?"

And then I saw the moonlight falling on her face, and it was not the face of a girl shining with happy confusion when she hears the story of his love from the man whom she prefers. It was pale and shocked, and then she hid it from me in her hands and burst into tears.

I needed no other answer. I knew my suit was hopeless.

"Don't cry, dear!" said I. "I never thought to wound you."

"I thought you knew," she went on, sobbingly. "I thought my uncle might have told you. I am going to marry Mr. Morris. I got a letter from him to-day. O! can you forgive me?"

She stretched out her little hands imploringly. I took them in mine, and I kissed them—they were sacred to me; they belonged to another, and I kissed them while my heart was breaking.

"Forgive you! my darling?" I said. "I would forgive you if you killed me, I think. Don't grieve, Annie; I will try to bear it."

We parted at her uncle's without another word, and I went home to the motherly heart that I knew would suffer with me, but whose tender sympathy would uphold me in this hour of bitter trial.

The next day I sent off my resignation to Washington, for my mother and I agreed to leave the village where we had passed so many quiet years. It was in the afternoon of the same day that the letter of which I had spoken, that I now knew was for my rival, attracted my attention. I took it up reluctantly—I felt that I would as readily have touched a poisonous snake—and was just about to put the postmark on it when I saw that the stamp upon it, instead of being a postal one, was a revenue stamp, and that the letter, instead of speeding off on wings of love to New York, must be consigned to the Dead Letter Office, in Washington. With a thrill of savage delight I flung it into the box appropriated to the reception of such castaways, and went on with my evening's work. With that work I went on mechanically, but my thoughts were not agreeably employed. That then was the answer to the missive she had received. But it should be long before he would get it—get it too late perhaps for an explanation; for misunderstandings between lovers had often arisen from a slighter cause than the non-arrival of an expected letter. I pictured him waiting and longing for the letter that would not come; and she, poor girl, how her tender heart would be tortured by his imagined neglect when no answer would be forthcoming! She, I knew, would suffer in silence, and I fondly hoped that he would do the same. So I locked the mail-bag and waited for the messenger to carry it to the station. The express would pass in an hour and a half. And then a struggle began in my heart. The mis-stamped letter seemed to look reproachfully at me from the box into which I had thrown it, and seemed to whisper to me that one little act of mine could send it unimpeded on its mission.

No one, I believe, unless he was in my situation, actuated by the same despairing, selfishly hopeful feelings that were overmastering me, could understand what a base impulse I conquered when at last, after an hour's temptation, I took that letter from its resting place, substituted a postage stamp for the revenue one, opened the mail-bag and let it go. Then after it was done some hot tears gushed to my eyes. It was my last hope, and I could not help indulging some weakness over its grave.

The next mail from New York arrived three days after. I had the poor satisfaction of seeing the results of my good action in a letter in the handwriting of my rival, addressed to Annie, make its unwished-for appearance, and shortly after Dr. Merrill took it away with him as he called for his mail. Loungers came in and out of the office, finding me little disposed for conversation. Nothing yet was known in the village of my acquisition, so I was spared the pain of listening to congratulations that I was in no mood to hear. When I went home that evening I was surprised to find my mother absent, and still more surprised when, on opening a note she had left for me, I learned she was with Annie at Dr. Merrill's, and that I was to follow her there. Hopeless as I felt, the prospect of seeing Annie again promised me only a painful pleasure, but still the thought of being near her had a sweet and sad fascination that I could not resist. When I reached the doctor's, I found himself and my mother seated in his office, so intent on the moves of a knight's gambit that a mere nod on my entrance showed their consciousness of my arrival. Annie was not there; I found her in the parlor, standing upon the hearth-rug, the glow of the firelight shining upon her golden hair, and a glow of eager, happy expectation in her look that was new to her sweet face.

"I am glad to see you," she said, giving me her hand. "I have been impatient for your coming—and I will tell you why. There is a question I want you to answer. It perplexes me, and somehow I think I can look to you for its solution. You remember a letter I received in the early part of the week?"

She hesitated and cast down her eyes.

"I have too good a reason ever to forget it," I answered bitterly.

I saw her face flush. She went on.

"I answered that letter next day. It was of vital importance to me that it should go then, as there would be no other mail for several days. I was troubled when I wrote it, and stamped it at my uncle's desk while the messenger was waiting to take it to the office. I found, too late, that I had mis-stamped it. I have been utterly wretched for the past few days on account of that mistake. I knew too well what the fate of my letter would be. Judge then how relieved I felt when my uncle brought me this"—taking from the mantel-piece the letter that had come that morning. "If it escaped your keen observation, how did my letter pass the eyes of the New York officials undetected? This is my question."

Her eyes searched my face;
I took her hands in my own.

"Annie," said I, "I believe I could make no one understand what it cost my jealous heart to rectify that mistake, but I did it. I knew it must be in answer to that letter that you spoke of a few nights ago. It ought to prove to you how unselfishly I love you, my darling, when I re-stamped it and sent it on its way to him. I never thought you would find it out. I did it to spare you a moment's uneasiness. If the man you love cares for you as much as I do, he will make your life a happy one."

"How can I repay your generosity?" she said, in a voice tremulous with feeling. "You could not have acted better if you had had a peep at the contents of that letter. But your reward may be claimed when you read this."

She handed me the letter and glided out of the room. I took it over to the shaded lamp and read the following:

DEAR ANNIE: When, beside your father's dying bed, we entered into an engagement of marriage, I felt, as he did, that the interests of the firm of which he and I were partners would be best assured by our union.

I wrote to you, notifying you of my readiness to fulfill my part of the agreement, and requested you to be ready to return with me on Saturday as my wife. You say to me that I must not come. There is but one explanation to this refusal, and that is that you have seen some one who pleases you better than your humble servant. It is but natural, child; I cannot blame you. The young should mate with the young, and I am too much your senior to expect to awake in your youthful heart feelings that have long been lifeless in my own. I release you from a promise that I am now aware was made by you under the pressure of the sad circumstances. But this fact can never affect the fatherly regard I have ever entertained for the only child of my dear old friend.

I read no further. Here was my reward. And how nearly I had lost it by the desire of gratifying an ungenerous impulse! Annie has since assured me that, had Joseph Morris arrived on the day designated, so great was her awe of her father's old partner that she never would have had the courage to contend against her destiny. Indeed, the circumstance of having made the error she did, in mis-stamping the letter, seemed to her troubled mind significant of a deep meaning, and that even beyond the grave her father sought to control her actions.

Annie did not return to the parlor. I found her seated in the doctor's office, apparently interested in the game which just at the moment of my entrance he brought to a victorious conclusion.

"Check——"

"Mate," I cried, finishing the word for him, and, catching Annie in my arms, heedless of the astonishment of the elderly pair, I demanded my reward.

Well, Joseph Morris, gray-haired, commonplace and undemonstrative, came to Greenwell to other nuptials than his own. He gave away my dear one with the best of grace, and after the marriage congratulated me on my admission into the firm. My ignorance of his meaning was so apparent that with a grim smile he enlightened me. With my bride I acquired a half interest in an East India firm in New York and Calcutta. If Annie had chosen to appeal as an orphan, dependent on the bounty of her uncle, she had the after satisfaction of knowing that the love she had won was offered to herself alone, and not to the golden store that attracts so many suitors.

"My dearest," I sometimes say to her, "who would think that in a great measure we owe our happiness to a little postage stamp?"

A Curiosity of Numbers.

The multiplication of 987,654,321 by 45 is 44,444,444,445. Reversing the order of the digits, and multiplying 123,456,789 by 45, we get the result equally curious, 5,555,555,505. If we take 123,456,789 as the multiplicand, and, interchanging the figures of 45, take 54 as the multiplier, we obtain another remarkable product, 6,666,666,606. Returning to the multiplicand first used, 987,654,321, and taking 54 as multiplier again, we get 53,333,333,334—all threes, except the first and last figures, which read together 54, the multiplier. Taking the same multiplicand and using 27, the half of 54, as the multiplier, we get a product of 26,666,666,667—all sixes except the first and last figures, which read together 27, the multiplier. Next, interchanging the figures in the number 27, and using 72 as the multiplier, with 987,654,321 as the multiplicand, we obtain the product of 71,111,111,112, all ones, except the first and last figures, which, read together, give 72, the multiplier.

Equally curious results may be obtained by multiplying these digits, written either way, by 9, or by the figures composing the multiples of 9 variously interchanged.

Mr. Hale's Eels.

There is a curious case at Rockport of the singular attachment sometimes instituted between man and the lower animals. A Mr. Hale has been for a long time accustomed to throw bits of food for some eels in a little brook that runs along the back of his lot. Latterly he observed that they seemed to be waiting for his visit, and with a little training they were induced to eat food directly from his hand. Then they learned to play and fondle about his fingers, held in the water, and enjoyed his caresses. More recently the largest one of the four—a huge old fellow, over two feet long and very large around—allows Mr. Hale to take him entirely out of the water, slide him about freely from hand to hand, apparently enjoying the novel gymnastics. When Mr. Hale goes to the brook he calls them with a peculiar whistle, and they soon come rushing briskly from down stream. Not long ago he brought them his usual lunch of fish and mackerel, when only the large one came. The eel waited a few moments, then turned down stream, and soon came back, bringing his tardy family to supper.—Boston Globe.

A Colt's Rescue of a Mate.

Martin Hayner, of Brunswick, is the proud possessor of a fine pair of colts. One day last week they were pasturing on his farm, through which a ditch had recently been dug, quite a distance from the house. One of the animals fell into the ditch, in some way striking upon its back, with its feet pawing helplessly in the air, and utterly unable to regain its equilibrium. The other colt, discovering the predicament of its mate, began running from the house to the ditch, making more than half a dozen trips before Mr. Hayner's attention was specially attracted. He finally entered the inclosure where his colt was neighing, when it seized hold of his coat and pulled in the direction of its mate. Mr. Hayner found his other colt in the position named, and with difficulty rescued it. Such intelligence is certainly remarkable, and worthy of the recognition we have accorded it.—Troy (N. Y.) Times.

AND he went on to say: "Because you have lost money by rotten securities, you say you cannot give for charity. But many of you give dinner parties, and you must cut these off before you do your charities." Some of the congregation were indignant at this sort of practical preaching, and a millionaire, on coming out, said it was shamefully personal. "Not on you, brother," said the deacon, "for he knows you never gave a dinner to anybody."

POPULAR SCIENCE.

THE brain and heart are the chief instruments of the lungs, and are alike insensible. The cerebrum may be pressed or cut without pain, and in the time of Harvey a young man had his heart exposed by a disease, and Harvey handled it without his fingers being felt.

MR. EDISON has invented a toy which he calls the phonomotor. The vibrations produced by speaking into a cone terminated with a diaphragm communicate motion to a spring and pawl which act in turning round a ratchet wheel on a shaft carrying a fly-wheel.

WHEAT grains have a vitality which resists intense cold. A sample of the wheat left by the Polaris, in 1871, in 81 deg. and 16 min. north latitude, and exposed to a temperature varying from that of summer to that of winter in that position for five years, was sown last year by Dr. Schanburgh, of the Botanic Gardens and Government Plantations, South Australia, and out of 300 grains 60 germinated and produced plants, three and four feet high, with ears containing 30 grains each.

IT may surprise the general reader to learn that the coal production of China has already reached 3,000,000 tons annually, and is rapidly increasing. Of this production about 1,000,000 tons represent the output of the anthracite beds of the province of Shan-si. Speaking of this, the most extensive deposit of the empire, Baron Richtofen affirms that its area vastly exceeds that of the anthracite region of this country, and that no other coal-field in the world can be compared with it in the union of the most favorable conditions as regards position, quantity and quality. He pronounces the opinion that in the near future these deposits will rise immensely in importance.—Harper's Magazine for September.

MR. JEFFREY has established the fact that bones disappear in the ocean. By dredging, it is common to bring up teeth, but rarely ever a bone of any kind. These, however compact, dissolve if exposed to the action of water but a little time. On the contrary, teeth—which are not bones any more than whales are fish—resist the destroying action of sea water indefinitely. Dentine, the peculiar material of which teeth are formed, and the enamel covering them, offer extraordinary resistance to these chemical agencies, which resolve other animal remains into nothingness. Mounds in the West, and tumuli in Europe and Asia, which are believed to antedate sacred history thousands of years, yield up perfectly sound teeth, on which time appears to have made no impression whatever.

A BELGIAN scientific jury has lately awarded to M. Melsens the Guinard prize of 10,000 francs for the best contribution to the amelioration of the condition of the working classes. The award was based upon the important discovery of M. Melsens of an effective remedy for mercury and lead poisoning, to the effects of which workmen employed in many occupations requiring the manipulation of these metals are dangerously exposed, and especially to the insidious cumulative effects resulting in chronic evils which have heretofore been obstinately incurable. The remedy proposed by M. Melsens, and which he has demonstrated to be efficacious not only in the cure of chronic cases resulting from years of exposure to and accumulation of the poison in the system, but also in the prevention of disease from these sources, is the iodide of potassium. The action of the iodide is to transform into soluble form and to eliminate from the system the accumulation of insoluble metallic compounds, upon the presence of which the affections of the organs involved by the disease depend. The French Academy likewise has crowned this important discovery with the Monthyon prize.—Harper's Magazine for September.

A Romance of the Border.

There passed down on the train the other day an aged but smart-looking lady, between 60 and 70 years of age, having with her a little child about 2 years old, whose dark complexion unmistakably betokened Indian origin and naturally excited some curiosity. The lady was communicative and told a story filled with romance. She was a widow, with an only son living in Connecticut. Her boy grew to be a young man, and, filled with a love of adventure, he forsook the parental roof and came West. His rovings at last led him to Bismarck, D. T., where he became interested with Indian traders, and finally married the daughter of a chief, the fruit of the union being one child. At length, in an engagement with the hostiles, the young man was killed. The sad news in due time reached his mother. She was almost disconsolate in her grief. With true maternal affection she at once resolved to search for her son's child, and, if possible, find in it an object upon which she might bestow her care and motherly love. Forthwith she journeyed to Minnesota. The difficulties in the way formed no barrier to her New England energy. Her diligent inquiries along the Northern Pacific railroad brought to her acquaintance a man who had known her son. For $50 he offered to find the squaw who had been the son's wife. Without going into details of the search it is sufficient to say that the tribe of Indians was found, and with it the squaw and the child. When the lady first saw her grandchild she thought she could discern in his features a resemblance to her son, but when the little one was in the midst of a number of Indian children it was hard to discover much difference. Nevertheless, the grandmother of the dusky little half-breed was bent on having him brought up under the gentle influences of Connecticut civilization, and she quieted her compunctions of bartering in human flesh by the exigencies of the case and the gift of six sacks of flour to the bereaved Indian widow. The old lady departed with her new-found treasure, as happy as a boy with a new toy. She fondled the little Sioux with indescribable affection, and the little chap responded by making his doting grandma buy him all the peaches and pears that the train-boy offered. The picture of youth and old age seldom has more romance done up in a couple than was here presented. It will not be surprising one of these days to hear of that cultivated little savage pulling with the Harvard crew.—Winona (Minn.) Republican.

Two Courtings.

But it is the story of Ursula's courtship, as she herself once told it to a teasing and favorite child, that the reader shall have as that of another "woman who dared."

It happened in this wise. Mr. Matthew Griswold, tall, shy and awkward, but scholarly and kind, early in his life wooed a lady in a distant town, who had another string to her bow in the person of a village doctor. For a long time she had kept her Lyme lover in a state of uncertainty, in the hope that she might draw out a proposal from his professed rival. After some months of this dallying Mr. Griswold determined to have the matter settled, and so one day rode to town, entered her house, and once more tendered heart and hand.

"Oh, Mr. Griswold, you must give me more time," said the lady.

"I give you your lifetime, miss," was the indignant reply; whereat the youth bowed himself out, flung into the saddle and galloped away forever, leaving the maiden, who maiden was forevermore, as her bird in the bush was never caught.

To Matthew, disconsolate at his beautiful home amid the magnificent groves of elms that still shelter the old Griswold homestead at Black Hall, on the shore of the sound, just east of the mouth of the Connecticut river, appeared soon after his cousin Ursula, a little his senior in years, but inheriting the beauty, pride and ready wit of her grandmother, Martha.

She "came, saw, conquered;" but, warned by his past experience, Matthew was slow to speak, though his looks and actions betrayed his feelings toward his pretty cousin.

Things ran on this way for a space, until, one stormy day near the close of her visit, Ursula, descending the dark, old oaken staircase, suddenly encountered her cousin ascending. Meeting him more than half way, she, stopping suddenly, said sweetly:

"What did you say, Cousin Matthew?"

"Oh, I didn't speak; I didn't say anything."

"High time you did, cousin; high time you did."

The future Governor was not slow to take the hint, and speedily found his tongue, and that is how Ursula Wolcott became Ursula Griswold, and for twenty-five years always had a near relative in the Governor's chair in old Connecticut.—Sunday Afternoon.

"JUG-BREAKING" is an amusement in some country towns in Ohio. People meet, generally at church, bringing with them all the jugs which have accumulated in their households. A small admission fee is charged. While one of the number breaks the jug with a hammer, the rest sing songs, the "Little Brown Jug" being an especial favorite. Some of the more charitable people put in the jugs various articles, and the contents of the jugs and the money taken at the door are turned over to one or other of the churches.

AN M. D. who lately opened an office was favored by a visit from his young wife. Wishing to start an interesting subject for conversation, he said: "My dear, how many people do you suppose pass by my office in the course of an hour?" "I should judge they all passed by," nonchalantly exclaimed the wife.

WILYUM'S WATERMILLIONS.

You, Wilyum, come here, sir, dis instant! Wat dat you got under dat box?
I want no circumlocution' now! what you say, sir? Ain't nuffin but rocks?
S'pose ter me you is mougty partic'lar—perhaps dey is of a new breed—
I'll jis take a look. Well! ef dat ain't de cur'ousest rock I ever seed.

I calls dat a plain watermillion, you scamp! an' I knows wha' it growed—
It comed f'um de Jimmerson cornfiel', da on t'other side o' de road.
You stole it, you rascal! you stole it! I watched you f'um down in de lot;
An' time I gits th'ough wid you, nigger, you won't be worth a greasy spot!

I'll fix you! Abe Lincoln! Abe Lincoln! go an' [illegible] me a hick'ry! [illegible] quick!
An' cut me de toughest, too, sir, you kin find dis side o' de crick!
I'll larn you, you Wilyum Ike Potter, to steal an' lie, you young sinner, Disgracin' yo' ole Christian mammy, an' makin' her leave cookin' dinner!

Now, ain't you ashamed o' yo'sef, sir? I am! I'm ashamed you's my son!
An' de good old Recordin' Angel, he's ashamed, sir, o' what you has done;
An' he's wrote it down up yonder, in [illegible] an' great big letters,
"One watermillion, stoled by Wilyum Isaac Potter."

An' what do you s'pose Brudder Bascom, yo' teacher at Sunday-school,
Would say, ef he knowed how awful you's gone 'ginst the Golden Rule?
Boy! what is de raisin' I gi'ed you? Is you boun' fur to be a black villun?
I'm s'prised dat a chile o' yo' mammy would steal any man's watermillion!

An' I'm gwine now to cut it right open, an' you, sir, shan't have narry bite!
Fur a boy who will steal watermillions—an' right in open daylight—
Ain't—Lawdy! it's GREEN! Abe Lincoln! Abe Li-n-c-o-l-n! make 'ase' wi' dat switch!
Well!—stealin' a g-r-e-e-n wa-ter-mil-lion! who ever heerd tell of jis sich?

Ca'n't tell when dey's ripe? W'y, thump um—an' when dey go pank dey is green;
But when dey go punk, now you mind me, dey is ripe—an' dat is jis what I mean!
An' nex' time you hook watermillions, you heard me, you ign'ant young hunk!
Ef you don't want a lickin' all over, be sho' dat dey all 'il go punk!

THE following extraordinary vow is performed by some of the Hindoos at their festival of Charak Puja: Stretching himself on the earth on his back, the devotee takes a handful of moist earth, and, placing it on his under lip, he plants in it some mustard seed and exposes himself to the dews of the night and the heat of the day till the seed germinates. In this position the man must lie in a fixed, motionless condition, without food or drink, till the vegetable process liberates him, which will be, generally, about the fourth day.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

COLD FEET.

The feet require more frequent washing than the hands; frequent washing and liberal friction with a coarse towel will promote circulation and consequent warmth. Good health is not attainable if the extremities are habitually cold.

ATMOSPHERIC AIR.

The air that passes out of our lungs is quite unfit to support life if breathed again, even when mixed with ten times its bulk of pure air; therefore, the air of sleeping- and living- rooms must be constantly changed or it will soon become poisonous.

REMEDY FOR TYPHOID FEVER.

A new remedy, proposed by Dr. Netter, of Strasburg, to be used in typhoid fever, has been published. Its salutary effects are officially authenticated. It consists of a decoction made of one litre barley water, 100 grammes vinegar, and 120 grammes liquid honey, with which the throat and mouth are to be washed out, in order to remove organic matters which are secreted and deposited there, and which decompose and are likely to be swallowed, or reabsorbed with increased tonic effects.

A CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.

The celebrated Dr. Field, during the ravages of diphtheria in England, a few years since, used the following remedy: A teaspoonful of flowers of brimstone in a wineglass of water, stirred with the finger rather than a spoon, as sulphur does not readily amalgamate with water; when well mixed use as a gargle and swallow. In extreme cases, where the fungus was too nearly closed to allow gargling, he blew the sulphur through a quill into the throat, and, after the fungus had shrunk, then gargled. If the patient cannot gargle, sprinkle the flowers of brimstone on a live coal and let him inhale the fumes. Brimstone kills every species of fungus in man, beast, and plant. Dr. Field never lost a patient from diphtheria during all his immense practice.

A HOMELY CURE FOR BILE.

Here is rather a curious remedy, says Cassell's Family Magazine, but in many cases a very certain one, for the cure of indigestion. It is simply the habit of chewing, while out of doors, different kinds of green leaves and swallowing the juice. One can always cull a leave from a hedge, or bush, as one passes. Almost all are good that are not nauseous, such as the ivy, or poisonous, as the laurel leaf. One of the latter, however, is a capital thing where there is a slight irritation of the stomach. The chewing of leaves cures dyspepsia, principally, I believe, by increasing the flow of the salivary juice, and partly by the tonic or stimulating action of the leaf chewed. The leaves that occur to me at present as most likely to be beneficial are those of the pine trees, spruce or Scotch fir, blackthorn, currant and rose-bushes, mint, the petals of many flowers, the stalks of mountain daisies, the white portion of rushes, the bark of many young trees, and the tender parts of the stalks of green wheat, oats, or almost any of the larger grasses; but your own taste must in a great measure guide you, if you elect to make trial of my remedy. I should say, however, that the chewing is better to take place before or between meals than immediately after.

WARM AND COLD BATHS.

An article of a very interesting and instructive nature, on the physiological action of baths, was published in a late number of the London Lancet. Summing up, the writer notes that warm baths produce an effect upon the skin directly contrary to that which is brought about by cold water. The cutaneous vessels dilate immediately under the influence of the heat, and, although the dilation is followed by a contraction, this contraction is seldom excessive, and the ultimate result of a warm bath is to increase the cutaneous circulation. The pulse and respiration are both quickened in the cold bath. The warm bath increases the temperature of the body, and, by lessening the necessity for the internal production of heat, it decreases the call which is made upon certain of the vital processes, and enables life to be sustained with a less expenditure of force. While a cold bath causes a certain stiffness of the muscles if continued too long, a warm bath relieves stiffness and fatigue. The final effect of both hot and cold baths, if the temperature be moderate, is the same, the difference being, to use the words of Braun, that "cold refreshes by stimulating the functions, heat by physically facilitating them, and in this lies the important difference between the cold-water system and the thermal mode of treatment."

Not a Dress Parade.

Riding alone into the camp early in the afternoon, I directed my horse's steps to a group of men whom I supposed to be officers, quite as much from their general bearing as from any display of uniform by them. Standing a few feet apart from the rest was an individual dressed in a soft felt hat that looked as if it had gone through several campaigns and got the worst of every one of them, a gray-flannel shirt, a pair of dirty, reddish pants, stuck into a rough pair of boots, a cartridge belt suspended around his waist, and with his beard divided and tied with two pieces of cord. Altogether he was a pretty hard-looking character, who, I supposed, might be an indifferent sort of a teamster. Dismounting in front of this group, I inquired for Gen. Crook. My teamster friend stepped forward. He was no less distinguished a personage than Brig. Gen. Crook, United States army, commanding the Department of the Platte. And in this connection I may as well state a fact that will disabuse the popular mind of the idea that army officers and the soldiers start out on an Indian campaign as if on a grand pleasure tour, in full-dress uniform, and with all the accompaniments of easy comfort, if not of luxury. The pen picture I have given of Gen. Crook is from life, and such might be the pen picture I could draw of most of the officers in active Indian service. The troops on a campaign form a veritable Falstaff's army in their dress, and, at a short distance, it is generally impossible to distinguish officers from men. This is inevitable from the nature of the service. I had some considerable "roughing" experience before, but I never realized how utterly regardless of my personal appearance I could be until I went on that campaign, and I seriously question whether my own brother could have readily recognized me in the roughly-dressed, sun-burned, unshaven, and generally-demoralized being into which I soon degenerated after going into the field. Indian campaigning is not a full-dress parade affair by any means, much as the growlers at the army would like to have the public believe it to be.—Penn Monthly.

Woman's Devotion.

The following story, says an exchange, is true in every detail: A milliner of respectability married a dissipated tailor, who abused, neglected and abandoned her. Several years having passed without a clew to his whereabouts, her friends advised divorce and her acceptance of an advantageous offer in marriage. The woman persistently declined every offer, and, when she had accumulated a sufficient sum, started off in the direction her husband was supposed to have taken when he left her. At Halifax, Nova Scotia, she received a slight clew, and took the steamer to Portland, Me. Thence she followed his track to New York, where she ceased, for many months, to hear of him. Finally she found that he was working in Albany, for which place she immediately started. She was about a week too late; he had been discharged for drunkenness. Spending her days at lucrative work and her evenings at detective service, the unwearying wife at length discovered that he was employed by a large firm in Chicago. She wrote there, and was answered that her husband had gone away, nobody knew where. Not satisfied with this, she traveled to Chicago and ransacked every concern interested in the tailoring business there, until she met a fellow countryman, who said that her husband, when last heard from, was in Omaha city. She wrote there, got no answer, but went on. There she heard that he had certainly left for San Francisco, where he had obtained a fine place as cutter in a large firm. She, of course, went thither, only to be told that her husband had been several days away from work, and was drinking hard. He had not been even to his boarding-house. This led her to visit the station-houses, and in one of them she ascertained that her husband was in jail for ten days. He was released and prevailed upon to return home after six years' absence. All this occurred eighteen years ago, and to-day the prodigal husband of yore is a strict temperance man in independent circumstances, a model husband and father, and a respected citizen.

Sherman and the Trade Dollars.

Secretary Sherman has addressed a long letter to O. H. Booth, of Mansfield, Ohio, concerning the issue of the trade dollar and the present depreciation of its value. Upon the latter point Mr. Sherman says:

"At no time and on no account have they ever been received or paid out by the treasury, and it is cause of regret that so many of our people should have accepted them at their face value, thus enabling their owners to put them into circulation at considerable profit. Under date of July 25, 1878, the Director of the Mint published tables from which the value of coins can be ascertained. He does not advise anyone to dispose of them at such rates. As early as Aug. 24, 1876, the department informed an inquirer that the trade dollar had only a bullion value, and this information has been repeated scores of times, and published by the press throughout the country. To avoid the labor of preparing manuscript letters, the Director of the Mint embodied the information in a circular, adding thereto tables for the computation of such value. There was no new decision involved in the circular, though possibly its publication may have hastened the depreciation of the coins to their true value—an event which was inevitable, and could not have been much longer delayed."

Killed by a Crazy Inventor.

A sad affair occurred at the lunatic asylum here to-day, which resulted in the death of Gen. John F. Taliaferro, one of the inmates. It appears that Capt. Newton Cunningham, an inmate of the asylum, had gone crazy a year ago on the subject of the flying machine. He had also a theory of perpetual motion, which was to be utilized in a flying machine that he was constructing. He has not been violent since being in the asylum and the Superintendent had allowed him to do pretty much as he pleased. Most of his time, therefore, was spent at work on the flying machine. Gen. Taliaferro, who is an inoffensive party 86 years old, was sitting this morning with Cunningham talking about the latter's hobby, and remarked: "I'll bet my hat that the machine is a fizzle," when Cunningham jerked up a stick and laid the old gentleman out. It is stated that the murderer was not satisfied with killing the General, but, after he was dead, continued to beat him with the club. Cunningham is about 38 years old. Gen. Taliaferro had been a prominent citizen of the Old Dominion, and was a Lieutenant in the war of 1812.—Richmond (Va.) paper.

A Wisconsin Snake Story.

Edward Gantz, of Black Hawk, Wis., while at work in a field, the other day, heard a peculiar noise near the fence in an adjoining field. Crossing, he found a large snake complacently sunning itself. On seeing him the snake opened its mouth, and instantly a stream of young snakes, that Gantz had not until then noticed, sought refuge down its throat. The snake then presented the appearance of having swallowed a couple of toads. Gantz struck it and it burst, when the young snakes escaped through the aperture and immediately took the defensive. He killed them all and found that there were forty-six of them. They were about six inches long. The old one measured about six feet.

A NATIONAL RAILROAD.

One Man's Solution of the Transportation Question—An Exclusively Freight Railroad Will Pay if It Is Narrow-Gauge.

Stephen D. Dillaye has an article in Scribner's Monthly for September, in which he demonstrates that narrow-gauge railroads are essential to cheap transportation. He claims that there is a saving; first, in construction; second, in equipment; third, in dead weight; fourth, in increased relative power to carry freight; fifth, decrease in wear and tear; sixth, decrease in running expenses.

The saving in construction cannot be accurately settled until the exact gauge is fixed and the route is established. Three feet, or three feet six inches should be settled upon. With either of these gauges the saving will vary but little, if any, from 40 per cent. Actual and varied experiences have established this conclusion. These experiences have resulted from works entered upon on the report of a committee appointed by various European, Asiatic and South American Governments to visit the Festiniog road, and examine its working capacity, feasibility and general utility. In July, 1870, this committee met. It was composed of the most experienced and thoroughly educated railroad engineers of Europe. They examined in detail the engines, cars and every element of practical importance in their weight, construction, size, durability, etc. The result was a unanimous concurrence in a report favorable to narrow-gauge; and all the details so successfully demonstrated in the twenty years' experiment of the Festiniog road. Russia at once adopted the report of its commission, and constructed the imperial Livny narrow-gauge road, which it has since operated with triumphant success. Its cost (it is a three feet six inch track) was 40 per cent. less than four feet eight and a half inch gauge, through a corresponding country and grades. Uniformity of result has shown that the cost diminishes with the width of the track. In India, Australia, Norway, Canada, North Germany and the United States the cost has been as follows per mile: Australia, $32,000; India, $19,000; Norway, from $15,000 to $26,000; Canada, $14,000; Western States, $10,000 to $12,000; Tennessee, $11,500. The Railway Times estimates the cost in ordinary routes at $13,500, against $24,000 for four feet eight and a half inch grade. The New York Tribune, after exhaustive examination, fixed the cost of a fully-equipped single track at $16,400, as against $25,400 for four feet eight and a half. The Denver and Rio Grande narrow-gauge cost $13,500 against $25,500 for a four foot eight and a half inch on like routes.

SAVING IN EQUIPMENT.

This cannot be accurately settled until the gauge is settled and the route established. The Committee of English Governments, before alluded to, examined every detail in the Festiniog road. The Russian, Indian, South American, Australian, and North American roads have verified the conclusions reached. The capacity of platform, gondola, and box cars, of 1,776 pounds, would average 18,260 of freight. The cost of platform cars carrying for each wheel 3,150, would be $350, or $18.42 for each 1,000 pounds of capacity, and the capacity of freight to dead weight 1 to 2 8-10. The gondola would carry to each wheel 3,156; cost $385, or $21.39 for 1,000 pounds of capacity; proportion of dead weight 1 to 2 48-100. Box cars carrying to each wheel 3,300; cost $450, or $25.71 for each 1,000 pounds of capacity, with capacity as one is to two.

The Russian narrow gauge has demonstrated that a platform car, weighing 1 ton 1,300 pounds, will carry 5 tons, 1,900 pounds. An open car weighing 1 ton 1,700 will carry 5 tons 1,600 pounds. A closed car, weighing 2 tons 100 pounds, will carry 5 tons 900 pounds, so that in carrying 350 tons, 242 would be freight and 108 dead weight. The difference in weight, capacity, and cost between eight-wheeled cars for a four-feet-eight-inch and a three-feet-six-inch gauge is as follows: Three feet, weight, 8,800 pounds; capacity, 17,600; cost, $558. Four feet eight inches, weight 19,000; capacity in full, 18,000; cost, $735. Platform three feet gauge, weight, 6,250; capacity, 19,000; cost, $350. For four feet eight and a half inches gauge, weight, 18,000, capacity, 18,000; cost, $575. For gondola three feet gauge, weight, 7,250; capacity, 18,000; cost, $385. For four feet eight and a half inches gauge, weight, 18,500; cost, $625. These estimates are taken from actual working weight on cars on the Pennsylvania road, as compared with the Denver and Rio Grande narrow gauge.

SAVING IN DEAD-WEIGHT.

The saving in dead-weight, on the narrow gauge, in cars to carry 100 tons is 103,000 pounds. The most expert and experienced engineers give the result as averaging on a three-feet track two and eight-tenths of paying freight to one ton of dead weight, and it is not contended that on a four-feet-eight-inch track the capacity to carry freight is beyond the dead-weight. This is the result of actual and prolonged experiments. The difference is demonstrated by the operations of two representative roads. On the London and Northwestern, wide gauge, a freight train, weighing with freight, 250 tons, is made up of 50 tons of freight to 200 tons of dead-weight. On the Imperial Livny Russian, narrow gauge, a train weighing 354 tons is made to carry 260 tons of freight and 94 tons of dead-weight. To carry this 260 tons of freight, the wide gauge requires as an average 1,040 tons of carriages. As 94 tons is to 1,040, so is the difference between the two systems. This brings me to

THE INCREASED POWER TO CARRY FREIGHT.

Actual statistics show that the four-feet-eight-inch gauge uses four tons of dead-weight to carry one ton of freight. The fact is deduced from a report of Mr. Sweet, an eminent and well-known engineer of New York, made up from the working tables of the various wide-gauge roads. All freight carried on passenger roads—and nearly every road in the United States has been constructed with special reference to the passenger traffic—is carried at double the expense that it could be carried on pure freight roads. I have shown that it can be carried on narrow-gauge at one-half the expense it can be carried on wide gauges. These facts established, I am brought to the question of

DECREASED WEAR AND TEAR.

This results from decreased friction, decreased weight, and decreased collisions. The wear and tear on rolling stock and on the rails and road-bed is conceded to be in exact ratio to the width between the rails and to the weight and speed with which trains are rolled over the track. On the basis I have shown, a four-feet-eight-inch track would have to bear the friction of 50,000,000 tons, to 20,000,000 tons on a three-feet track, to carry the same amount of freight. The ratio then is 20 to 50 in favor of the narrow gauge. So, too, the wear and tear, as the train is drawn faster than ten miles an hour, is increased in the exact ratio of the increase of speed. The principles which determine these results are too plain to require further elucidation, and I proceed to the matter of

DECREASED RUNNING EXPENSES.

The expenses of running a railroad are measured generally, first, by the cost of construction and equipment, and second by the passengers and freight it carries. The cost of rolling-stock between the three-feet and the four-feet-eight-inch track is as 21 is to 32, and the structure as 20 is to 30. The capacity as 2 8-10 is to 1, so that the cost of running a narrow gauge would be less than one-half the cost of running a wide gauge.

Edison.

Prof. Edison, while in Virginia City, Nev., stepped into a telegraph office, and a local paper describes him as "the worst-dressed man in the room by all odds. An old black hat, a cheap shirt with the stud-holes in the bosom unoccupied, a two-bit necktie several months old, coarse pants and vest, and a mouse-colored linen duster completed his attire. One of the office-boys asked him to put his name in an autograph album. He wrote a line that looked like print, and fixed his name at the bottom. Everybody admired the marvelous penmanship, which was emphatically a new style. The letters were awkwardly made, taken singly, but when grouped in a line all looked exactly alike, as if engraved on copperplate. 'You couldn't take thirty words a minute and print like that,' said one. 'I can take forty,' was the reply. The fastest operator present took one end of the wire, and Edison, sitting at the receiver, picked up a sheet of paper and said, 'Let the message come.' He sat there three minutes and took 130 words with apparent ease, doing better than he had promised. The dispatch was written in the faultless hand that graced the autograph album."

A French Invention.

A remarkable invention, and one which seems of the highest practicality, in view of the constantly-recurring horrors of death from hydrophobia, is an instrument for blunting the teeth of dogs. It appears that there would be no danger to human beings from a dog attacked with madness if his teeth could not tear the skin and allow his virus to penetrate the blood. The inventor has so much confidence in his method that he is willing to let any mad dog bite at him as much as he likes after the animal's teeth have been blunted.—Paris letter.

Encouragement for the Feeble.

So long as the failing embers of vitality are capable of being rekindled into a warm and genial glow, just so long there is hope for the weak and emaciated invalid. Let him not, therefore, despond, but derive encouragement from this and from the further fact that there is a restorative most potent in renewing the dilapidated powers of a broken-down system. Yes, thanks to its unexampled tonic virtues, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is daily reviving strength in the bodies and hope in the minds of the feeble and nervous. Appetite, refreshing sleep, the acquisition of flesh and color, are blessings attendant upon the reparative processes which this priceless invigorant speedily initiates and carries to a successful conclusion. Digestion is restored, the blood fertilized and sustenance afforded to each life-sustaining organ by the Bitters, which is inoffensive even to the feminine palate, vegetable in composition, and thoroughly safe. Use it, and regain vigor!

Does the World Move?

The Rev. John Jasper, of Virginia, says, "Do sun do move, for in de mornin' it shines on dis side ob de hous, whil in de ebenin, on dat side ob de hous. Now, ef he don't move, how come he dar?" Notwithstanding Mr. Jasper's logic, we yet believe the world moves. When Mr. Jasper's ideas constituted the popular belief, people thought that to die of small-pox or cholera was simply fulfilling one of nature's laws. Now, through vaccination, small-pox is averted, while cholera, cholera morbus, dysentery (flux), and diarrhea are readily cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed. Does not such evidence tend to prove that "the world moves?" As an external remedy for cuts, bruises, sprains, swellings, bites and stings of insects, the Compound Extract of Smart-Weed has no equal. Veterinary surgeons have also employed it with marked success.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co. Reply to the New York Herald.

[From the New York Herald of Aug. 8.

We make, therefore, the following proposition to Rowell & Co.: If they, or their friends for them, will put up $25,000, with the condition that this sum shall be paid by them to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, or to any public charity that may be agreed on, in case the sworn report of the Herald's circulation is shown by proper and thorough examination to be correct, the Herald will also put up an equal sum of $25,000, which it will agree shall be paid over to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, or to any public charity that may be agreed on, in case its sworn report of circulation is proved false. The condition being that Rowell & Co. shall choose one responsible expert to make an examination of press-rooms, books, papers, etc.; the Herald shall choose another; and these two shall select a third; and the three shall forthwith make the examination and a report which they shall publish. This much for Rowell & Co., who, we trust, to use the language of Western sporting men, will now "either put up or shut up."

The last Circulation Report furnished by the New York Herald to the American Newspaper Directory claims an average daily circulation of 122,100. And these figures appear in an advertisement of the Herald for that edition, for which advertisement the Herald paid us our price—$50. The written claim furnished bears the name of the same W. H. Henry, Business Manager, who signs the late affidavits put forth by the Herald. In the edition of the Directory for which the report was furnished we estimated the circulation of the Herald at an average of 65,000 copies daily.

For the purpose of putting to a test the comparative value of their claims and our estimates, we make to the New York Herald the five following propositions:

OUR FIRST PROPOSITION.

We will forfeit $25,000 to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, against an equal amount to be paid by the Herald, if the committee appointed according to the Herald's stipulation does not pronounce the Herald's circulation claim, as furnished to us, to be in excess of the facts.

OUR SECOND PROPOSITION.

We will forfeit $10,000, as above, if the committee appointed according to the Herald's stipulations does not pronounce the Herald's claim to be more than 10,000 copies in excess of the facts.

OUR THIRD PROPOSITION.

We will forfeit $5,000, as above, if the committee appointed according to the Herald's stipulations does not pronounce our estimate nearer the actual facts that the Herald's written claim.

OUR FOURTH PROPOSITION.

We will forfeit $1,000, as above, if the committee appointed as above do not pronounce that the circulation of 65,000 copies daily average, as estimated by us, is in excess of the actual circulation of the Herald at that time.

OUR FIFTH PROPOSITION.

We will forfeit $500, as above, if the committee appointed according to the Herald's stipulations pronounce that the actual daily sales of the Herald, at that time, average as much as one-half the number claimed by Mr. W. H. Henry in the written statement furnished by him for the guidance of the editor of the American Newspaper Directory.

We submit the above propositions to the Herald, and shall be glad to know at an early hour which one it elects to accept.

In order to show the fear of defeat among the radicals at the west it is only necessary to refer to their latest move in asking Federal interference in the coming election in Ohio, which will no doubt be resorted to in Indiana as well. Under the law passed in 1871 and amended in 1872 for the purpose of controling the election in the south in the interest of the republican party, two inspectors are to be appointed in each election precinct, who are to inspect the casting of votes, and to be present at and to assist in the counting of them. Another feature is that the Marshals of the districts are authorized to appoint Deputy Marshals at a salary of $5 a day for ten days to protect the inspectors; in other words, being appointed by Republican Marshals and authorized to station themselves wherever they please in the discharge of this duty, they amount to nothing more or less than paid workers for the republican party and ticket. These Deputy Marshals will be working for the Republican party at the polls while being paid $5 a day by the Government for so doing. It is an outrage. The number of Deputy Marshals in the South at one time under this same law was shown to be 9,000. Nine thousand men at $5 a day is a pretty big item of expense to come out of the pockets of the people, and a repetition of it here in the north in time of peace and quiet will scarcely be tolerated by American freemen.

The South-eastern Indiana Conference of the Methodist church held at Jeffersonville, last week, undertook to deny Dr. De La Matyr a charge because he is a candidate for Congress against the Republican party. The vote stood 41 for location, 36 against. The Methodist church should be proud of a representation in Congress by such a Christian gentleman and honored citizen as Dr. De La Matyr, and if we are not greatly mistaken in the temper of the people, the ill advised action of his false brethren will contribute immensly to the majority that will send him to Congress. The people, above all things despise ecclesiastical bigotry and tyrany; they despise clerical dogmatism and cant, and they will not be slow to condemn the silly effort of a score or two of Methodist preachers to make a distinguished member of the conference odious because he has more brains, more religion and more patriotism than the whole number who arrayed themselves against him. Dr De La Matyr will go to Congress, and in Washington as elsewhere, will maintain his christian integrity and his high sense of the proprieties of life, and in spite of the small fry who hounded him out of his place in the church which he has labored long and faithfully, will add luster to his profession and dignity to the standing of his persecutors.

Of all the pretended independent political papers within our knowledge the Syracuse Gazette is the only one that carries out the principles it advocates by selecting those candidates whom the editor regards as the best and most competent men for the positions to be filled in the county regardless of the party that placed them in nomination, and placing their names at the head of its columns and advocating their election, whether Democrats, Republicans or Greenbackers. Such a course is much more honorable than the cloven-footed, hypocritical pretentions made by many journals under the plea of independence in politics, which is only done to mislead the public and gradually draw around their readers the political net of the party of the editors first love.

The democrats of DeKalb county are settling down to business and going to work with a will for the entire Democratic ticket. The Republicans have lost their grip on the trading business.

GARRETT, IND., Sept. 16, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER, Sir—While looking over the columns of the Garrett Herald of Sept. 12th, I noticed an article headed "Paying U. S. Taxes," and being a taxpayer I read it, and found it to be one of those articles so commonly found in that radical republican sheet, intended to slander and damage the reputation of some of our democratic fellow citizens, this one being particularly conspicuous in severely censuring some of our democratic candidates and some of their friends for going into a saloon in this town to get a lunch and with it a glass or two of beer, on the evening of Saturday the 7th inst, after the close of one of those telling speeches of Hon. J. B. Stoll, the worthy democratic candidate for member of Congress in this district. Now while reading the article alluded to, the question occurred to me whether it was the telling remarks of Mr. Stoll in his speech that moved the extraordinary specimen of morality and virtue of an editor to make those insulting remarks as a set off, or was it the envy that class of narrow minded specimens of humanity feel at seeing some of their liberal minded fellow citizens enjoy life, and exercise their liberty to eat, drink and be merry, without fear of being censured for it or was it the assurance of his own purity and elevation, that caused him to think that he (the editor) who has no sin, was called upon to cast the first stone at those sinners who dare take a glass of wine or beer open and above board. If the later is the case it would be well for said editor, in vindication of his pure motive, to announce in his next issue the fact that the crack republican stumper, ex-army paymaster and Warsaw land speculator, Billy Williams, who was here Friday evening Sept. 13th, after relieving himself of considerable gas in the abuse of the democratic party, in swinging the bloody shirt as usual and telling the laboring classes of all parties how easy it would be to pay the national debt by depriving themselves of the little luxuries of life, such as beer, tobacco etc., went to his hotel so physically and mentally exhausted, that he, after due deliberation, arrived at the conclusion that it would not be worth while to commence the task of paying the national debt at that late hour of the night, (it being nearly midnight), and feeling assured that he and his friends (not "suckers" as the Herald man says) might imbibe a little without exposing themselves, he sends out a messenger to get—what?—we will see. As fate chances sometimes to be adverse to the calculations of the wise as well as the fools, so it happened that the saloon keepers of this town like law abiding citizens, had closed their doors at eleven o'clock, and the messenger, like a good servant, determined to carry out the object of his mission, was compelled to rap-rap-rap at the front door of the saloon, until he had succeeded in arousing out of their slumbers all the neighbors, as well as the guests and boarders of the house, then proceeding to the side door, where after repeating the "raps" procedure the landlord was aroused, who poking his head out of a second story window inquired the cause of the alarm at the late hour, when the messenger replied, we want some bottles of beer, when told by the saloon-keeper that he had none and that it was rather an unusual hour to call for it, the messenger eagerly said, have you any keg beer, if so let us have some, we want it for Billy Williams the speaker. Being unable to get beer the messenger addressed some person that had come with him (whom I have since understood to be the special friend and travelling companion of Billy) thus, we can't get any beer, wont something else do? to which the friend replied, no sir, we must have some beer. Here the curtain dropped, and the next act is to your humble servant unknown. Now, while I do not see anything wrong in Mr. William's desire to stimulate his worried mind and body with some beer, nor in the eagerness of his friends to obtain the desired beverage even at the late hour, but being one of the victims of that night's "rapping," I cannot refrain from calling the attention of the Herald man to that occurrence with the earnest request to reflect for a moment and consider what "a hell on earth" a world full of hypocrits and moral-reformers of his as well as Billy William's style would be. But he evidently intended to make political capital out of his slanderous article with the following conclusion to-wit: "Will such men be sent to places of honor and trust by the people? We hope not." In that case Mr. Herald man has sadly mistaken his mission—he does not know the people, he does not seem to be aware of the fact, that the liberal minded men of this county, who cannot be led or misled by such prejudices, are strongly in the majority, strong enough, thank the Lord, to wipe out all the hypocritical, narrowminded "would be" political and moral reformers of the O. J. Powell and Billy Williams style.

LIBERAL.

Concord Pic-nic.

A grand time was had in the grove near the Concord church, Sept. 14th, in the form of a Sabbath School picnic. At 10½ o'clock the several schools assembled on the grounds to listen to the beautiful songs and interesting speeches. After a few remarks by J. E. Ervin and singing, the schools adjourned for dinner, at which every one seemed to be enjoying themselves. At 1½ o'clock the president of the day called the schools to order and the time occupied in singing and speaking. The Butler and Spencerville bands did splendidly. The martial music was excellent. The different schools furnished good singing, and interesting speeches were made by some of the little ones. Instructive remarks were made by Rev. Ervin of Auburn, Mr. Green of Sedan, Messrs. Blair and Darby of Waterloo and others. After listening to a quartett entitled "Gathering Home" from members of the Concord school, Mr. Meese pronounced the benediction and all adjourned to their several homes, feeling (we trust) fully paid for being together.

MR. W. SIMONTON, Pres.
MRS. F. BUCHANAN, Sec'y.

"Butter and Eggs Billy" was billed to address the faithful at this place last Friday upon his copyrighted subject, "How we got in debt, and how to get out." The people missed connection in the afternoon, (when they were expected) and the speaker was compelled to retain his pent up eloquence until evening, when the size of the crowd plainly indicated that Geo. Hazzard had knocked the wind out of Billy's subject several weeks ago.

The Maine election changed Sherman's mind somewhat on the resumption business.

A Proposition.

It has been decided by the building committee of the M. E. church of Garrett, Ind., to award the privilege of naming the new church to be erected in said town, to the person donating the largest sum of money. Sealed proposals to this effect will be received until Nov. 1st, by F. M. Bacon, President of the Board of Trustees of the M. E. church, Garrett, Ind.

LaOtto Items

—Peaches $1.60 per bushel.

—Mrs. R. Taylor left for Ohio last Friday.

—Saturday was pay-day on the Grand Rapids R. R.

—Mell Hines, of Albion, is visiting friends here.

—J. B. Gorrell has just recovered from the bilious fever.

—Mrs. Sturgous, of Bluffton, gave LaOtto a call last Saturday.

—Wm. Zern has taken his leave for Kendalville to build up a fortune there.

—Mrs. H. Clinger, living one mile east of Swan, died Saturday night after a brief illness.

—Mr. John Miller and wife, of Newville, were the guests of C. W. DeMars, last week.

BIDDY.

Cedar Creek.

—The wife of W. M. Wasson is very sick at Cedar Creek.

—Dr. Kester, of Cedar Creek, is sick with bilious fever, he thinks he can ride soon.

—Friends, do you know that James Smith, of Richland township, is going to take a wife unto himself soon.

—The citizens of Butler township are preparing for the great rally at Waterloo. We hope the Lord will favor us with a nice day.

—"Champion Flea Catcher," the Modus Operandi of which will be explained by Mr. ——— of this vicinity, for 25 cents.

—John Harvey, Esq., can't stay in bed when the rally is so near at hand. Good for you John, brace up and go along with the crowd.

—I would say in reply to LaOtto items that it is not likely I will find the lost girl, for she was badly lost. We all felt for her but could not reach her; poor girl has likely gone to Michigan.

OCCASIONAL.

SPARTA, Morrow Co., O.
Sept. 12th, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER, Dear Sir:—Thinking that you would not intentionally do me injustice, I thought I would write you in reference to a communication in your paper of the 5th inst., signed "A Pin Sticker," in which he charges me with obtaining over two hundred dollars road money under false pretense. I did receive from the County Treasurer two hundred and sixty-nine dollars and twenty-four cents ($269.24) as Treasurer of Garrett, which I was at the time. I paid it all out strictly according to order of the council, which my report, filed with the town clerk, will show. As for the Garrett Bank, it paid its depositors in full on demand, and had money enough left to buy and keep a dozen "pin stickers."

The democratic prospects are good in this state this fall. Geddis, Atherton, Finley, Sayler, Goss, Hill, Converse, Ewing, Warner, McMahon, Hurd and Wiley, all have the inside track, and will, I think, be elected to Congress. Also the state ticket stands the best chance.

I have not moved away from Garrett, Ind., and will most likely be home to vote my democratic sentiments, a ticket I have always voted. I cast my first vote in 1853 and have never voted anything else in my life, while my traducers have voted on all sides.

Hoping you will do me the kindness to refute the slander upon me, I remain Yours Resp'y.,

E. D. BRYANT.

Fourteen Years After the War.

From the Ironton Register

Mr. H. P. Russell, who dwells near Ironton, Mo., ploughed up an unexploded percussion shell, and wishing to preserve it as a memento of the war, put it into a barrel of water and let it remain for about six weeks. On Thursday he tried to take out its contents, using for that purpose a hammer and a coldchisel. He held the shell between his knees, and after a few strokes it exploded, scattering its fragments far and wide, some of them being heard whizzing through the air half a mile distant. Mr. Russel was severely wounded. The missile was fired from one of Price's guns in September, 1864.

Once Major General, Now a Private.

From the Hartford Times.

Of the 158 men who have lately enlisted in Washington City, only twenty-seven were formerly soldiers. There are one lawyer, one merchant, three engineers and one telegraph operator. Besides these there were draughtsmen, plumbers, four printers, carpenters, shoemakers, book-keepers, brick makers cooks, butchers, machinists, and twenty seven laborers. One of the number was a graduate of West Point. He was a Captain in the regular army before the war. At the beginning of the war he cast his fortune with the other side, and before it closed he had risen to the rank of Major General in the Confederate service. He is now a private soldier, though he is called General by all who know him.

"Appalling Grave Robbery."

Chicago Tribune.

Blaine, who is once in a while happy in phrase making, characterizes the nomination of Orth in Indiana as an "appalling grave robbery." He thinks the robbers displayed bad judgment, too. Competent judges of "stiffs" would have chosen a new and still sweeter cadaver, instead of a skeleton with nothing left except the lingering smell of old corruption. That's Blaine's idea about Orth's nomination, as expressed, in substance, to the Times reporter.

What the Country has Paid Grant.

From the Syracuse Courier.

During the eight years Grant was President he was paid $500,000 in salaries, besides probably as much more to cover incidentals. As General of the Army for five or six years previous thereto he received probably $100,000 more. Why should he be poor?

Uncle John's Heart.

[Philadelphia Record.]

Old John Robinson, the celebrated circus man, gave half the gross receipts of a late exhibition in Quincy, Illinois, amounting to $750, for the benefit of the yellow fever sufferers, and the members of his company contributed $256 more, making $1,006. Pretty good for these "play people."

John's Shrewdness.

[Nashville American.]

Mr. Sherman's ten millions of silver and as many ones and twos of the greenback issue as any body may want is a tub thrown to the popular whale just prior to the fall election. There is an over shrewdness about this use of the Treasury to deceive the people.

TERMS.—One fourth down,—one fourth in six months,—one fourth in one year, and the balance in eighteen months.

TO THE PUBLIC.

MR. EDITOR:—I understand that a few political enemies of mine are endeavoring to injure me as a candidate for re-election as County Treasurer, by making false assertions in regard to my acts as guardian of Mary Hood, a person of unsound mind. The facts are as follows: June 9th, 1869, Mary Hood with a child a few days old (and which died June 20th, 1869) were upon the order of the proper overseer of the poor admitted as paupers at the poor house. During the next winter knowledge came to the Board of Commissioners, consisting of Messrs. Henderson, McIntyre and myself, that Mary had fallen heir to some real estate, and upon the advice of the county attorney, Mr. Dills, steps were taken to have her legally declared of unsound mind and to have a guardian appointed to take care of her property. The court so declared her and on Mr. Dills' suggestion the court appointed me her guardian on January 21st, 1870. The next fall I sold her real estate, and how well I discharged my duty the records of the court and my four reports, approved by the court, will show. They are as follows:

Amount of sale of real estate		$656.00
Interest charged myself to Sept. 26, 1877, when I resigned		290.29
		946.29
I paid out as follows:
Clerk's costs on trial, selling of real estate and in guardian matter	$43.43
Attorneys fees in same	21.00
Taxes and stamp	20.54
Guardian fees 7 years and 8 months	30.00
Paid for clothing, board &c	77.07
		192.04
Paid over by me to my successor, J. R. Lanning		$754.25

Thus it will be seen that I added interest to the principal over 44 per cent., and after paying all charges, increased the principal nearly one hundred dollars. You will also see that for my charges, I received only about three per cent, of the money handled, or a little less than four dollars a year for all that I had done in selling the land, paying taxes, making reports and taking care of the money. But it is said that I kept her in the poor house at the expense of the tax-payers. This is not true, for when it was ascertained that she had money, the Superintendent, Mr. Conrad Miller, said she should just about pay her way in doing some kinds of work, such as milking, washing, &c., and that if she was taken away some one else would have to be hired at the expense of the county, and thus matters remained until after my election as County Treasurer in 1876, and from and after January 1st, 1877, while I was guardian, I paid for her keeping, clothing, &c., which makes the above amount of $77.07. Thus it will be seen for about seven years she worked to pay her way with the consent of the Commissioners and Superintendent, and saved the extra expense of another person to the county for that time. If I did wrong in the matter it was only in endeavoring to save this unfortunate girls money, and trying to have her pay her way as long as possible. By so doing her money would support her when she became unable to support herself, and then when she could not work and would have no money, she would then have to be supported by the public. Had I used her money for her support, as I did after January 1st, 1877, by paying two dollars a week for board, with her clothing, &c., it would have cost her estate about $150 per year—her entire estate would have been consumed in about four years, and she would have actually became a county charge from about the 1st of January, 1875, but instead of that I saved for her $754 up to Sept., 1877

I am willing to stand by the record I have made as her guardian, and will refer for the correctness of my statements to the record, the Superintendents of the poor farm, Mr. Miller and Mr. Pattee, and the Board of Commissioners during that time. All I ask is that the truth be told and then I will leave it to the people if I did any wrong, feeling assured that if an error was committed by me, with the other Commissioners and the Superintendents of the poor farm, it was done on the side of this afflicted woman.

The "Strikers" will visit Columbia City to-morrow to compete with the "Operas" of Pierceton in a game of base ball. Our boys have had no practice this season, but owing to failure to meet former engagements at that place through unavoidable circumstances they have concluded to undertake a game with a champion club and run the risk of defeat. We bespeak a kind reception for the Auburn boys, at the hands of our old friends at Columbia City.

The usual spring meeting of the County Superintendents of Schools has been postponed by the executive committee until the State Fair week. The meeting will be organized in Indianapolis on Tuesday, Oct. 1. A large attendance is expected. The meeting is called at this time to enable the superintendants to avail themselves of the half fare rates, and also to inspect the educational exhibit, which is to be a feature of the Fair.

To Old Settlers.

Persons over 70 years old, who have resided in the State 40 years can have free passes to the Pioneer Convention, to be held at Indianapolis, Oct. 2nd next, during the State Fair, by sending in a statement of their age and residence, certified to by some committee of arrangements or by some well known citizen of the county where they reside. All who desire to attend and will furnish me with a statement of their age and residence by the 24th inst, I will endeavor to obtain passes for them. Let them do so at once.

Pioneer Convention—Railroad Arrangements.

The Committee of Arrangements and Reception are pleased to announce that arrangements have been made with the officials of most of the railroad companies centering at Indianapolis to pass free over their roads, for the round trip, all pioneers 70 years of age who have resided in the State 40 years, to attend the Pioneer Convention during the State Fair, on condition that the names of such as are entitled to the favor are furnished, so that official passes may be issued. Therefore, it is especially requested that such pioneers, as desire to attend the meeting, will send in a statement of their age and residence in the State without delay to the Secretary of this Committee. Where such persons are not known to any members of the Committee, other satisfactory evidence is required with the application.

All pioneers, men and women, and their friends, are cordially invited to attend, and bring some relic of early days.

By order of Committee.

ALEX. HERON, Sec'y.

There is very little change in the condition of the yellow fever sufferers in the South. The death rate continues about the same, increasing in some localities and diminishing in others. Aid from the north is pouring in from all directions, and is said to be judiciously expended by the Howard Association.

It is estimated that over 25,000 people attended the funeral of the Gypsy queen, at Dayton, Ohio, last Sunday, expecting to see strange and unusual sights. The ceremony was conducted according to American customs, and the multitude dispersed very much disappointed.

Eugene Hale is quoted as saying that the recent election in Maine was "only a skirmish," and that the Republican party in that state is "sounder than ever." This will remind the people of the antediluvian who, on being denied admission to the ark, informed Noah that he didn't believe it was going to be much of a shower.

Has been the leading Baking Powder for years. It has gained its popularity from its being the most perfect Baking powder made. It is prepared from pure, refined materials. For purity, strength and healthfulness it stands alone.

In printing the first lot of hand bills for the Catholic Fair to be held in this place, the price of admission was put at 25 cents, which should have been ten cents, quite a number of those bills were distributed at the Concord picnic before the correction was made. Please bear in mind that ten cents will pay your way in.

The Sabbath School pic-nic held at Concord last Saturday, was one of the largest meetings of that character ever held in the county. All present appeared to enjoy themselves. The entertainment was interesting and profitable. Tables were loaded with provisions and choice fruits, which, judging from appearances, were relished by all who partook of the plentiful supply.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

SETH B. COLE, trustee and attorney; Ezra B. Weston, Vice President and trustee; and John H. Eells, formerly bookkeeper of the Rockland Savings Bank, of Nyack, N. Y., have been arrested for complicity in frauds by which the bank was ruined.

THE village of Closter, N. J., nineteen miles from New York, has had a wild panic over the death of a Memphis refugee from yellow fever.

THE WEST.

A PARTY of seven men, mounted and well armed, recently came into the mining camp of Caraboo, Idaho, where some twenty or thirty miners were at work on scattered claims. They robbed all of them in detail, also the store at the camp, took all the good horses with them, shot the poorest ones, and left. They got about $16,000, mostly in gold dust, from the miners. It is supposed that this is the same party that lately took up a rail on the Union Pacific at Medicine Bow.... A dispatch from Camp Stambaugh, Wyoming Territory, reports a fight on Clark's fork, between a detachment of troops and Crow Indians and about twenty lodges of hostile Bannocks. The Bannocks were defeated, their chief, and their squaws and children, and a large number of horses being captured. One soldier, a citizen, and a Crow scout were killed, and one soldier wounded. Many of the Bannocks were killed.

PRESIDENT HAYES and party, after taking a trip up the Northern Pacific railroad as far as Fargo, Dakota, and inspecting the great wheat-fields of that region, returned to Minneapolis and looked in upon the Exposition. He thence journeyed to Madison, and was present at the opening of the Wisconsin State Fair. His Excellency next visited Milwaukee, where he was the guest of Hon. Alexander Mitchell.... A dispatch from Hat creek, Wyoming, says both the up and down Deadwood coaches were robbed by three highwaymen, between Lightning creek and Cheyenne river. The treasure-boxes were relieved of their contents, and the passengers compelled to yield up all their money, watches and jewelry.

A SPECIAL telegram from Bismarck to the St. Paul Pioneer-Press of the 12th inst. says: "The brother of Senator Dorsey, who returned from Keogh by the Custer trail today, reports that he reached Keogh about the 8th; that Gen. Miles and an excursion party were surrounded by Bannocks in the Yellowstone park and twenty-seven of the escort killed. A lot of Cheyenne Indians and two companies of mounted infantry were sent from Keogh to his relief. Mrs. Miles, a daughter of Gen. Sanborn, of St. Paul, and other ladies are in Miles' party.

TWO DEATHS from yellow fever occurred last week at Gallipolis, Ohio, a point on the Ohio river 300 miles above Cincinnati. They are attributed to the tow-boat John Porter, which passed up the river three weeks ago, with several cases of fever on board, and was finally abandoned near Gallipolis, where it had since remained, anchored in the river. Much indignation was felt along the river that the authorities of Gallipolis should allow such a breeder of pestilence to remain afloat, and, to appease their wrath, the Gallipolians marched down to the river and scuttled the John Porter.

MR. THOMAS NALLY, editor of the Cairo (Ill.) Bulletin, died of yellow fever last week. There were one or two other deaths from the disease in Cairo, and the panic-stricken people immediately began to pack up and leave the city. The Bulletin suspended publication, proprietors, editors and employes all leaving town. ....About $60,000 has been raised by the citizens of Chicago for the relief of the sufferers by the yellow fever....There was no truth in the report, heretofore printed in these columns, that Gen. Miles and party had been surrounded and massacred by Bannock Indians in the National park. The "boot was on the other leg," as will be seen by the following dispatch from Monmouth springs, National park: "Dispatches received here from Gen. N. A. Miles say that his command of twenty-seven soldiers and thirty-five Crows struck a body of fifty Bannocks near Clark's fork of the Yellowstone, on the Wyoming line, killed thirteen hostiles, and captured thirty-four men, women, and children, and 200 ponies. Capt. Bennett, Company B, Fifth Infantry, was shot through the heart, one soldier wounded, and one Crow killed. Three other bands of hostiles, reported in the park, have gone to the Wind and Snake river countries." ....Sitting Bull, with his entire band, splendidly armed and equipped, are reported to be again on this side of the line.

THE SOUTH.

FOR the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock Sept. 8 there were 101 deaths from yellow fever in Memphis, and 400 new cases, in Vicksburg, for the same period, there were 186 new cases and 42 deaths; in New Orleans, 229 new cases and 87 deaths. At Grenada the pestilence had abated somewhat, simply because there were no more victims. At Hickman, Greenville, Canton and other towns where the plague had appeared the mortality roll continued to increase. The total deaths from yellow fever in all the plague-infected cities up to the 7th of September, were as follows:

	Cases.	Deaths.
New Orleans	4,900	1,500
Vicksburg	2,900	650
Memphis	3,500	800
Morgan City	30	10
Grenada, Miss	500	170
Canton, Miss	125	45
Ocean Springs, Miss	20	7
Holly Springs, Miss	138	38
Hickman, Ky	90	35
Louisville, Ky	35	12
St. Louis	40	18
Cincinnati	8	5
Other points	500	150
Total	13,008	3,384

A DISPATCH from Nashville, Tenn., says that Pinkney Bell, the murderer of Constable Dement, of Rutherford county, was taken from the Murfreesboro jail at midnight and lynched by a mob of over 100 men.

MEMPHIS dispatches of Sept. 9 represent the condition of affairs in that city as truly appalling. The new cases of yellow fever for the preceding twenty-four hours reached the fearful figure of 411, and the deaths 120. Over 2,000 people were down with the pestilence. The doctors were working hard, but hundreds of persons were dying without being able to get a physician. "A walk or a ride through any street of the city," telegraphs a correspondent, "reveals the scene of death at almost every step, while the stench from rotting bodies is most loathsome, the number of unattended cases being so numerous that many are found daily only by tracing up the scent till its source is reached, and then it is often the case that three or four dead bodies are found in one room." At New Orleans the number of new cases for the twenty-four hours was 144, and the deaths 67. At Hickman, Ky., 60 cases of fever were under treatment, in a population of 800. A dispatch of the 9th from Jackson, Miss., says: "The fever has broken out at several new points in this State—Bolton Lake, Lawrence Station on the Vicksburg and Meridian railway, and Gilman Station on the New Orleans road; Dry Grove, in Hinds county. No abatement at Vicksburg, Holly Springs, Port Gibson, or Greenville. At Grenada only three or four remain to be attacked."

A DEPUTY United States Marshal and posse attempted, the other day, to arrest two young men of Baldwyn county, Ga., named Hardy, for illicit distilling. A desperate fight ensued. One of the posse was mortally and one of them severely wounded.

THE deaths from yellow fever in New Orleans, on the 11th of September, numbered 90; new cases, 368. Business was almost entirely suspended, and it was estimated that there were over 50,000 unemployed people in the city. At Memphis there was no abatement of the plague. A dispatch from that city says: "We have at this date 3,500 sick to provide for and 10,000 well people to feed. The average increase of cases is 100, and the average deaths 100 per day. There are no signs of abatement of the fever, though the weather has turned cold, and we have hopes that the back of the epidemic has been broken." At Vicksburg there were 31 deaths, a slight decrease. There was also a decrease in the number of new cases. In the other towns of the South where the pestilence had found a lodgment there was no improvement.

WASHINGTON.

A CIRCULAR has just been issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office giving effect to the decision of Secretary Schurz regarding the right of pre-emption in the case of the unsold lands of the Pacific railroad land-grant companies. Registers and Receivers of Land Offices are instructed to receive declaratory statements from pre-emptors, and, after ascertaining from the railroad companies that the land applied for has not been sold, to permit entry and payment at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

TRAMPS succeeded in creating something of a yellow-fever panic in Washington last week. A number of them called on the Health Officer, representing that they came from the South, and were sick with some complaint, which they feared was fever. Of course they were sent to the hospital, and coddled and cared for until the cheat was discovered. Then they were turned adrift, but not until they had been daintily fed for a while, and repaid their entertainers with a decided scare.... The Secretary of the Treasury directs that hereafter the treasury in Washington and the several sub-treasuries exchange standard silver dollars for United States notes.

GEN. JAMES LONGSTREET has been commissioned Revenue Agent, and assigned to the District of Georgia and Florida, vice Revenue Agent Spencer, transferred to Louisville.

GENERAL.

A WASHINGTON telegram says: "A gentleman who has recently returned from New York visited the asylum where the witness Leet is, who went insane during his examination before the Potter committee. Leet insists that he was badly deceived; that the only condition on which he agreed to be a witness was that he should be permitted to tell his own story, and should not be examined by Ben Butler."

A PORTLAND (Ore.) dispatch says Gen. Howard has held a conference with Chief Moses, at Priest's Rapids, at which assurances of continued friendship were exchanged, and Moses announced a willingness for his tribe to go on a reservation of their own choice, but not on one remote from their country.

POLITICAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says that "Representative Blackburn, of the Potter committee, has received a letter from Chairman Potter stating that no time has been appointed for the next meeting of the committee. Representative Blackburn's understanding is that the next movement of the committee will be to send a sub-committee to New Orleans to take additional testimony."

MAINE voted for Governor and Congressmen on Monday, Sept. 9. There were three candidates in the field for Governor—Connor, Republican; Smith, Democrat, and Garcelon, National. The latter polled a surprisingly large vote, estimated, at this writing, at upward of 40,000. None of the candidates having received a majority of all the votes cast, there was a failure to elect, and the Legislature will have to choose the Governor. Eugene Hale has probably been defeated for re-election to Congress in the Fifth district by the National candidate.

SPEAKER RANDALL has been renominated for Congress in Pennsylvania....The Republicans of New Hampshire have nominated Hon. Nathaniel Head for Governor.

THE Massachusetts Prohibitionists have nominated Rev. Dr. Miner for Governor. ....The State Convention of the Independent Greenback party of Massachusetts met at Boston on the 11th inst., nearly a thousand delegates being present. Gen. Butler was nominated for Governor by a rising vote....Dr. E. M. Wright, of Chattanooga, has been nominated by the Republican State Committee of Tennessee as the Republican candidate for Governor.

THE New Hampshire Democrats held their State Convention at Concord last week. The Hon. Frank A. McKean was nominated for Governor by acclamation. Hadley B. Fowler, David H. Young, and E. R. Peterson were nominated for Railroad Commissioners, also by acclamation.

FOREIGN.

IN CONSEQUENCE of the obstinacy of the Turks, no approach has been made to a settlement of the difficulties between Greece and Turkey, which were foolishly left by the Berlin congress to the diplomacy of the two countries. Late accounts report that Turkish troops have been encroaching upon the Greek frontier, and war seems to be considered something more than probable. Contemplating that contingency, it is said, the French and Italian Governments have given notice to the Porte that bombardment of the Greek coast towns will not be permitted in any event....The number of lives lost by the collision in the river Thames, and the sinking of the steamer Princess Alice, is now estimated at upward of 700. The cabin of the lost steamer is said to be packed four and five deep with corpses.

LATELY Mehemet Ali, who attended the Berlin congress as one of the Turkish plenipotentiaries, was sent to Albania to suppress disturbances in that region, created by the Austrian occupation of Bosnia. The people were not inclined to be pacified, and insisted, instead, that Mehemet Ali should organize an army and lead it against the Austrians. He refused, of course, and the infuriated populace thereupon murdered him and twenty members of his staff. The insurgents also murdered the Governor of Ipeka and ten other officials.

A CALCUTTA dispatch says: "It is generally recognized that the present is one of the most critical epochs (for England) in the history of India. A single false move in the conduct of the mission to Afghanistan may involve not only a costly frontier war, but wider complications. The mission forms a single step in the extensive concerted scheme for the protection of India."

THE Emperor of Germany, in his speech at the opening of the newly-elected Reichstag, argued strongly in favor of repressive legislation against the Socialists. "Such measures," the speech urges, "should preserve the liberty of citizens in general, and only prevent the abuse of liberty, by which the pernicious Socialist agitation threatens the foundations of life, and all culture....A Constantinople dispatch says that Mehemet Ali Pasha's retinue were not assassinated in the fight between the troops defending Mehemet Ali and the insurgents. The men killed on both sides numbered 400....Over 600 bodies have been recovered of the persons drowned by the sinking of the steamer Princess Alice, in the river Thames....Nobeling, the would-be assassin of the German Emperor, has cheated the executioner by shuffling off his mortal coil. He died of paralysis of the lungs.

A LONDON dispatch of the 11th inst. says: "England is now passing through an era of accidents of the most dreadful nature. The excitement and anguish caused by the sinking of the excursion boat Princess Alice on the Thames has not subsided to any appreciable degree, when down came news of a terrible colliery accident in Wales. The disaster occurred at Abercarne Colliery, Abercarne, near Newport, in Monmouthshire. The pit is still on fire, and the burning gas occasionally bursts out from the mouth of the ventilating shaft. Search parties have been able to penetrate only a few yards into the mine, where they encountered eighteen dead horses in the stables. Beyond this point the fallen timbers and the blazing woodwork and coal gas effectually bar the way. This disaster is the most terrible that has ever occurred in Wales."

PERSECUTED Christians in Albania are fleeing by the thousand into Montenegro for refuge....Another turn in Russian politics is reported, Gortschakoff having recovered all his old influence with the Czar. Schouvaloff, whose successful conduct of the negotiations which led to the Berlin congress put him at "the top of the heap" for a time, has voluntarily retired from office....The Egyptian obelisk has been placed upon its pedestal on the Thames embankment.

Our Foot Wear.

Twenty-five years ago, in New England, all shoes were made by hand, and a man seldom sat at the bench all day, but usually plied some other trade till nightfall, and then went to his lasts. To-day, thousands of men and women are employed daily in perfecting a piece of the shoe by machinery, whilst they are unable to do anything on the shoe by hand. Forty-five million pairs of sewed shoes and 55,000,000 pairs of pegged shoes were made and sold by the manufacturers of the United States in 1877, and 85 per cent. of the work done on these shoes was done by machinery. The uppers are cut out by hand, simply because of the variableness of the quality of leather in the skin. The soles are cut out by machinery, and the binding, pasting, closing, crimping, stitching, heeling and polishing are all done by machinery, without the aid of human hands. The strongest sewed shoes are stitched with a wire screw thread, each stitch being actually screwed in, and the screw cut off by an automatic machine the exact thickness of the sole, whether it be thin, as in the shank, or thick, as under the ball of the foot, or still thicker, as through the heel. Nine hundred pegs are driven in a shoe in a minute. Four hundred and fifty thousand bushels of pegs were used last year, and all made by machinery. The pegs in four pairs of men's shoes cost one cent. The cost of shoes is no less now than when made by hand, because leather is dearer. In 1855 it cost $2.25 to make a pair of ladies' gaiters of the finest quality. Now, the same shoes can be made for $1.50. Then females did most of the binding and stitching at fifty cents per day; now they get $1.30 per day for attending the machinery. Then, men who lasted and did the sewing got $1 per day; now they get $2.50. The stock in such shoes is now worth 50 per cent. more than it was in 1855. Then, a man, by hand, made six pairs of women's shoes in a day; now, one man and a boy and a woman will, by machinery, make twenty times as many.

Deposition of Bishop McCoskry.

The House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church of the United States, in public session at New York, unanimously deposed Bishop McCoskry, of Michigan. Bishop Smith read the following document, all the Bishops standing:

WHEREAS, The Rev. Samuel Allan McCoskry, Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, has in a communication under his own proper hand, bearing date of May 25, 1878, declared he does resign and relinquish his office as Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and has requested that this relinquishment may be acted upon by the Bishops of said church at the earliest convenient season, upon such length and manner of notice as may be thought best by the Presiding Bishop; and

WHEREAS, Said Bishop has abandoned his diocese and left the territory of the United States while grave allegations existed, thereby declining to promote any investigation of the allegations aforesaid, and

WHEREAS, No action of said Bishop in said premises, which action he has himself invoked, can make effective his voluntary resignation, relinquishment, and abandonment of his sacred office except by his deposition from the same; and

WHEREAS, At a meeting of the majority of the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, exercising jurisdiction in the same, convened in the city of New York on the 3d day of September, 1878, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That said Samuel Allan McCoskry is hereby deposed from the sacred ministry, and from all offices thereof, and that the Presiding Bishop is hereby requested and authorized to pronounce and record sentence of deposition, and give due notice thereof.

Now, therefore, be it known that on this the 3d day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, I, Benjamin Bosworth Smith, D. D., by divine permission Bishop of the Diocese of Kentucky, and Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States, do, in conformity with the terms of the resolution before recited, declare and pronounce said Samuel Allan McCoskry deposed from the holy ministry, and from all the offices thereof.

In the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Amen.

BENJAMIN BOSWORTH SMITH,
Bishop of Kentucky, Presiding Elder.

The Land of Revolutions.

We have the following batch of late items from the City of Mexico:

Reports in Texas papers of a revolution in Mexico are untrue. The country never was freer from anarchy than now, and no President has been so universally popular or so strong as Porfirio Diaz. The reported rising at Jalapa was the work of a band of robbers, under pretext of restoring ex-President Lerdo. They took the garrison by surprise, robbed the town, and fled to the mountains. The robbers were subsequently pursued, beaten, dispersed, and the booty recovered.

A caucus of members of Congress has been held in favor of railway and American enterprises generally, with the view of adopting a course to defeat the rule of the Benitez faction.

The Government has sent a considerable number of troops to the Rio Grande frontier. The troops will first see that all revolutionary bands are broken up, and then proceed to the Rio Grande to suppress Indian raiding, and if possible capture the leaders.

President Diaz has issued two decrees for the suppression of smuggling on the Rio Grande. One decree authorizes any citizen to arrest smugglers and seize smuggled goods. The other closes the frontier ports of Mier and Camargo.

Yellow fever is very fatal in Vera Cruz.

THE United States steamships Congress, Sabine and Kansas are found, on inspection, to be worthless, and have been recommended to be broken up.

A Day's Experience at Memphis.

[Memphis Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.]

St. Martin street is by no means one which would be selected in ordinary times as a residence street. It is inhabited principally by the lower classes of whites, negroes, and, in occasional blocks, by demi-monde. The advantage of having a French woman, a former resident of New Orleans, as a landlady, and her assurance that, should I be taken with the prevailing fever, she would give me her undivided attention, induced me to take up my abode with her at No. 37 St. Martin street.

This morning early a loud rap on my door awakened me from a short, troubled sleep—the first had in twenty-four hours—and, in response to my inquiry as to what was desired, was informed by my landlady that she had just discovered a house in the immediate vicinity in which were three colored men—one dead, the other two delirious with fever—and, said the kind-hearted lady, "For God's sake go for a doctor, or they will all be dead in an hour." Hurrying from the house in quest of a doctor, I was somewhat startled by moans and cries of "Oh, God! oh, God!" emanating from a small brick house, No. 18 St. Martin street. Entering, I found on the bed a little girl, apparently about 8 years old, yellow as gold, with lips and hands stained with the fatal black vomit. At her side, on the same bed, was another child, perhaps two years younger, with the fire of the terrible fever slowly but surely consuming her young life, while the mother, half crazed with the agony of her surroundings, almost exhausted, lay upon the floor calling upon God to comfort her. Leaving this sad scene of death, and approaching the commencement of St. Martin street (at Beale street), a colored woman, with bloodshot eyes, disheveled hair, and grief-stricken appearance, asked: "Would massa be so good as to send the funeral man; her two children were dead, and her husband would soon follow." As I turned the corner of St. Martin and Beale, I encountered one of the visitors of the Howards, who, with the bravery which characterizes many of them, immediately accompanied me to the house No. 32 St. Martin street, where the three colored men resided. In it we found a sight before which even the bravest heart would flutter. On a pallet, on the floor, half nude, with eyes protruding wide from their sockets, firm-set teeth, and dark, congealed blood slowly oozing from his nostrils, lay the dead body of Frank Johnson, while in a bed near by tossed in wild delirium two mulatto men, one of whom, after almost superhuman efforts to battle with his approaching dissolution, gave one long, loud scream, grasped at an invisible hand, seized it, and quietly passed away from earth.

A scene behind a door at No. 32 St. Martin street, yesterday, illustrates the manner in which the majority of the negroes are neglecting the sick of their race. A dead negro lay upon the floor, and a tottering, fever-burned victim was handing a dipper of water to a delirious man lying on an old ragged quilt. Negroes, well men, lived in scores of houses around, but not one could be prevailed upon to enter the place. A brave lady—the wife of Mr. Dick Smith—disgusted with so much inhumanity, herself entered the house, taking oil and mustard. This is no rare case.

A physician of repute reports that the Whitmore House, on Adams street, in which five deaths have occurred, has never been disinfected. This physician visited the house yesterday afternoon and found the remains of a lady who died at midnight Friday. Learning that there was a man sick in one of the back rooms, he inquired about his condition, but could not learn whether he was dead or alive. Determined to ascertain for himself, he repaired to the room, pushed open the door, and came upon the abandoned dead body of a man upon a bed, his face covered with a sheet, the bed upon which he laid being bespattered with black vomit. There was no means of knowing how long the man had been dead.

Shocking Incident of the Epidemic at Memphis.

[From the Memphis Appeal.]

Among the number of shocking incidents of daily occurrence, the fate of Dr. K. P. Watson is probably the most horrible. Dr. Watson was an efficient worker, both as a physician and nurse, during the epidemic of 1873, and when the fever broke out, a few days ago, he entered the field again, and devoted himself and his talents to the work of staying the ravages of the disease. He made no boast of the work he was doing, nor stopped to discuss the nature of the pestilence, but wherever he found suffering he worked with all his energy to alleviate it. Finally he was missed, but it was thought that he had followed the spread of the disease into other quarters of the city. Sergt. McIlroy, of the Signal Service, happened to be passing by No. 59½ Second street, and was told that there was something wrong there; that in all probability a dead body lay in there. Without hesitation he kicked the door in, when he beheld a sickening sight. There lay the corpse of Dr. Watson, on an old mattress on the floor, no bedstead or other furniture except a single chair and a table. Being personally acquainted with Dr. Watson, he thought he recognized his features, and a closer examination confirmed his first impressions. Diligent inquiry in the neighborhood failed to elicit any information as to when or why he came there, how long ago, or anything that could give a clew to his mysterious death. The condition of the corpse and surrounding circumstances told the story too truly. He had been seized with a violent attack of the fever, and during the attendant delirium he had crept into the place, where he may have lingered for days, or it may have been for hours, finally dying unattended by nurse or physician, not even a friend to smooth his dying pillow.

Plague-Ridden Grenada.

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

A. H. Swink, a St. Louisian, who has been in Grenada three weeks, has arrived here. Relating his experiences there, he says:

In company with J. F. Heber, the operator who went there to take the brave Bill Redding's place, and Dr. Fountain, of New Orleans, I visited the sick, dying and convalescent. Mr. Heber carried a telegraph dispatch to Mrs. Marshall, who had lost her husband and three children by the dire disease. She was found lying on her bed, completely exhausted in physical and mental strength. The sight of this poor woman lying in her bed moaning piteously for husband and children all dead in a week's time, brought tears to the eyes of her three visitors. The telegraph message came from absent friends, and breathed words of sympathy, love and encouragement. She thanked the telegrapher, and in response to the question, "Can I do anything for you, Mrs. Marshall?" said, "No, but God bless you for your kindness. Only God can help me now." Opposite Mrs. Marshall lay Tom Marshall, the telegraph operator, who was a brother-in-law to Mrs. Marshall. He was found lying at the point of death. Three of his children had died within the last two days, and now he was almost gone. On another bed lay his wife and little ones. "They are alive, you see," she said, "and, God willing, will soon be well again. I have nursed them for the past seventeen days. In that time I have never taken off my clothing or gone to sleep." Mr. Heber was surprised at hearing of the death of his neighbors' children, and said that he did not know anything about the terrible havoc which the plague had committed in all points surrounding here. Meeting Mr. D. M. Bishop, an estimable citizen of Grenada, in response to the inquiry, "What good news?" he responded, "No good news to-day." Then, breaking down, his eyes filling with tears, he said: "I'm all alone in the world now. In six days the terrible scourge has deprived me of my wife and six children."

In a house near Mr. Bishop's lay an aged couple, both lying in one bed sick with the fever, while in an adjoining room lay their son, also prostrated. Whole families have been wiped out of existence, and only three of the original inhabitants are left in the town who have not been stricken with the fever. They are Samuel Heber, E. J. Armsted, the Southern Express agent, and a boy waiter at the Chamberlain House. The houses on all sides are closed, barred and locked, except those containing the sick, dying and convalescent. No pen can paint the grim, dark, deserted and desolate gloom which hangs over this once beautiful city.

Soul-Harrowing Scenes in Vicksburg.

[Vicksburg Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

This truly has been the saddest day Vicksburg has experienced for fifty years. There is no telling of the suffering within our midst. No pen can picture the dreadful state of existing affairs here, and the outside world can form only a faint idea of the misery of the poor of this plague-stricken city. We cry help! help! Any way! Every way! Send us doctors, nurses, money, provisions, anything. Our friends abroad, in communities where health abounds, may think this smacks of sensation, but, if they could, for only a few hours, look in upon our people, and hear the numerous appeals for assistance, they would have a far different idea. If this devastating disease keeps up the strides of the past twenty-four hours there will not be one left to tell the tale in a short time. There is no way to-day of getting at the correct list of new cases. The death-list—oh! horror!—exceeds any during the scourge of the never-to-be-forgotten 1853. No person seems to be exempt from attack this year, not even those who have had the yellow fever before. I know of many who have had it once, and in some instances twice previous to this year, who are now down with it, and some have died. I could give you many instances of suffering and destitution that would make your readers shudder. Almost every hour brings distressing reports from some unlooked-for source. A case was reported yesterday morning to the Howards of a family of father, mother and seven children dying and starving. The father was almost dead when discovered, the mother lying in the same bed with the father, almost in the same condition, with a young infant in her arms, while several of the children were lying in different part of the house with the fever in different stages, without any of the necessaries and comforts of life. A physician was immediately dispatched, and all aid possible given, but the man died in about an hour after being reported. Another instance, reported about the same hour, was that of a poor woman who had just died at the old Marine Hospital building, leaving four little children utterly destitute. As soon as made known the children were taken to the City Hospital and let in and cared for by the Sisters of Charity.

Sagacity of Animals Overrated.

It is next to impossible to shake the public faith in the value of the observations of the lower creation. We know by experience that our barn-door fowls will with infinite composure retire to rest at 10 o'clock in the morning in case of an eclipse, yet that knowledge does not prevent the public from assuming the possession by birds of mysterious sources of information on the subject of weather which are sealed to us. Dogs are supposed to have some intuition which warns them of approaching death, and many a heart has been tortured by accepting as a forewarning of dissolution a dog's complaint against the moon for unreasonable brightness. The fact is that animals in general are far less wise than we think, even in the matters that come directly under their ken. Observations of phenomena on the part of a man who, by noticing the influence of changing condition upon various objects, animate and inanimate, becomes weather-wise are far more trustworthy than that kind of feeling, which, like pain in an old wound, warns birds or animals of the approach of wet. Altogether curious it is, indeed, to see how far animals are from possessing the kind of knowledge we are most ready to assign them, that of things they may eat with impunity. Quite recently Lord Lovelace underwent a serious loss in consequence of a herd of cows eating some ewe-clippings indiscreetly placed within their reach. Cattle continually mistake the kind of food that will suit them, especially when they are strange to the district in which it grows. After a time they find its noxious qualities, and are, it appears, able to transmit the knowledge to their descendants.—Gentleman's Magazine.

IN Alabama the largest crop of corn made in many years will be gathered, and the price will be the lowest since the war.

STANLEY.

The Latest Story Concerning His Birt and Parentage.

The obscurity surrounding the birt and parentage of Henry M. Stanley cleared away by a publication in Ever Saturday, a literary journal publishe in Baltimore. The statement, it says, i on the very best evidence, that of hi own mother. The letter is dated Hig Park street, Sefton Square, Liverpoo Aug. 18, and from it it is learned that th explorer, whose right name is Henry M Eastaway, was born in New York on th 26th of October, 1843, and was christene by the Rev. Father Smith, at the Jame Street Roman Catholic Church. Hi mother was born in Ireland, but for som time resided in Baltimore. His fathe was a sea Captain, and, when the chil was still very young, the family wen back to Europe. During a voyage i 1858 the father died, and the boy, soo after, while sojourning at his aunt' farm at Clay Castle, had some word with his mother, and, in a fit of ange she said to him: "Would to God yo were somewhere from me," to which h replied: "Never mind, mother; as soo as I can get a ship I will take care th I shall not come back. Should I get t America I can claim it as my birth place." The boy was as good as hi word, and in the same year (1858) h sailed from Queenstown in a bark calle the Jacob Killerd, and a few line for his mother from Lime Rock askin for her prayers, and acknowledgin the filial love he had for he were the last she has ever heard fro him. Nor did she ever lay eyes on hi again until the day of Livingstone' funeral at Westminster Abbey. In com pany with a friend, Capt. Lamont, sh recognized him among the six pall-bear ers, and the Captain, to satisfy he asked some one standing by who th person was, and the reply came, "Why that is Henry M. Stanley, the man wh discovered Livingstone." "I see by what you say that the people in Liver pool will not allow Mr. Stanley to b your lost son, but I think if they wer present at the interview we had wit him at Mr. Livingstone's funeral the would be of a different opinion." Th poor woman sought her ungrateful so at the Langham Hotel, in London, and was shown into the parlor. Mrs. Easta way describes the scene in the following words: "He put out his hand to me, and, said I, 'Are you not a nice son?' 'Well,' he answered, 'I fancy there must be some mistake here.' 'Then,' said I, 'You can rectify it?' 'Well,' he answered, 'any money you want you can have.' 'Why,' said I, 'do you offer me money if I am not your mother? Did I not write to you and Mr. James Gordon Bennett, saying that I needed no aid, only to relieve my distracted mind?' Mrs. Eastaway has a comfortable home and two sons to depend on. One of them is second officer of the steamship La Place, now bound from Rio de Janeiro to New York, and the other one is an explorer in Australia.

Army Enlistments.

Col. H. C. Carlin, recruiting officer of the United States army for the District of Columbia, has, during the last six months, enlisted at this station 158 men. Of these there were: Soldiers, 27; lawyer, 1; merchant, 1; engineers, 3; telegraph operator, 1; musician, 1; draughtsman, 1; plumbers, 4; clerks, 18; conductor, 1; tinners, 3; iron molders, 4; druggists, 2; carpenters, 6; shoemakers, 5; blacksmiths, 6; printers, 4; spinner, 1; cooper, 1; bookkeepers, 3; bakers, 2; seamen, 2; polisher, 1; cooks, 2; boilermakers, 3; butchers, 2; gardeners, 2; machinists, 2; coachman, 1; laborers, 47. There are on an average about ten applicants daily. Not half of the number presenting themselves are accepted. It is noticeable likewise that the character of those seeking enlistment is far above the average in point of intelligence and general morals. An incident illustrative of this is the fact that among the enlistments as a private soldier was a graduate of West Point, a Captain in the United States army before the war, and a Major General in the Confederacy.—Washington letter.

THE Cheyenne (W. T.) Leader mentions the arrival at that place of a man and wife who made the journey all the way from Pennsylvania on foot. They were on their way to Nevada to take up a homestead.

THE OLD MACHINE.

Grantism Revived—A Spectacle for Reformers.

[From the New York Sun.]

The old party machine, with which the country was so familiar during the era of Grantism, has been furbished, oiled, and is now in active motion at Washington, driven by experienced hands, and run in the well-marked ruts left by the former engineers. If Robeson, and Belknap, and Taft, and Zach Chandler, and Don Hamilton Fish, and Reformer Jewell, and the rest of them were to drop in they would find everything working after their own fashion, with much psalm-singing at the White House thrown in as a sort of moral dessert.

Carpet-bagger Kellogg shines afresh, like a newly-minted dollar of the daddies, and dictates his appointments to office and his share of the other spoils, with a foreknowledge that every order is to be obeyed. The departments all acknowledge his authority, and for the time, at least, he is master of the situation. His power is by no means confined to Louisiana, but is seen and felt in other States, and with practical effects daily in the District of Columbia. Dorsey and Conover also rejoice in their influence at the White House, and maintain the best personal terms with its occupant, and the latter is now a candidate for the House of Representatives, backed by the fraudulent administration.

Imitating the example of Grant, Hayes and his concern are absent from Washington more than half the time, wandering about for amusement, or seeking to make political capital. Last week Schurz alone was on duty, turning the crank of the machine with the zeal and fidelity of Delano and Chandler. They all draw their pay punctually, and are rigid in docking the salary of every clerk who may exceed for a day the regular leave of absence.

The assessment of officeholders goes on in the prescribed forms that were used during the days of Grant, when Postmaster Edmunds was Secretary of the Congressional Committee, and blackmailing was a recognised feature in party management. Lists have been furnished from every department of the names of all persons employed therein, male and female, and a circular fixing the exact sum required, graded by salary, is delivered by a hired collector, whose activity is stimulated by a commission on the sums he pays over to the committee. Mr. Schurz has formally declared that his subordinates may do what they please with their spare money, which simply means they are expected to answer the call of the managers, and civil-service reform will be helped by liberal subscriptions to the campaign fund.

John Sherman has made an example in his department, which is intended as a notice to the many thousands employed in the treasury that they must either pay the assessments or give up their places to others who will submit to the imposition. Mr. Hugh Waddell was invited to take an office under the Sixth Auditor as an expert accountant, penman, and man of business. He is not a politician in any sense, and the Auditor, McGrew, who has three sons in office, gives him the very highest credit for ability, faithful service, the best habits, constant attention, and acceptable deportment. He refused to pay the arbitrary assessment, was reported for non-compliance, and in forty-eight hours after received notice of his dismissal, signed by John Sherman and his executioner, J. B. Hawley. This same John Sherman proposes to reform the Custom House here in the same way.

Public notice has been given by the party organs in Indiana that R. W. Thompson, now yachting at the public expense after the manner of Secor Robeson; A. G. Porter, Comptroller of the Treasury, and J. N. Tyner, First Assistant Postmaster General—as a political legacy of the late Senator Morton—are to open the campaign in that State, and to spread themselves over many counties by way of instructing the people in their duties at the coming election this fall, when a new Legislature is to be chosen, and a Senator depends upon the result. This programme is intended, of course, to illustrate Hayes' order of June 22, 1877, in these words: "No officer should be required or permitted to take part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions or election campaigns."

Troops are alone wanting to make the machine perfect. All the other parts are in running order, with the Gorhams, Hales, Garfields, Logans, and the old Grant guard serving at the engine and keeping the fires banked ready for all emergencies, and prepared for a third term. Altogether it is a charming spectacle—these reformers struggling to purify the public service in Louisiana and Florida and Washington!

A Market for the Silver Dollar.

Prof. Langston, American Minister to Hayti, writes the State Department that American silver is used there for all purposes by the Government and people. Nearly $1,000,000 of it is circulated in Hayti. No coin larger than the half-dollar has hitherto circulated there, and Prof. Langston thinks that the standard silver dollars would find a ready market.

THERE are estimated to be 60,000 traveling salesmen in the United States.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

Capital: Its Rights, and Nothing More—Labor: Its Rights, and Nothing Less.

Labor is the normal condition of life. Production is the fruit of labor, and capital is the fruit of production. Independent of labor, there is no such thing as capital. Nature supplies the earth and sea; but man, through the higher elements of mind directed by experiment into experience, and by the intuitive genius of invention into creation, gathers from the land and from the sea his means of life. As his skill advanced his production increased, and just to the extent that his production increased beyond his wants was capital created—for capital is nothing more nor less than the excess produced by labor beyond what labor requires to nourish itself for production. All capital, then, however acquired, originated in labor; for, independent of it, capital could not have existed; and, independent of it, cannot exist.

Stop labor—we starve. Stop labor—we are without raiment. Stop labor—production ceases. Gold and silver may remain; but, independent of labor, they can neither buy us food or furnish us with raiment. Labor is prosperity, and whatever tends to depreciate labor tends to lessen capital. Capital has, through the tyranny of laws and the accidents of time, made power its slave; and, by power, it has subjugated man to man, labor to gold, and weakness to strength. All tyrannies have grown out of this subjugation. All wars are its fruits—all degradation has been its result. In the eternal struggle, the world has succumbed to the monstrous dogma that might makes right. How else did Nero reign? How else Caligula command? It was this that made Poland what she is. It was this that gave Ireland to her English despots. It was this that left manacled India a charnel land of starving dupes. It is this that to-day gives 6,000,000 of dependent paupers and 16,000,000 of hireling slaves to England. It is this which makes Prussia an iron-handed military despotism, where the rifle is the argument and the sword the logic of power. It is this which capital has arrayed itself in incorporated power and moneyed insolence to bring about in the United States.

For a century, liberty and manhood and the spirit of '76 have kept this our land free from despotism. But as capital has increased, labor having been frugal, industrious and generally rewarded, and specially confiding, it has concentrated—concentrated into gigantic proportions. I said free from despotism—that is not correct, for slavery existed, and slavery is despotism. Indeed, so despotic became its power that even in the light of education, and in the progress of liberty, it assumed that cotton was king—might, right. Then came war—wild as rebellion, daring as despair and desperate as revenge. As war came, the demands of war came—money—money by the hundred millions, any, by the thousand millions—and with the demand the cunning, over-reaching insolence of money marshaled it, commanded it, controlled it. Wall street and Beekman street, Third street and State street played the part of Harpagon as lender. Knowing that war held the country by the throat, they made their terms, and such terms no Jew usurer ever before imposed upon necessitous need. Insatiable greed held the purse. Forty-two cents they would give for a dollar, provided they were released from taxes, and provided they could have exclusive bank charters, with $90 in bills and $100 in bonds for $42, and provided they got interest in gold on their bonds, and provided they should have the right to receive deposits and discount them, and sell exchange and compound interest. So that capital made its terms thus: Capital lends $42, for which capital receives:

Bonds...........................	$100	Interest,	$9.00
Bills..............................	90	"	8.10
Deposits........................	200	"	18.00
Total........................	$390		$37.10

Thus, by the infamous subtleties of interest, the nation pays for the $42 it received: In interest, $37.10; in bonds, $100; in bills to lend on compound interest, $90, and the privilege of playing the usurer on $200 in deposits.

It was by this most hellish brood of chartered privileges that the Bank Association has robbed the people and got the start of labor. Two thousand bank Barons—1,000 bank usurers—have consolidated $2,000,000,000 of capital into a colossal guillotine to decapitate labor and hold in captivity every laborer who aspires to respectable wages, to a decent home, to education for his children, and to the comforts of life for old age.

This huge fraud of associated tax-exemptionists is from second to minute, from minutes to hours, from hours to days, and from days to years, sucking up the earnings and the life-blood of the people:

Every second it draws..................	$3.17
Every minute it draws..................	190.78
Every hour it draws.....................	11,415.40
Every day it draws......................	273,960.00
Every year it draws.....................	100,000,000.00

Every hour it draws enough to settle in comfort, with enough to build a home on homestead land, get in crops, buy teams, cows, and everything essential for fifteen families, or seventy-five people; and every day its profits, robbed from the public, would settle 265 families, or 1,825 people, on such homesteads. For these profits the Government derives no benefits, but, if the Government would pay off its bonds, stop the interest, stop the bounties and stop the inequality of taxation, and give the money now paid to these cormorants to help honest and industrious men to get on to Government homesteads, the benefit would be incalculable.

It would be the grandest step in the history of civilization. It would elevate the now dependent. It would give to labor its just reward. It would make producers out of consumers; indeed, it would render poverty unnecessary, and place comfort and competency within the reach of all. We possess every description of climate—as soft as Persian valleys, as fruitful as Indian gardens, as rich as Andalusian fields. Our productions are as varied as our climates, from the bloom of endless flowers to the snows of endless winters. Everything that grows ripens into harvest, and is gathered into granaries, from the pine-fringed borders of the Atlantic to the golden shores of the Pacific; from the tropical fruits of Southern seas to the frozen climes of Labrador. We have land full of all possibilities, such as no Government in the providence of the All-Wise ever before bestowed upon its people. Lands for homes, lands inviting culture, and rich in all the elements of productive wealth. And until within a century our rivers were without vessels, our lakes were undisturbed, our land uncultivated. One hundred years back, and the whole population was on the Atlantic coast. Our country was then new, its virgin soil was then fresh as it came from the hand of God, and our inland rivers and seas were as unruffled by navigation as when the waters of the flood swept resistless and sublime into the channels nature prepared for them.

Yes, all this land, now glowing with the active rivalries of 45,000,000 of human souls, but little more than a century back was a dreary waste of riches. To-day we have but broken through its crust; but commenced to comprehend its richness, its humanities, its education, and its duties. The men who were the pioneers in its settlement had been educated to oppression, to classified rights, to aristocratic orders, to slavery for the million, to almost universal ignorance and to almost universal oppression. Printing, it is true, had lightened its touch, but its rays were yet weak, for feudalism reigned, and privilege ruled. Mind had thrown off its serfdom, but mind, like light, required forces it could not command. It had to work its way, growing as it went, and soaring as it flew, till it reached those mountain heights where genius made it immortal. Philosophy did as much to people and to create the Government of the United States as all its endless resources. Liberty hailed America as its chosen land. But it was without capital to invite labor, as it was without labor to invite capital. Railroads did not exist. Steamers there were none. Men had to walk through forests; ride they could not, for there were no roads, no carriages, few horses, and cattle were hardly to be seen. In one word, the early settlers had not alone to battle their way by the most primitive means, but to make their way through all obstacles, even the tomahawk of the savage. This, remember, was only a century back. All west of the lakes was an unbroken waste. Fifty years measures civilization between the Alleghanies and the Rocky mountains, between Lake Erie and the Pacific ocean. How, then, were the difficulties overcome? How did the poor become rich? How did labor battle its way into production? Let us look back to see how it was done, and forward to see what may be done. Money the pioneers did not have. Land was everywhere, but for capital, beyond his head, his hands, and his locomotive powers in the midst of boundless fields, he was as destitute of as the penny-less beggar at the door of Delmonico's, who, seeing a feast of riches before him, is yet forced to beg for a crust of bread. The pioneer was without money, but he was rich; the boundless continent was before him; he was young, he was strong, he could work. It was labor's business to produce wealth, and labor alone could produce it. Labor then put on its leathern apron, calloused its hands, freshened its heart with hope, and, with the bold energy of youth, it struck down the forest; up went the cabin, in went the plow, scrape went the hoe, scatter went the seed. God freshened the soil to quicken growth, bright suns ripened the grain. Swift followed the cradle, on went the rake, up went the shock, down went the flail, out came the grain. On flowed the stream that turned the millstone, away went the grain to the hopper, out came the flour, soft hands molded the bread. The means of life were secured. But to make the cabin, construct the plow, make the hoe, pound out the scythe, scrape out the flail, pound out the wheat, yoke up the oxen, drive to the mill, and grind out the flour—made labor for farmer, mechanic, and miller, and to make the bread a good wife was wanted. With the cabin, and the flour, and the wife, came children. Wheat bought cows, and sheep, and hogs, and hens, and labor. Everything that came created new wants, and labor was the fruitful mother of every want, and every want created new demands for labor. So that from the felling of the forest, the building of the cabin, there came an endless demand for help, and every demand for help was a promise of food and home and comfort for labor. Labor thus promised grew into communities, where labor divided itself into all trades, into all arts, into all orders of production. With production came churches to Christianise men into duty, and schools to educate them into manhood and into justice. In early days of American life churches and schools and printing-presses came slowly, but they came. They that were poor, by labor became rich; and, where fifty years back was the untouched forest or the wild prairie, cities, towns, farms, and homes, opulent in all that constitutes comfort and creates wealth are now the generous rewards of that early toil. To-day five years will accomplish what it required thirty years to accomplish a century back, and what it required ten years to accomplish half a century back. For to-day we put ourselves on railroads to reach new lands, and labor has invented and created every appliance to achieve homes, wheat, and production, which is but another name for riches. To-day, too, homes of land are given to whoever will occupy land and make it a home.

But, with all the splendid growth of the productive power, and with all the accumulated conveniences the spirit of liberty and the genius of production have evolved out of the resources of this God-blessed land, there has grown up, silently, quietly, almost unnoticed, the curse which the Old World has fostered, and which all tyrannies have conspired to increase, and that is the power of dead capital concentrated into monopolising wealth.

It is this curse, fed on usury, nurtured by interest, pampered by power, which has created the Bank Association—that 2,000-headed devil-fish, whose suckers are drawing the life-blood of the nation to fatten ostentation and enslave labor. The corner-stone of the edifice is monopolized power. Its proclaimed principle is to cripple labor by starving it into submission. It is to liberty what the Bastile was to France. So long as it existed slavery existed, poverty was crushed, the rich reigned, despots ruled. When it fell humanity cried aloud for joy, the human mind was delivered from the chains of the past. It thralled labor, hope and life, and the people tore it down, leveled its battlements, hurled its keepers into eternity, and cut the cable which for 800 years had anchored labor to despotism, and the people to servitude. The Bank Association is the Bastile of American tyranny. There is but one thing to be done, kill it; vote it out of existence, pay off the bonds which feed its suckers with interest, tear down its frowning ramparts with greenbacks.

Next after the Bank Association come the railroad Barons. The New York Central, with Vanderbilt to monopolize highways, to regulate travel, to kill opposition, to dictate wages, controlling $200,000,000 of capital, as fierce in its dictatorial mandates to labor as any Irish-ruling English landlord—a public curse.

Twin monopolist, Thomas Scott, with his iron links reaching across the continent, controlling the highways of freight and travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific, dictating wages to labor, and saying, "Take this, or the rifle shall make you take it."

Then follows Garrett, of the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Pacific railroads, making up monopolies stronger than any European despot ever exercised or controlled. These moneyed and railroad corporations have made tyranny a possibility in the United States. They have attempted to control lands, transportation, food, labor, and all that goes to make up the daily factors in prosperity. They stand in the way of equal laws. They stand in the way of free farms. They stand in the way of homes for mechanics. They stand in the way of labor. They stand in the way of that equality essential to liberty. They stand in the way of all individual effort. They are antagonisms to the spirit of the age. Their power must be controlled, their monopolies must cease, their dictations to labor must end, or their fate will be the fate of the Bastile.

With millions of men ready to create new wealth, new farms, new homes, new cities, new States; with labor which has but to unite to say that this Government shall no longer be the legislative slave to capital, the way to equality of rights is plain. The voter holds the key. Labor commands all its outposts. Stop all interest. Labor can do it. Vote. Pay all bonds in the money of the people—the sovereign greenback. Vote that it be done. Put an end to all railroad monopolies. Vote that the Government shall control and own all public highways. Vote that no man shall monopolize a single foot of public land that he does not occupy. Vote that no monopoly shall exist. Vote that education shall be universal and imperative. Vote that no felon's labor shall be put in competition with honest labor. Vote that the Government shall advance, in the sovereign money of the sovereign people, to every head of a family who desires to go on to our public lands, and who is a sober, honest and intelligent worker, money enough to enable him to build a comfortable house, get in his first crop, procure farming implements and farm stock, and in five years the East will be depopulated of its surplus labor. Strikes will be unknown, crime will diminish, drunkenness will no more be seen. The great West and the fruitful South will grow into gardens. Then will true equality commence, then will civilization approach its high purpose, then there will be no drunkards but the idle rich and the idle poor. Then there will be no criminals but the viciously wicked. Then there will be no want but of the profligate and the wasteful. All that is demanded to accomplish this beneficence, all that is required to make homes certain and production universal is concert of political action. Vote and it is accomplished. But labor and intelligence must combine into unity, must organize into strength.

The voter reigns—that is, if the voter organizes; but the unorganized voter is like the water of Niagara above the falls—direct it, organize it, give it work to do in canals, in water viaducts, in channels, and it would turn the machinery of the world; but let its strength rush on in mad defiance, unorganized, undirected, and it plunges wild, blind, terrible in its worthless power into gulfs of despair, and floats away in savage grandeur to be lost in the lake which swallows it.

The great laboring and mental waves of the people are as grand in their strength, as resistless in their power, if organized and directed by reason into unity and by unity into action, as Niagara. If they act in unity and vote they can move the machinery of the world. The political power of the United States is to-day with the laborers of the United States—with its farmers, its mechanics, its laborers, mental and physical; and if they would have sovereign money to equalize values, if they would have labor justly rewarded, if they would end monopolies, if they would put down bank associations, if they would curb corporations, if they would have free farms and aid to improve them; in one word, if they would Christianise politics into equality and education into justice they must organize to vote—and vote the National Greenback-Labor party into power. The voter can do it. will he do it? That is the question.

A Mother's Influence.

The late Thomas H. Benton, who was so long in public life and surrounded by temptations, paid the following tribute to his mother:

"My mother asked me never to use any tobacco, and I never touched it from that time to the present day; she asked me not to game, and I have not, and I cannot tell who is winning or who is losing in games that can be played. She admonished me, too, against hard drinking, and whatever capacity for endurance I may have at present, and whatever usefulness I may attain in life, I attribute it to having complied with her pious and correct wishes. When I was 7 years of age she asked me not to drink, and then I made a resolution of total abstinence, at a time when I was sole constituent member of my own body, and that I have adhered to it through all the time I owe to my mother."

A Wonderful Liar.

An Englishman travelling on the Mississippi told several tough stories about London thieves. A Cincinnati chap, named Chase heard these narratives with a short but expressive "humph!" and then remarked that he thought the western thieves beat the London operators all-hollow.

"How so?' enquired the Englishman with surprise. "Pray, sir, have you lived much in the West?'

"Not a great deal I undertook to set up business at Des Moines Rapids awhile ago, but the rascally people stole everything I had and finally a Welsh miner ran off with my wife."

"Gracious!' said the Englishman, and have you never heard from her?'

"Never to this day. But that was not the worst of it

"Worst! What could be worse than stealing a man's wife?'.

"Stealing the children, I should say," suggested the implacable Chase.

"Children?'

"Yes. A negro woman who had none of her own abducted my youngest daughter and sloped and jined the Injuns."

"Did you see her?'

"See her? Yes, she hadn't ten rods the start of me, but plunged into the lake and swam off like a duck, and there wasn't a canoe to follow her with.'

The Englishman leaned back in his chair and called for another mug of 'alf-and-'alf, while Chase smoked his cigar.

"I shan't go any farther west, I think,' at length said the excited John Bull.

"I should not advise any one to go,' said Chase, quietly. "My brother lived there once, but he had to leave although his business was the best in the country.'

"What business was he in, pray?'

"Lumbering—had a saw-mill'

"And they stole his lumber?'

"Yes; and saw-logs too.'

"Saw-logs?'

"Yes; whole dozens of black walnut logs were spirited off and carried away in a single night. He tried every way to prevent it; had men hired to watch his logs, but it was no use. They would whip them away as if there had been nobody there. They would steal them out of the cove and even out of the railways.'

"Good gracious!'

"Just to give you an idea of how they steal out there—did you ever work in a saw-mill?'

"Never.'

"Well, one day my brother bought an all-fired fine black walnut log—four feet three at the butt and not a knot in it. He was determined to keep that log anyhow, and hired two canny Scotchmen to watch it all night. Well, they took a small demijohn of whiskey with them, smacked the log up the side of the hill above the milll, built a fire, and then sat down to play keerds, just to keep them awake, you see. 'Twas a monstrous big log, bark two inches thick. Well, as I was saying, they played keerds and drank whiskey all night, and as it began to grow light, went to sleep astraddle of the log. About a minute after daylight, George went over to the mill to see how they were getting along, and the log was gone.'

"What were the Scotchmen doing?'

"Sitting on the bark. The thieves had drove an iron wedge into the butt end, which pointed down the hill, hitched a yoke of oxen, and pulled it right out, leaving the shell, and the Scotchmen astraddle of it, fast asleep!"

The Englishman here arose, dropped his cigar stump into the spittoon, looked at his watch and said he guessed he had better go on deck and see how far he'd be down the river before morning.

* * *

A Slandered Woman's Despair.

There has been a most terrible tragedy at Fort Worth. The husband of a Mrs. Gray questioned her chastity, which so chargined, mortified and weighed upon her, she wrote the following letter and left it in the house: "To Mr. Gray—I write you a few lines to bid you good-bye. You said I must go, and I could not give up my darling as slaves for another. You accuse me of a crime. I am innocent, and if I was guilty I would be as good as you. Without an accident happens I will never trouble you again. So Good-bye, darling husband, brothers and sisters. Don't shed a tear for me. Just think one broken-hearted wretch is gone. You all know what a life I have lived lately; but God knows I am innocent of the charge against me. So don't look for me at all."

She then took her three children, went to the river, threw the two younger in first, and then seizing the oldest, quite a boy, in her arms, jumped in with him. The cries of the boy attracted the attention of a man plowing in a field near by, who arrived just in time to see the mother and her son sink. The river was much swollen. Neither of the four bodies have been recovered.

Remarkable Finger Billiards.

Yank Adams, a young man from the country, visited New York recently and astonished the natives by his wonderful proficiency in finger billiards. His play is thus described: His execution is simply marvelous, and his game is so strong that he is abundantly able to cope with the best experts who depend upon the cue. In his exhibitions he accomplishes all the ordinary shots, such as draws, cushion-caroms, follows and spreads; and then executed others of a more difficult nature, all of which were made with ease. In one of these shots he made his ball take four different directions, all in the space of a square foot, in another he affected a spread between two balls occupying the opposite lower corners of the table, he playing from the upper rail; and in another he made a double carom, playing from red to red at opposite ends with first one white ball and then the other, the two taking different directions and coming together upon the dark red. Placing three hats in a line, with the two reds at the lower end of the table, he starts his ball from the upper end with a twist sending it around and between the hats in a sinuous course that ends only when the carom is made. Among his most atonishing shots are those made on the rail; but in all that he does he shows the most remarkable skill. Adams is self taught, has never seen Izard or any other great finger player, and never played a game of billiards until a year ago. He is said to be able to grand discount any player on this side of the Atlantic.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Record of the Republican and Democratic Parties on the Financial Question.

Speech of Judge [illegible]

[illegible] It will be very generally conceded by all that we have now, and have had for a number of years, very hard times in all portions of our country. There is some difference of opinion as to the true cause of our financial distress. The republican press and speakers are laboring constantly to divert the minds of the people from the true cause [illegible] of the financial legislation of their party [illegible] to the best interests of the country. The republican party must be held to its record, and my purpose to-day is to review the radical legislation of the past thirteen years, which has terminated in disaster to the great masses of our people. I also propose to examine the record which the democratic party has made in congress on these questions. If the record discloses that the representatives of the democratic party have been true to the best interests of the people, and have resisted legislation which was intended and did enrich the few and oppress the many, then I think it the duty of every voter who desires a change to support the democratic party. There are many good men who have heretofore acted with the democratic party who have wearied with the slow progress made in financial reform, and are now seeking relief through another political organization. I ask them to consider what has already been accomplished since the democratic party obtained control of the lower house of congress, and to review the record which our party has made during the past thirteen years. I think a consideration of what has been done and the good results already achieved will convince them that they should not now desert an army already in the field which has achieved great victories. They will remember that for years the republican party had an overwhelming majority in both houses of congress, and for the first time in the history of the country [illegible] in party caucus [illegible] which every republican member was required to support.

WHAT HAVE THE DEMOCRATS ACCOMPLISHED

since they obtained the lower house of congress?

1. They have remonetized silver.
2. They have preserved the greenback by passing an act forbidding its destruction and prohibiting a contraction of the amount in circulation.
3. They passed through the house of representatives a bill repealing the resumption act.

It is true all of these measures received some republican votes, but I claim them as the results of the success of the democratic party at the last election. This is not the time for the democrat who has contributed to these results to forsake his party. The republican party is united on the financial question, and the friends of currency reform should not fritter away their strength by divisions. If the democratic party has been following the road to relief let every one who has voted the ticket in the past remain in the ranks and kindly ask those who are seeking relief through another organization to join them in swelling the tide of victory.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE.

Let us now examine the record and see who is responsible for the existing depression. Republicans, as well as democrats and nationals, are asking this question, and are eagerly seeking for the truth. It is agreed on all hands that inflation reached the highest point in 1865, after the close of the war. There is still much discussion as to the amount of circulation at that time. It suits the purpose of the republican press and speakers to represent the amount of circulation in 1865 as a much lower figure than it actually was. I see that General Harrison has incorporated into his opening speech a statement prepared by the treasury department showing the gold value of the paper circulation for a number of years. In this statement the gold value of the paper circulation in 1865 is put down at [illegible]. As gold was at a high premium in 1865, of course the figures furnished us by John Sherman are much less than those that represent the currency value, and only prove what the country well knows, that Secretary Sherman is a very tricky and unreliable man. He ought now to furnish General Harrison and the republican orators a statement showing the value in currency of the custom duties which the people have paid in gold from 1860 to 1878.

It would be interesting reading to all, for every household in the land has had this custom tribute in gold levied upon it. And as he has reduced the currency circulation to a gold basis let him tell us how much the farmers received for their wheat and other farm products, in gold, during the same period. But what was in 1865? In 1867 I had occasion to examine this question, and delivered a speech in opposition to contraction. In that speech I quoted from the report of the secretary of the treasury, made in December 1865 in which he says:

THE HISTORY OF INFLATION

The paper circulation of the United States on the 31st of October last was substantially as follows:

1.	United States notes and fractional currency	$[illegible]
2.	Notes of the national banks	185,000,000 00
3.	Notes of state banks, including outstanding issues of state banks converted into national banks	65,000,000 00
		$[illegible]

This is the sum usually named by the republican press and speakers, but I claimed in 1867, and have since then seen no reason to change my statement, that "in addition to the United States notes there was also outstanding [illegible] five per cent. treasury notes, $173,012,140 compound interest notes. Then in addition, the secretary says, many of the small denominations of the 7-30s were circulating as money, a fact which is well known to all business men. In the same report he says the amount of 7-30s issued was $830,000,000. It would then be safe to say that at least [illegible] of the 7-30s were in circulation and used as money. Then the following would be a correct statement of the currency of the country on the 31st of October, 1865:

United States notes, fractional currency, national bank notes and notes of state banks as above	$[illegible]
Five per cent. notes	[illegible]
Compound interest notes	173,012,140 00
Seven-thirties passing as currency	[illegible]
Total	$[illegible]

"We had then, in 1865, the enormous circulation of twelve hundred millions of dollars which was restricted almost entirely to the northern states."

The radical press and speakers are not warranted in excluding from their calculation the five per cent. notes and the compound interest notes, for they circulated as money when first issued and long afterwards freely as the plain greenbacks, and after interest accumulated upon them they were caught up by the banks and held as part of their reserve, thus liberating the plain greenbacks in their vaults. General Harrison quotes from the secretary of the treasury's report of 1865 the following sentence: "The interest bearing notes, which were a legal tender for their face value, were intended to be a security rather than a circulating medium." This may be true, yet it is a fact that the intention was not carried out by the people, and they became "a circulating medium," and went to swell the volume of currency in 1865.

GRANT VS. HARRISON.

General Grant said in his message of 1872: "During the last four years the currency has been contracted directly by the withdrawal of the three per cent. certificates, compound interest notes and 7-30 bonds outstanding on the 4th of March, 1869, all of which [illegible]

[illegible]

Holman and Voorhees against it.

Let us examine some of the provisions of this law passed by the unanimous vote of the republican party. But before I do this I want to call your attention to the fact that Orth and Shanks are candidates this year before the people of their districts, one for congress and the other for a seat in the legislature, and Tyner is assistant postmaster general, and has recently announced that he has found a key which will unlock the doors of the white house the third time for Grant.

By the terms of this funding act the bonds issued under it were to be redeemable in coin of the (then) present standard value. Prior to this law the general government had the right to tax the bonds, if the states had not, but this right was surrendered to the purchasers of the bonds, for the law declares that "the bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempted from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as taxation in any form by or under state, municipal or local authority." These bonds are being issued by the government to-day, and the gold derived from their sale is used in taking up the $20 bonds at their face value. The European capitalist who sold his $100 in gold for $200 in greenbacks, and with these greenbacks purchased $200 of bonds, is now receiving from John Sherman $200 in gold for those same bonds which only cost him $100 in gold a few years ago, and in the meantime he has drawn his six per cent. interest in gold on the $200. I see it stated that the balance of trade in the last three years has been over five hundred millions in our favor, and this ought to have made our country the most prosperous on the globe. But this vast sum has been used in paying for the bonds which Europe bought at fifty cents on the dollar, and which are now coming home. Such are some of the results of radical legislation which has been forced upon the country by Orth, Shanks, Tyner & Co.

SILVER DEMONETIZED.

But the radical party (and I am fully warranted by the record in calling it "radical" on this financial question), was not satisfied with what it had already done for the bondholders, so in 1873 it smuggled into the statute book a provision demonetizing silver. Prior to this time the silver dollar had been a legal tender for all debts, public and private, including United States bonds.

At this time we were producing large amounts of silver, and that metal was likely to become cheaper than gold. The bondholders saw this and found a ready tool in a radical congress to so change the law that coin for the payment of bonds should mean gold coin. This act was an additional gift to the bondholders of millions of dollars.

THE RESUMPTION ACT.

Not satisfied with the demonetization of silver the bondholder made a further demand for the passage of the resumption law. This law was born in a republican caucus, and was put through both houses under the gag, not a democrat in either the senate or house voting for it.

Time and again in 1876 did three-fourths of the democratic members of congress vote for the repeal. The St. Louis platform demanded a repeal of the date clause, and Mr. Hendricks made one of the best speeches of his life in the Ohio canvass in 1875 against the law. At the session of congress just closed the date clause of the resumption bill was repealed by the democratic house, the vote being yeas, [illegible]; nays, [illegible]; and by the persistent efforts of Mr. Voorhees, in the senate, to have the bill taken up a vote was finally reached, and the yeas were [illegible] only two majority against it.

My democratic friends, I have given you the record our party has made in congress on these great questions. I think you ought to be satisfied with it and remain true to your party.

My republican friend, who is oppressed with a load of debt contracted when money was plenty, I ask you to look at the record of your party and see if one act has been passed for your relief. Will you continue to groan under your burdens and vote the republican ticket?

EFFECT OF CONTRACTION.

If you are a farmer and went in debt, say $1,500, when money was plenty and corn 75 cents per bushel, it would then take 2,000 bushels of corn to pay the debt. But suppose you still owe the debt, you can only sell your 2,000 bushels of corn for $[illegible], and will lack $[illegible] of paying the debt. It will take just double the days' labor to pay a debt of [illegible] than it did in 1865. General Harrison says no man ever knew of money selling so cheap as now. Go to one of the loan agencies in your city and he will ask you 8 per cent, with 2 per cent. commission, and also require you to pay for the abstract of title. Cheap, indeed! General Harrison also says "the per capita in paper circulation is now more than twice as great as it was before the war." Let him remember that taxes are more than three times as high as they were before the war. The expenses of the general government under democratic rule were only [illegible], while in 1875, under republican rule, they were [illegible], which has been reduced to [illegible] by a democratic house. The republican party has doubled the salaries of some officers and more than doubled the number of officers, so that the party has nothing to gain by comparisons.

A few weeks since a storm [illegible] upon the western slope of our country, but it did not last two minutes. A dark cloud of financial [illegible] has covered our whole country for five years. We are looking for the [illegible]

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION.

It is well enough to hope that the yellow fever may not invade Indianapolis, well enough to hunt up authorities as to its dangerous boundaries, in other words, and declare that it has no precedent for exterminating people who live in this city. But hopes and declarations will not bar its approach, nor stay its destroying hand a single hour. Its ravages know no barriers, and it overwhelms all on [illegible]. There is little probability that it will darken our threshold, but there is a possibility that it may come upon us as a thief in the night, without warning or caution, and this possibility has awakened in the minds of the most prudent a desire to be thoroughly advised as to the best course to pursue in dealing with a disease so deadly and rapid in its attacks. The cure rests in the hands of physicians, skilled and tried in their profession, and in case it does show itself here they will advise and direct in the matter.

But there are other matters to be attended to where common sense and prudence may be fully valued. The prevention of disease is better than its cure, for the one avoids the chances of death, enfeebled constitution and relapses that the other accepts. There are a few simple things necessary at all times, but especially needed in this sultry, malaria breeding August weather, and inasmuch as days and weeks may pass before frost, giving the yellow fever a full chance to reap its human harvest all over the land, it would be well to adopt such sanitary precautions as experience and science may direct. Among the brief, easily comprehended preventive measures which have been given are those of Dr. Ford, president of the Pittsburg board of health. Among the most important of these directions are the following: "Thorough ventilation of dwellings is essential to the health of the occupants. Personal cleanliness and cleanliness about dwellings and premises should be most scrupulously observed. A source of danger to health is the decomposition of organic matter in and about our houses. Our cellars, areas, drains, cesspools, should be examined to see that they contain nothing to poison the air about our houses. Privy wells should be kept free from garbage and refuse matter of all kinds, and where they have been neglected immediate attention should be directed to them. Damp cellars are injurious to health. The atmosphere from them will permeate the house in spite of every effort to prevent it. A remedy should at once be instituted. A common habit exists of daily throwing all waste material, especially kitchen garbage, into the gutters and streets, where it decomposes and vitiates the air; this is an offense alike unjust to ourselves and to our neighbors. When the proper removal of these nuisances is neglected complaint should at once be made to the health department.

"For the prevention of disease a good, nutritious diet and regular habits of life are indispensable; temperance in all things is to be observed, and avoidance of all excesses is strictly insisted upon. With a view of securing a thorough sanitary condition of the city, information of all nuisances, of whatever character, whether public or private, should be reported without delay to the board of health, that immediate action may be taken.

"Your premises, particularly sleeping apartments and cellars, should be thoroughly ventilated. Keep your houses open, and your windows hoisted during the day in good weather, that they may have the full benefit of a sunlight and a free circulation of pure air. Avoid the possibility of exposure to sudden changes of weather at night. When the weather is cool or rainy be sure to keep a fire in the house, in order to prevent dampness, or in sparsely settled neighborhoods, or in the suburbs of the city, have a fire in the house the entire season.

"Observe strict cleanliness in your person and clothing. Bathe daily, if you have the convenience. If not, wash freely with cold water every day. Change your under garments daily, or as frequently as your circumstances will admit. Be regular in your habits of life, in your morals, meals, exercise and sleep. Be careful to dress comfortably for the season, avoid the night air as much as possible, and when thus exposed put on an extra garment, and do not go into the night air when in a state of perspiration.

"Be careful to avoid the use of alcoholic drinks. Do not suppose that their use will prevent the occurrence of disease. On the other hand, those who indulge in the custom are always fair subjects for disease, and when attacked the intemperate are particularly in a condition to offer feeble resistance.

"Live temperately, live regularly, avoid all excesses in eating crude, raw and indigestible food, especially cabbage, salad, cucumbers and unripe fruits. Partake of well cooked beef and mutton, rice well boiled, and avoid pastry and laxative fruit.

"Take your meals at regular seasons, neither abstaining too long at a time nor indulging too frequently. An overloaded stomach is as much to be dreaded as an empty one.

"Avoid bodily fatigue and mental exhaustion. Lead a calm and quiet life. Let all exciting causes be avoided."

It requires but a glance to see the foundation of common sense upon which these rules rest, and the wise will not be slow to adopt them. Cleanliness and temperance are the two points most insisted upon, and any physician or nurse understands fully their importance in each disease, and in preventing them. Absolute cleanliness of person and premises, the removal of decaying vegetable or animal matter, the disinfecting and deodorizing of house and grounds are certainly patent to every one as being of vital necessity. Temperance in food and drink, the avoidance of certain food, the abstinence from [illegible] a single inhabitant of this city in twenty-four hours, everybody would be half crazed with excitement, and very naturally, too, for the scourge is seemingly stronger this season than for years before, and the lightning-like rapidity with which it consumes its work adds a fresh horror to its very name. Every outgoing train would be filled with fugitives, drug stores would soon sell their stock of chloride of lime, copperas and other suitable drugs, family physicians would be busy, wills would be hastily framed, and the shadow of danger would rest upon every face. And yet other diseases are silently injecting their poisons into the systems of men, women and children. Malarial fever and its kindred fevers are lighting their fires in families of unconscious victims, and these might have been prevented from appearing had sanitary rules been adopted six weeks ago. The matter must be attended to, or death will cover the acres of Crown Hill and Greenlawn with the graves of friends and strangers—those within our gates. It is well enough to point to the death list for the weeks past and congratulate ourselves that the city was never more healthy; but could none of the dead have been saved had Indianapolis been clean? Could not foresight and care have saved none of those who sickened and died in the past month? Can a lack of cleanliness and prevention at present be plead in excuse six weeks from now, when the list may swell with the names of those who fell victims to "blood poisoning and fever germs?" If the city is in as perfect a sanitary condition as possible no more can be done; otherwise somebody ought to go to work.

It is not good sense to scare people into doing their duty, nor cry "danger" when none exists, only to create excitement. That there is a fear that yellow fever may visit us, can not be denied; if not among physicians, at least among the people. But neither physicians, nurses or patients will dispute the fear of a wider spread of malarial diseases than ever before, and the ounce of prevention before the yellow fever may swell to a pound in case of kindred but less malignant diseases.

JOHN SHERMAN, THE PERJURY BROKER, AT TOLEDO.

Instead of being in the penitentiary for crimes committed in the interest of Hayes and himself John Sherman, the perjury broker, is at large, enjoying the privileges of an unconvicted felon, drawing a fat salary as the result of fraud, and using his position to maintain the ascendency of a party chiefly distinguished for unparalleled rascalities. This fellow Sherman admits that it is his duty to obey the laws. Still, it is notorious that he violates them every day of his life, and now has locked up and out of circulation about $70,000,000 of greenbacks, which ought to be by the law in circulation. Why should such a pirate on the high seas of business talk about obeying the law? This fellow, in the wealth of his impudence, vitalized by his success as a perjury broker, refers to the currency necessities of business by saying, "what I 'want is the largest amount of currency that 'can be maintained at par with the establish'ed coin of the country." What the people want, as the Cincinnati Enquirer very cleverly puts it, is, "that John Sherman shall 'have no discretionary power whatever over 'the volume of currency. This is substan'tially the answer Mr. Sherman sent to Mr. 'Phillips, of the banking and currency com'mittee, when Mr. Phillips asked if he would 'use his power to sell four per cent. bonds 'for greenbacks to enforce the resumption 'act. The law commands him to 'keep in 'circulation' $347,000,000 in greenbacks, and 'he said he would keep in circulation as 'many as he could maintain at par with 'coin. His opening proposition calls notice 'to his flagrant violation of the law on the 'subject to which it relates."

John Sherman having carried forward the infamous resumption policy until it has prostrated business in all portions of the country, brought about of recorded failures fully 70,000, entailing losses of fully $2,000,000,000, driven confidence into exile, and shrouded the land in business gloom, asks the people if they would have the policy changed. He and his Shylock friends would drive straight on, as long as the policy wrecks fortunes, hushes industries, increases idleness, crime, poverty, starvation and death. He would lift aloft perjuries and defy the will of the American people in their choice of a president, and he would as readily demand of Hayes, the product of perjurers, to interpose his veto to defeat laws enacted by the peoples' representatives, and in this spirit he appeals to radicals to sustain him in his piratical policy. This perjury broker tells the people that the radical party substituted silver coin for fractional currency by which there was inflation to the extent of $14,000,000, and then admits that in United States notes, from 1876 to the present, there has been a contraction to the extent of $30,000,000, and he also admits that he has now on hand but $129,456,565.15 with which to redeem $346,681,016 in greenbacks, to say nothing of the national bank bills which swells the amount to about $675,000,000. This perjury broker attempted to make a plea for the laboring man by saying that "a man deeply in debt 'and hoping to escape bankruptcy, may de'sire to cheapen the money in which the debt 'is to be paid," and then asks: "Why should 'a laboring man, whose daily toil is mea'sured by the money he receives, desire to 'cheapen money?" Here we have again, and for the thousandth time, the same old stale attempt to mislead the workingman, and if possible obtain his vote for the Shylock policy. What the laboring man wants is work and wages, bread and clothing, home and home comforts. The Shylock policy which John Sherman, the perjury broker, advocates has deprived the laboring man of all these things. It has [illegible] who were carrying them forward. It has turned willing workers, [illegible] them, out upon the street where they are unable to obtain any kind of money, cheap or dear, hard or soft, and it matters little to them whether greenbacks are above or below par, since they have none of them with which to purchase food, even if it were ten times as cheap as it is quoted. When money was abundant labor was in demand, thrift and enterprise went hand in hand, prosperity and contentment were seen on all hands. Now, while the boast is made that greenbacks are at par, there is business death and wide spread labor troubles. Laboring men see these things. They feel the curse to the marrow of their bones, and demand change. The entire financial argument of the perjury broker is in keeping with the Shylock policy. It is not surprising that John Sherman attempts an apology for the frauds that made Hayes president and himself secretary of the treasury. He stands out in the damnable record as the chief miscreant of the entire devilish crew who committed the crimes and advised Hayes to pay for them in federal offices. He was the perjury broker of the conspiracy, and his defense of Hayes is eminently consistent with his Louisiana record. His speech will not help the radical party, for however adroitly put together it is known to be a plea for Shylockism and tainted all through with deception and with lurking contradiction in every sentence.

The Indian Council.

(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23.—An Umatilla dispatch says: "The council met to-day. The United States is represented by Generals Howard, Wheaton and Sawtelle; Majors Throckmorton and Mizner; Captain Gladen, and Lieutenant Wood and the officers of the station at the agency. The state of Oregon was represented by Governor Chadwick, Generals Gates and Kunzie, Colonels Miller and Fulton; Washington territory, by Major McAuliff and Dr. J. H. Boyd. The Rev. Father Conrady, chaplain of the reservation, and the Rev. McCuen, of the Episcopal church, were also present. The Indians were represented by Chiefs Howlish, Wampo, Winnepsnoot and Homely, of the reservation; Hischans, Stock and Walaak, of Columbia. About four hundred settlers and three hundred Indians were present and the commands of Throckmorton and Mizner. General Howard stated the object of the council was to devise means to preserve peace until the meeting of congress. The chiefs then spoke in turn, all except Stock professing friendship and a desire for peace. Governor Chadwick, on behalf of the citizens throughout the state, said General Howard's course would be sanctioned in every state. Howard then, in a pleasant, but firm manner, demanded of the chiefs all the Indians who had been engaged in murders and depredations. He said he would hold them, or some Indians to be produced by them, as hostages until their efforts were exhausted in ferreting out the guilty. When found they were to be turned over to the proper authorities for trial. The order of General Howard was obeyed at once by the chiefs. There is no doubt now of getting at the murderers. Howard will go to see Moses and settle the difficulties in Washington. The best of order was maintained during the proceedings, and the result has sent a feeling of satisfaction over the community. The Indians appreciate the situation as well as the whites, and there is no end of praise of those who have brought about the result."

To the Old Settlers.

The following circular was sent out by Secretary Heron, of the state board of agriculture yesterday:

A number of the pioneers of the state having suggested that a meeting be held during the coming Indiana state fair for the purpose of organizing a state association, the board of agriculture granted every facility at their command to further the proposed object. To that end a committee of arrangements have been appointed to make all necessary preparation and to secure a successful result.

Wednesday, October 2, has been selected as the most suitable time, and the music hall on the state fair grounds as the most convenient place to assemble, which will be appropriately decorated for the occasion. It is specially requested that the pioneers and others bring such relics as are suggestive of the early settlements and of the days when pluck and undaunted courage were the crowning virtues.

It is hoped that this meeting will be the inception of regular annual meetings of the surviving pioneers of Indiana, where they who "tramped down the nettles" and laid the foundation for this great and growing state will meet and renew in spirit and feeling the scenes of early days, and inspire others who are following in their footsteps with gratitude to those who "blazed the way" and "cleared the opening" for the blessings we now enjoy.

It is specially requested that statements be made of any interesting incidents in connection with the early settlements, as all the proceedings of the meeting will be carefully prepared by a shorthand reporter and preserved with other records in the archives of the state for future reference.

All pioneers seventy years of age, who have been residents of the state forty years, will be admitted free to the state fair.

The following named committee of arrangements and reception will take charge of all matters connected therewith until the organization is completed by electing officers and adopting such regulations, and extend to all pioneers, and others interested, a cordial invitation to be present:

Governor J. D. Williams, Judge C. H. Test, John B. Dillon, Hon. Fleming Beeler, Judge T. J. Logan, Charles A. Howland, Marion county; I. D. G. Nelson, of Allen county; Professor John Collett, of Vermillion county.

The following named persons were added to the committee of arrangements and reception: Dr. A. C. Stephenson, of Putnam county; Dr. George Berry, of Franklin county; Hon. R. T. Sample, of Tippecanoe county; Hon. Henry S. Lane, of Montgomery county; Hon. Frank Emmerson, of Jackson county; Dr. J. Helm, of Rush county; Hon. Charles W. Cathcart, of Laporte county; Hon. M. C. Garber, of Jefferson county; Hon. John Pitcher, of Posey county; Dr. George McConnell, of Steuben county. By order of the committee in session.

ALEX HERON, Secretary.

August 14, 1878.

Arrangements are now pending to pass the pioneers free over the railroads one round trip to attend the meeting, on presentation of proper certificate from the clerk of the county where each reside.

Fine Writing.

SUPPLEMENT.

HON. FRANKLIN LANDERS.

An Enthusiastic Reception at Lafayette, August 10.

The Financial Question Learnedly Discussed.

A Clear Showing of the Evils Brought About by Radical Legislation.

The Remedy in the Hands of the People, and the Ballot-box the Remedy.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN—The contest that we are now engaged in is second to none in importance to the people of Indiana. It is indeed but the continuation of the fight which the people have been making to correct the evil sequences of the war. We have three parties in this contest, each having adopted a platform of principles, and when a vote is cast for the candidates of either party it is an indorsement of the principles laid down in the platform of that party. Of the candidates of the respective parties I have nothing to say. So far as I know they are gentlemen of standing, and if elected would faithfully carry out the ideas of the party which placed them in nomination. While I have the highest opinion of the candidates of the democratic party, I am not one of those who believe that all the honor and integrity of the country is confined to the party to which I belong. Our government is formed in such a way as to make us all partners; and any line of policy injurious to any one affects all in like condition. Therefore we should examine all questions connected with the welfare of the government as we would questions affecting the business of a firm with which we are connected. I have no more interest in this canvass than any of you who feel a general interest in public affairs and who have interests to protect.

WHY THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY IS ENTITLED TO SUPPORT.

I would not ask any man to vote the democratic ticket if I did not believe that the adoption of the policy laid down in its platform as the policy of the government would revive the paralyzed business of the country as the grass is revived after a long drought by the refreshing shower. Believing, as I do, that the policy of the republican party since the close of the war has been to change our form of government, as originally designed, from a government by the people and for the people to a moneyed aristocracy administered in the interest of the few at the expense of the many, I accept the democratic platform on which we stand as meeting the issue squarely, and will proceed to examine it in connection with the business interests of the many, which is the true democratic idea.

FINANCIAL THEORY OF THE DEMOCRACY.

The first resolution of our platform declares "that national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality."

The whole question of money is by the constitution given to congress. That body has the power to make money and regulate its value. Nothing is said in the constitution as to what shall be a legal tender, or what material shall be used in making this money or how they shall regulate its value. These things are left to the sound discretion of congress, and that body has wisely authorized the coinage of gold and silver into dollars and eagles, and has said what value each should have in the payment of debts. Gold and silver having been adopted as a medium of exchange by all the commercial nations of the earth, it was the part of wisdom in our congress to adopt them as that medium also. This wisdom is clearly shown in settling the balances between governments, and at the same time it is shown that they can not be relied upon to perform the offices of exchange between private individuals, because they flow to and from governments according to the degree of prosperity or adversity. A government may be flooded with coin or it may be almost entirely drained; therefore, the wisdom of all commercial governments has led them to adopt a domestic or a home money. This is done by the government issuing paper money or authorizing the banks to do so.

THE COST OF MAKING MONEY AND WHO SHOULD MAKE IT.

There is little or no profit to the government in coining gold or silver, because of the cost of the bullion; but paper money is made of an article of but little value, hence the government or bank issuing it makes a great profit out of it, because they never part with a dollar of it unless they receive 100 cents in return. Therefore, when these facts are considered, you will readily understand why there is a contest as to who shall issue the paper money. There has never been any contest over the coinage of gold and silver: the raw material costs too much. All are willing that while firm the government may coin the precious metals. But our republican friends have turned over to the banks the issue of one-half of the paper money of the country, and then passed the resumption law to enable them to get the other half. Is not this an infamous fraud upon the whole people? I know of but one thing equal to it, and that is the formation of fast freight lines, which enrich the freighting companies while they bankrupt the railways. Producers and laboringmen are in bankruptcy, brought about by republican legislation, which has given the issue of cheap money to a few, while the many are called upon to guarantee the payment of these notes to enable them to circulate as money. Certainly great ingenuity has been displayed in perfecting this scheme of robbery of the whole people for the benefit of the few.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD ISSUE THE MONEY.

This policy of the republican managers enables the banking corporations to loan their indebtedness to the other members of the governmental firm, while all others—you, my hearers—who have notes out pay interest on them. The democratic party asserts the right of the government to issue all of your money, both coin and paper, that you may have the benefit of all the profit resulting from its issue, or the use of the credit of the whole people. We demand, in the language of Jefferson, "that the banks should surrender their currency, and the issue of paper money be restored to the government, to whom it belongs." But it is said that ruin and distress would follow the closing of the national banks. We don't propose to wind up the banks. When the national bank act went into effect a high tax was placed upon state banks, which compelled them to abandon the circulation of their notes, and yet the business of the country was not disturbed, because other paper money took its place, and the banks were changed from state to national banks. In the same way the national banks could be changed from banks of issue to banks of discount and deposit only. Doubtless some of the bankers would try to retain their present privilege of loaning their indebtedness for interest, and they might desire to embarrass the business of the country, but this point can be guarded by the issue in advance of government notes. The business community would derive great benefit from a government currency, because the government would get 100 cents for every dollar issued by it, whether paper or coin, because the paper would cost the holder just as much as coin. As it is now, coin costs the banks 100 cents on the dollar, whereas the paper money issued by them costs them just one [illegible] each dollar. The government money would cost [illegible], and the banks would loan it at the best rate they could get.

CHEAP BANK MONEY MAKES HIGH INTEREST.

As it is now the banker pays so little for his money that he virtually has nothing invested, and he can keep half of it idle in order to force a high rate of interest on the other half.

THE USE OF MONEY.

The object of having a circulating medium is to facilitate exchanges, and not to embarrass them. It is said there is plenty of money, but if there is, it is not in circulation. One of the largest bankers in the state informed me recently that two-thirds of his currency was locked up in his vaults, and had been for some time, and when I asked why, he said he was preparing for resumption. Certainly we don't want a financial policy which will require the banker to retire his circulation when the business of the country is depending upon it to perform the necessary exchanges. The pretext that the government needs national banks as fiscal agents is a flimsy one. If the government has deposits to make at banks it requires bonds from the banker; hence the issue of notes by the bank is no part of the fiscal agency, and is of no benefit to the government, if there be enough of its notes issued to perform all exchanges. By the present plan the profitable business is turned over to a favored few, who are building up a moneyed aristocracy while they are ruining the laboring and producing classes.

THE DEMOCRATIC LEADERS AND THE PEOPLE.

There has never been an advocate of democratic institutions who was not in favor of the people as against the only kind of an aristocracy which can be founded in this country—one based on money. Jefferson fought Hamilton and his party upon this issue, but it took the firmness of Jackson to stamp the life out of the monstrous monopoly which existed in his day.

WHAT NATIONAL BANK CURRENCY COSTS THE PEOPLE.

The defenders of the national banks are constantly pointing to the revenue derived from them. They pay no taxes that banks of discount and deposit do not pay except a tax of one per cent. on the average amount of currency they have in circulation, and this tax is levied to cover the cost of the issue of their currency and the renewal of the same. And what does this review amount to? Suppose the banks should keep their entire currency in circulation, that is, the whole $300,000,000, the entire tax would amount to but $3,000,000. Now make seven figures and see what you have to pay the banks to get this revenue of $3,000,000. You have paid since the establishment of the banks, as interest on bonds deposited to secure this $300,000,000 of circulation, $[illegible], or in round numbers, $300,000,000, every cent of which could have been saved if the government had issued this currency. If it is continued 15 years longer you will have to pay $[illegible] more as interest, or a total amounting to near one half of the national debt, and you will then owe the principal of the bonds which we deposited as security. Will you submit to the continuance of this robbery?

WHAT GOVERNMENT NOTES WOULD DO.

The issue of government notes would not only save this vast sum to the people, but these notes would be a strong band of union between the states. Every citizen north, south, east and west would recognize such notes as his own, and they would have the same credit in all parts of the Union, and if made a full legal tender (as we demand) they would never depreciate below gold and silver.

WHAT GIVES VALUE TO MONEY?

It is the act making a circulating medium a legal tender that gives it value. Gold and silver are made money by act of congress, the same as paper, and when congress some years since abandoned silver as a legal tender it declined in value and remained depreciated until it was again made a legal tender, whereupon it rose to par and has since remained there. The Mexican dollar, which contains more silver than our standard dollar, and is 902 fine, but is not a legal tender, is worth but ninety cents. You can not pay your taxes nor buy postage stamps with foreign gold coin if the officials do not take it at their own risk, because congress has not declared it a legal tender.

But the friends of the national bank system declare that if paper money is made a full legal tender it will drive the coin out of the country. This is false. As I said before, the balances between governments in the way of trade regulates this matter. If we sell to other nations more than we buy, as we are doing now, we will have the current of coin flowing to us. If we buy more than we sell the coin goes away from us. This is an inexorable law of commerce which no legislation can change. But the value of that coin in the government where it may be found can be fixed by legislation. The policy laid down in our platform of full legal tender money made of coin and paper, is intended to, and its direct effect will be, to bring about specie circulation. No man will hoard specie when he can not sell it at speculative prices, and he could not if paper would pay all and every class of debts and dues. If paper money had been a full legal tender we would long since have had a specie circulation in the country and par money.

WHAT THE RESUMPTION ACT MEANS.

The object of the resumption law was to retire and get rid of the government notes so as to give the entire field of circulation to the national bank currency. The friends of this law profess a great fear of inflation by the issue of government notes, but they have no fear of an over issue of bank notes. The banks under the present law could circulate their notes to the extent of ninety per cent. of all the bonds they can procure. The republican leaders have led many honest men to believe that our only financial safety is to place all bank issues on a coin basis, and thus prevent fluctuation in prices, and they call this bed rock, when in fact it is but quicksand. A policy that keeps the volume of currency ebbing and flowing like the tides of the sea, is one which will leave all men who follow it prostrate and helpless, an easy prey to the money shark who is watching and knows well what the condition of all men will be who follow the flow of currency, as well as the fish hawk knows what the condition of the fish will be, when the ebb comes, which follow the flow of the tides.

COIN REDEMPTION MEANS INFLATION.

But if there was no such design the policy of issuing paper money redeemable in coin leads to the wildest inflation. Banking is not done by individuals for the public good, but for the profit to those engaged in it, and there are two questions which the banker always considers: How to make the most money when redemption is not wanted, and how to best protect their credit when redemption is asked for. If the balance of trade is with us the coin flows to us, and then look out for inflation. The banks will loan every dollar they can lawfully to the extent of at least three dollars for every one they have in specie. Prices of labor and commodities go up; speculation runs wild, and the people think they have suddenly grown rich. This thing may continue for some years, but the balance of trade turns against us, and the coin in our banks starts abroad. The banker has to meet these coin demands, and he does it. But he must protect his credit at home, and he knows his only remedy and safety is in retiring two of the three dollars he has out to get down to his own specie reserve, and he does this by calling in his loans and retiring his surplus currency, regardless of the needs of the country, for his own credit must be protected. Then comes a shrinkage in values, and financial ruin and public distress follow. The men who followed the flow of coin ventured too near the sands, and were left high and dry on the shore of bankruptcy. I need not describe this ebb and flow of money, for you have had too much experience within the past few years as well as before the war. You have seen the sharks devour the helpless fish that were deluded into these dangerous waters by the tempting baits.

And again, think of the frauds that were practiced under specie basis and redeemable money before the war. Upon every business man's desk was found the detector, which gave daily quotations, showing the currency to range from 100 cents down to 15 cents on the dollar in value.

SOME STATISTICS.

I have said that paper money, whenever we insist upon an issue of government notes, based on the credit of the whole people, the ghost of the continental money and confederate scrip is at once brought prominently before the people to convince them that such notes will always depreciate. Mr. Groesbeck, of Cincinnati, in his paper upon the subject of silver, which he read before the bankers' convention in New York sometime since, digressed from his subject of silver and brought those ghosts before that body. He referred to the depreciation of the continental money and the confederate scrip. He said that all money like our United States notes would depreciate in time of war. I regret, because of the high standing of Mr. Groesbeck, that he should attempt to compare our United States notes to continental and confederate notes. The continental notes were not based upon taxes; the continental government had no power to levy taxes except by consent of the states; and if she had had the power they had almost nothing to tax. The confederate notes were not issued by a government at all, but by states in rebellion trying to establish a government, and when their cause failed their money would of course be worthless. Will Mr. Groesbeck or any other advocate of bank currency redeemable in coin be candid or honest enough to inform the country what became of the redeemable money of the south, every dollar of which was lost to the holder, and what would have been the fate of the north had it not been for the issue of legal tender notes by the government? The banks had been under suspension of specie payments for more than 12 months, and all lines of business can come to any other conclusion than this, that the people would have lost every dollar of their money had not the greenback act of February, 1862, enabled them to redeem their money with them. We ask for the issue of notes by a government of more than one hundred years standing with credit second to none, and with a revenue of near $[illegible] per year. I can bear with a man of but little information bringing forward these ghosts, but when one like Mr. Groesbeck so far forgets himself as to do so, he demands some attention. I defy any opponent of the issue of such notes as we ask for by the government to point to a single instance where the [illegible] was made by responsible government [illegible] Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina, when they were colonies of Great Britain. They never depreciated below coin, although they remained in circulation for nearly [illegible] years and added much to the wealth of those colonies. The first notes used by the government after the war began were called demand notes, but when it was seen that the government had no coin to pay them with, congress made them a full legal tender, and they never depreciated below the value of coin, and over 300,000 of them are outstanding to-day. When coin was worth 285 in greenbacks, which were a limited legal tender, the demand note, that was a full legal tender, was worth the same premium in greenbacks. Need I say more? Can anyone doubt the ability of our government to make her own notes par with coin to the extent that the legitimate trade of the country needs to perform exchanges? Paper redeemable in coin on business principles led to the wildest inflation and the most ruinous contraction, and I want to call your attention to the ebb and flow of currency under specie basis from 1811 until the issuing of government notes:

Bank currency in 1811	$ 28,000,000
Bank currency in 1816	68,000,000
Bank currency in 1820	45,000,000
Contraction from 1816 to 1820		$ 23,000,000
Bank currency in 1837	141,000,000
Bank currency in 1843	58,000,000
Contraction from 1837 to 1843		83,000,000
Bank currency in 1854	204,000,000
Bank currency in 1855	156,000,000
Contraction from 1854 to 1855		48,000,000
Bank currency in 1860	207,000,000
Bank currency in 1861	184,000,000
Contraction from 1860 to 1862		23,000,000
Bank currency in 1862	202,000,000

You will observe that the ebb and flow of the currency at the times I have named was under the policy of paper money redeemable in coin. This was all done, as I have already said, on business principles, to make money and to protect credit, and is directly chargeable to the policy of redeemable money, but the expansion and contraction I am about to refer to was one of designing legislation in the interest of the few and at the expense of the many. It was done to build up a money aristocracy, as I have already said.

From the expansion and contraction which I have shown took place under specie basis from 1811 to the commencement of the war, who can argue that a currency upon such a basis is a stable one? In every case history informs us that bankruptcy and ruin to the business men and laboring community was the result. There are many here to-night who recollect the panic and bankruptcy that followed the contraction from 1837 to 1843. The amount of the contraction of the circulating medium was proportionately as great as the contraction since 1865. I can not think there is a man in Indiana who will study the history of the expansion and contraction of paper money redeemable in coin but who will come to the conclusion which I have, that it is ruinous to the laboring and producing classes who produce all the wealth, and that it should be abandoned as not suited to the wants of the people. If you notice, a contraction of $[illegible] from 1811 to 1816, a contraction of $[illegible] from 1837 to 1843, caused the crash and financial panic of those periods. A contraction of $[illegible] from 1854 to 1857 caused the panic of the latter year. A contraction of $[illegible] from 1860 to 1862 produced the money panic and the suspension of specie payments in December, 1861. The volume of state bank paper in 1862 was $[illegible], which the banks were unable to redeem until the issue of greenbacks. A contraction of from $[illegible] to $[illegible] was sufficient to produce such widespread financial ruin. But in 1873 it took hundreds of millions to produce a like result, from the obvious reason that from 1811 to 1860 the business was done principally on credit, forced on us by bank currency redeemable in coin. Whereas, in 1866 there was an abundance of currency to do business, and no necessity to make debts; all commodities could be sold for cash. Therefore, it required an enormous contraction to force the credit system on the country. As contraction was carried on, credit was substituted until it came to the bursting point in 1873.

HAS THERE BEEN CONTRACTION?

Republicans of the designing class deny that there has been contraction of the currency. Seeing the prostrate and bankrupt condition of the country, they would have the people believe it is not the result of their policy. They deny the fact that the 7-30 and compound interest notes performed the offices of currency as well as other forms of treasury notes that were made and designed to circulate as money. I want you to hear what Mr. Spaulding, of Buffalo, says in his history of legal tenders. You will remember that he was a member of the finance committee of the house during the whole war. He is a banker of high standing in his state. He says on page 200 of his history: "That Mr. McCulloch, when he became secretary of the treasury, did not increase the issue of United States notes, but continued the issue of 7-30 and compound interest bearing notes, made a legal tender at their face value, and after the surrender of General Lee he obtained the means, principally, to pay off the army by the issue of these notes." And yet there has been no contraction of the circulating medium, according to our republican friends, but the reports of their own treasury officials show a decrease of $1,088,076,265 between 1865 and 1873.

The fact that there is no active business going on in this country save in the bankrupt courts, starts the inquiry as to the cause of this, and before we can apply a remedy we must know the cause, for the remedy consists in meeting our wants.

The volume of currency or money that performs exchanges in any government regulates the value of permanent property and all commodities. When there is an average quantity of the same, supply and demand always exert their influence in regulating the value of commodities. Apply this rule to our depressed condition, taking the amount of money in circulation in 1865, as I have shown, and no man will be at a loss to know why his land, which was mortgaged for one-half its value some years ago, now belongs to the mortgagee. No laboring man will be at a loss to know why his labor has lost half its value; the question is easily answered. Contraction has taken away one-half the value of his labor.

CAN THE GOVERNMENT ISSUE LEGAL TENDER NOTES?

It is now argued by the bank currency advocates that the federal government can not make its own notes a legal tender in time of peace; that the decision of the supreme court making them a legal tender would undoubtedly be reversed. I can not say as to that. I have lost a large portion of the confidence I once had in the supreme court. But Mr. Spaulding, in his speech as given by himself, on page [illegible] of his appendix to his history, while defending the national bank bill, argued in favor of making these notes a legal tender, [illegible]:

"I would go one step further, and make the national bank currency like the notes of legal tender notes, a general legal tender as well as the [illegible] bank currency redeemed in lawful money, except that the currency issued by any bank organization should not be a legal tender for any debts that the bank itself might owe."

Now, you see that these gentlemen, the national bank advocates, Mr. Spaulding among them, after having argued in favor of making national bank notes a legal tender and insisted on the constitutional right to do so, should pretend to argue against the constitutional right of the federal government to make her own notes a legal tender. [illegible] to carry out their purposes. But whenever an argument is presented in favor of the people as against them there is found in the constitution ample provisions to prevent the passage of any act in favor of the people.

ANOTHER NATIONAL BANK IDEA.

In order to alarm the people and prevent them from demanding their rights in a body, as they would do in any business matter disconnected from politics, in having their money made a full legal tender and receivable by the government in payment of all dues, they tell them that if that is done the secretary of the treasury will have to buy coin to pay interest on the public debt. This I deny. When the treasury notes are made receivable for tariff dues speculating in coin will cease at once, as it has been gradually falling off since the remonetization of silver. All dollars being equal in performing exchanges, nothing can be performed with any dollar other than exchanges or to loan to some person for that purpose. The paper dollar being so much superior to the coin dollar in convenience, all active exchanges will be performed by it. The coin will find its way into the treasury and bank vaults, and the treasurer of the United States will have more gold than he has now.

This cry of the gold ring to secure legislation in its own favor should alarm no one. As it is now, the member of our governmental firm who has [illegible] dues to pay, offers to pay the debt due to the firm in its own paper. The firm refuses to accept its own note on the ground that it has contracted to pay a particular debt in a particular kind of money; therefore, in order that the firm may be relieved of the necessity and expense of procuring that particular kind of money, they say to their partner, "We can not receive our own note in discharge of your obligation to us; we are compelled to ask you to sell our note and bring us the kind of money we have promised to pay upon the special debt." There is not a fair-minded business man in Indiana who would call that an honorable transaction.

All the redemption that I want for money, and all that is needed to make par money, is for the government to honor its own stamp when it is presented to it in payment of a debt, whether that stamp be upon silver, paper, gold, copper or nickel. If a government adopts anything as money, and by use it is found to be impracticable and injurious to the people, I would redeem and retire it with whatever the wisdom of the country decided was more practicable and for the public interest. Had I been one of the demonetizers of silver I would have insisted that the government take up every piece of stamped silver money outstanding and pay for it in the substitute instead of repudiating it, as was done by the passage of that wicked law. But I am not one of those who believe that the issue of treasury notes was an impractical act, and I am not in favor of their retirement or redemption. If experience should prove them impracticable, I would say, redeem and destroy them. Nothing can be more dishonorable in a government than to adopt a circulating medium, place a value on it that all men are bound to respect, and then take all the value from it that they have given it by making it a legal tender in the payment of debts, and leave it to depreciate in the hands of the holders. A full legal tender needs no redemption, for it has no superior.

THE REMEDY.

I have given the subject of the expansion and contraction of the currency much attention, and though I have been denounced as an inflationist, it has been the study of my life how to avoid this result. Inflation, or expansion, if you please, robs the creditor, if the inflation takes place after the debt is made, just as contraction robs the debtor for the benefit of the creditor, if done after the debt is made. Honest payment is the payment of a debt in money of the same value as that in which the debt was created. I have tried to convince you that this honest payment of a creditor and justice to a debtor can not be maintained upon a specie basis. We want a fixed amount of paper money, made and kept in circulation in order that justice may be done to both debtor and creditor, that business may be done with more certainty. A business man ought to have but two questions to study—they are enough—the quantity of the article that he trades in and the demand for it. In addition to that, his having been compelled to study the value put upon it by the money in circulation has brought distress and ruin upon the business men of the country. A fixed amount of paper money will give fixed value to all real estate; it would offer inducement for investment that would absorb the surplus capital of the country. If there was no change in the value of real estate, except that brought about by the improvement of the country, the surplus funds of the country, which, if invested in that would always be accompanied by a demand for labor to improve such land; the wealth of the country would be increased by the labor thus employed. The landholder who put a mortgage upon the land for one-half its value would be certain of his one-half interest in the land; it would not be turned over as it is now, by contraction to the mortgagee; the labor would not shrink one-half in value as it has done. I have made up my mind that to furnish the people with a fixed or given amount of currency through the medium of banks is an impossibility. I have no hostility to banks; am in favor of them. I regard them as a commercial necessity, without which a commercial community could not thrive; but after studying this question as I have, feeling a deep interest in the welfare of this country, hoping to remain in it for some length of time, I have made up my mind that the only way to bring about a stability in trade and a certainty in investments, which I regard as so necessary to the business community and the laboring men of this country, is through the government. She can, if she will, fix the amount of paper money at any number of dollars per capita, and keep it there. Then all men can know how much money is in circulation to give values. You ask me how much money the government ought to put out. I have no hesitation in giving you my opinion. She ought to put out every dollar of paper money that she can keep at par with coin, and I believe she could keep $[illegible] per capita, which would give us from $[illegible] to $1,000,000,000 at par with coin, if she would give it all the credit she can by making it a full legal tender, and giving it all the paying qualities she gives to coin. If an amount was fixed by government and issued, and it was found to be too great to be kept at par with coin, I would adopt the policy suggested by Mr. Jefferson in 1813. I would open government loans, and take the government legal tender notes as I would coin for bonds. A government that does not keep in circulation the largest quantity of paper money possible to be kept at par with coin, so as to give the largest price possible for lands and labor and commodities in coin or paper as its equivalent, so as to give the largest price for labor and commodities and the lowest interest, does not look after the true interest of those that produce the wealth. If commodities are sold for paper, or labor done for paper or coin either, the paper and coin being equal in value, if they had sold for [illegible] more than they would bring with a limited amount of money in circulation, the gold thus received for them preferred by the seller (both being equal)—is worth just as much if sent abroad as though the man had worked two days to get the same amount, or sold twice the amount of commodity to get it. To say that any civilized commercial government has her values based upon coin is false. They all have paper money, and most of them have that paper money a legal tender as fully as coin. France, England and Russia have made their paper money a legal tender. The paper money of France and Russia is not redeemable; the paper of England is; but, being a legal tender the same as coin, every dollar that is in circulation gives value to commodities and labor just as gold would do. That is just what we mean in our platform when we demand that the government alone shall issue money, paper as well as coin, all made a legal tender. We mean to reduce the value of coin by having paper perform precisely the same office.

I am now at some loss, as no doubt you are, as to what our republican friends mean by resumption. I know what they meant by the passage of the resumption law, and how they expected it. They meant by that law to retire every dollar of government notes, and when they were retired, the banks compelled to redeem their notes in coin—and coin of both gold and silver, [illegible] alone. [illegible] they have [illegible] government notes not destroyed. I want my republican friends to let the country know what they mean by resumption. It is plain that they passed the resumption law with a view alone for the retirement of every dollar of government notes, that has spread ruin and bankruptcy throughout the country, knowing it is a [illegible] contraction that they never intended to carry out, or are they not now holding in abeyance, trying in every way possible to [illegible] tion and they depreciated further repeal of it, I am satisfied they only want to get the people off their guard so that they can carry out the letter and spirit of that infamous law. The republican senate permitted a bill to pass making it the duty of the secretary of the treasury to keep greenbacks in circulation and cease retiring them, but they refused to pass a bill for the repeal of the resumption law that had passed the house. The country ought to know what they mean. From their acts it is clear to me that if they can succeed this fall in electing a congress they intend to carry out this law. They don't want to agitate it now. We have them on the retreat, and our only security now is in agitation, and I am willing to do my part to keep up that agitation until the last law they have passed to build up their monied aristocracy is repealed, and the government re-established and carried on in the interest of the people and against this aristocracy.

DEMOCRATIC DOCTRINES.

The Platform of the Party Adopted at the State Convention—A Clear and Unequivocal Enunciation of Principles—Sentiments Which the Masses Will Indorse.

The democracy of the state of Indiana assembled in delegate convention declare:

That national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are by the terms of the original contracts under which they were issued, expressly payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money as well as coin is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

We are in favor of such legislation by congress as will authorize the taxation by the states of the United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad, through the means of home syndicates or other methods; and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislating so as to distribute said debt among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practical opportunities for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation which shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public and private; and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon the same terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

We are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of corporations engaged in the business of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that such lien should be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation.

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and owner.

The democratic party is the friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last apportionment of the state for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonorable, and we demand that the next legislature, in apportioning the state for legislative purposes, as will be their imperative duty, shall have regard alone to population and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the circuit court of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the states, tends to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the true interests of people. And we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the constitution and expressed in the judiciary act of 1789.

We are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the federal government, either in lands, bonds, money or by the pledge of the public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders in the republican party who secretly connived, and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme, by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for president and vice president, were wrongfully kept out of the positions to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against free government, a crime against the elective franchise and a crime that can only be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the president of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the acts of federal officers in attempting to interfere with the rights and powers of the state courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our senators and representatives in congress be and are hereby requested to secure passage of a law giving to the soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

Gen. Cary Hunting Greenbacks.

[Oil City Derrick.]

"Here is a piece of engraved paper—a greenback;" and he thrust his labor-calloused thumb and finger into his vest pocket. That wasn't the right pocket, and he immediately passed over into the other one. Although the general's thumb and finger seemed to be making a very thorough investigation, yet they did not come in contact with the sought-for bank note. "Here is a piece of engraved paper," repeated the eloquent apostle of greenbacks, so that the audience might not lose the thread of discourse; "here is a piece of engraved paper—a greenback," and he flew from one pocket to another with lightning-like rapidity. Some bloated bondholders and hard money democrats on the back seat began to snicker, and one of them said:

"General, you have either pulled down the wrong vest, or you have on your other pants."

This very poor wit created some laughter, but the general was not cast down. Turning his pantaloons pockets inside out, and exhibiting them in all their emptiness, he said:

"No, gentlemen, I have not got on my other pants. These are all the pants that I possess. The trouble with me, as with nine-tenths of my hearers to-night, is not that pants are too plentiful, but that money is too confounded scarce!"

The house came down promptly, and during the uproar the general negotiated a loan of $5 from one of the vice presidents of the meeting, and proceeded with the illustration.

CARPET-BAG SENATORS.

They are After Hayes and Will Bring Him to Terms.

[Washington Post.]

Senator Conover, who is now in the city, talks of declining the republican nomination for congress in the First district of Florida. He complains that General Apathy is in command of the forces of the administration in Florida, and says that sort of thing is very discouraging to southern republicans. His withdrawal at the present time from the canvass will leave his party in an awkward position, but as the democrats have a sure thing in the district, he might as well come down now as after the election. The southern republicans are making a combined effort, just now, to get Mr. Hayes to come to their assistance by giving them the distribution of patronage. Conover and Spencer are both here and credited with working to that end, and it is probable that they will get what they want. In fact, the administration has already curried to Spencer as it did to Kellogg some time ago. Several appointments have been made in Alabama recently at Spencer's dictation, and as he is here now, in person, he will, no doubt, have entire control of the federal patronage of that state. No man has abused Hayes with more vim and vigor than Spencer, and so far as we know has taken nothing back. But the main cause of his enmity was a refusal to allow him to hand out the offices among his friends. It is suggested that Mr. Hayes is in the proper frame of mind to make friends with both of these senators. He is in dread of impeachment and wants to smooth his way in the senate. The Potter committee has proven clearly that there was a corrupt and disgraceful bargain made in order to count Hayes in, and with the certainty of the election of a democratic house staring him in the face the acting president feels very insecure in his fraudulent seat. It is too late to bring Blaine, Conkling, Hamlin and Howe over to his side, but he reckons on Conover, Patterson and Spencer if he yields to them the distribution of a compensating amount of patronage. Kellogg has already been secured, and the recent appointments in Alabama indicate that Spencer is being sought. Conover is complaining at present, but he has only been here a day or two, and Mr. Hayes, like a coy maiden, yields slowly. He has certain demands of his own to make, and when Conover agrees to accede to them, he will no doubt find that General Apathy has been displaced by General Efficiency. Meantime, Secretary Gorham is running the machine with the view of providing a soft place to light on when the senate becomes democratic. He has remained in Washington during the entire summer, and devoted himself manfully to squeezing campaign money out of department clerks and putting it where it would do the most good. By this devotion he has won the applause of his party, and will be held up to Mr. Hayes as the savior of the country from the democrats. All the time he has kept very quiet and encouraged the opinion that he was laboring solely for the good of the party. But he has been rigging up the wires so as to pull himself into the chief clerkship of the house in case the republicans succeed in getting a majority in that body. The candidates for congress of his party all have to go to him for the means to make their canvass successful, and he makes it a point not to forget his own interest while distributing the money collected from the government clerks. With the power to make each candidate pledge himself on the election for chief clerk, before he gets any of the campaign fund, it is reasonable to suppose that Mr. Gorham would have a pretty sure thing in the event it is possible for the radicals to carry the next house.

Fighting Joe Hooker.

[Boston Globe.]

General Hooker, who won the soubriquet of "Fighting Joe," and proved himself a brave officer and skillful general on many fields in our late civil war, in his letter touching the Grant interview upon the topic of the battle of Lookout mountain, shows that he is quite a famous letter writer as well as vigorous fighter. There is always more or less jealousy among military men, and the fact that Grant has been talking quite freely about the military reputation and prowess of other American generals who fought on both sides has served to bring out some of this. General Hooker is very positive that there was a battle at Lookout mountain, which might have been of more serious and memorable results had he had the same disregard for the lives and welfare of his men that General Grant often displayed, and notably at Shiloh, the Wilderness and Cold Harbor. He only accounts for Grant's statements about the Lookout mountain battle, provided he really made them, by the theory that Grant was in his cups or has had his head turned by the third term craze. General Hooker regrets the necessity of referring to Grant, and asks for a committee of congress to find out and report upon the true history of all those great battles about which there is so much dispute. We incline to the opinion that this is not necessary to show that there were great battles, and that the greatest generalship was not that displayed by a cool and dogged obstinacy to yield a point once decided upon, whether the unnecessary sacrifice of large numbers of human lives depended upon it or not. General Hooker need not fear that he will fare ill on the pages of the future history of this country. He will, with all his fine fighting qualities, be remembered as a brave, big hearted man, who had sympathy for humanity and a care for the lives of the men placed in his hands.

Sherman's Mill Almost Run Down.

[Chicago Tribune.]

There remain but four more days of grace for the luckless debtor. On the next blessed Sabbath morning the gate will be closed and the crowd outside will have to shoulder their burden of old debts and trudge away, getting rid of them as best they can, unprotected as against the importunate assaults of creditors. It will be a busy week in the bankruptcy courts. Day by day the multitude pours in on foot and on horseback. "The woods are full of them." Butchers, bakers and candlestick makers, tailors, grocers, commission men, speculators, ministers, lawyers and doctors, are rushing pell mell with their noses all in one direction, and as fast as their legs can carry them, some with assets and some without, and all with heavy loads of debts which they are anxious to dump into the court and leave as souvenirs of their esteem for their creditors. It is a curious problem in finance how a person, not a newspaper man, can so conduct business as to involve himself in a hundred thousand or so of debts and have no assets of any description. Where does this money go? is the question.

[illegible]

[New York Sun.]

The gross earnings of the Central Pacific railroad for the present year will be, it is estimated, in the neighborhood of $[illegible], of which about $[illegible] will be net profit. The gross earnings have been as high as $17,000,000, with a net gain of $[illegible]—almost [illegible] per cent. The Chicago and Northwestern railway, which is a well paying road, does not get a profit of $2,000,000 out of the gross receipts, amounting to $[illegible]. And still the Central Pacific has just increased its freight rates.

DR. C. McLANE'S

Celebrated American

WORM SPECIFIC

OR

VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eye-lid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy, not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

The genuine DR. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

DR. C. McLANE'S

LIVER PILLS

are not recommended as a remedy "for all the ills that flesh is heir to," but in affections of the liver, and in all Bilious Complaints, Dyspepsia and Sick Headache, or diseases of that character, they stand without a rival.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Each box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Insist upon having the genuine Dr. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronounciation.

Parties, Records and Measures.

At no period in the history of the country has it been more important to discuss party records and measures than now. The people were never more intensely in earnest than at the present. To deny that there is a general shaking up of parties, growing out of a deep seated determination of the people to find the right way out of troubles that the radical party has heaped upon the country, would be to deny a selfevident truth. This state of affairs does not in the least disturb the equipoise of the democracy; on the contrary the democratic party has sought by every legitimate means to bring about agitation, to go to the profoundest depth of radical villainy and bring to the surface and expose to public view the repulsive monsters who for many years in their caverns of crime have plotted their schemes to ruin the country. In this general upheavel it is easy enough to discover that the people are getting down to the bed rock of radical rascallities. The bottom fact of the radical record are being set in order, catalogued and alphabetically arranged, so that each crime, every fraud, every forgery, every perjury, is brought into the boldest possible relief, made to stand up and stand out bleak as lightning scathed mountain peaks, haggard as radical victims of starvation, and as grim as storm beaten skeletons in the valleys of death. There is no escape for the radical party. At every turn it is confronted by crimes so monstrous that its knees have the Belshazzar shake. On every highway where tramps its army of official thieves, with exhausted swag bags, clothed in rags and covered with vermine, prevented from further raids upon the national treasury by the vigilance of the democratic party, may be heard the call for Grant. The people, who have been robbed of their substance, assail the radical party with denunciations and anathemas, steadily gaining in volume and emphasis, until they startle like thunder peals. They exhibit the radical financial policy that has bankrupted thousands; they point to the wrecks of fortunes, homes and industries, to their poverty and rags, and their curses come thick and fast. From Louisiana to the white house the radical party paved the way with frauds forgeries and perjuries, upon which Hayes was shuffled into office, followed by an army of conspirators, each with evidence of his scoundrelism upon which he demanded pay in the shape of official station, and the entire gang, more brutal and repulsive than monsters guilty of rape or arson, are now helping Hayes to conduct the government. The democratic party is determined that the policy and record of the radical party shall be kept prominently before the country. There is to be no dodging, no subterfuges. The radical party will be compelled to stand face to face with its crimes, as murderers are compelled to look upon their ghastly victims, and while consternation overwhelms the purjured crew, so that their under jaws hang down, the democratic party will cram their lies down their throats, and compel them to swallow their record for the good of their country. The Nashville American very justly remarks that "the republican party labors under the disadvantage of being a special party, with a temporary mission, now at an end. It has no real life or vigor left. The democracy, on the contrary, hold the position of a live, progressive party, ready to grapple at once with the coming issues, with the silver question, with the tariff, with reform in all the departments of the government, the new treaties to be made, the great trade extension to be sought, with the establishment of the American system of government currency. Holding live, progressive views on these issues, based upon principles fundamentally correct as to the organization and character of the government and the relations of the states with the federal government, the democratic party has nothing to fear.

Advertising in Hard Times.

People who always want to economize their newspaper advertisements remind us of a story we once heard of a farmer who lived in the province of Greece, who was accustomed to sow seed every year. From this gret crops would ensue, and consequently large profit. But one season it happened that times were bad, weather uncertain, and the outlook not at all cheering. Then said the husbandmen very smartly: "Now is my time to economize. I will spend no money for seed this year. I cannot afford to spend money without any definite prospects of getting it back again." But when the time of harvest came, lo! there was no crop, and the husbandman was dispossessed of his home and the fields and manor which he had bought in better times. "Fool that I was!" he exclaimed, "had I but spent a few dollars for seed I should not now be an outcast from my own land. For verily, if the season be bad, I have no crop to lessen the loss, and if it be good no seed from which to derive the benefit of the abundance." Some of our business men should remember this story.

A Fact or Two for Honest Nationals to Consider.

The Rochester Republican, of New York, publishes a timely article showing that the democratic party have demanded and also have attempted to enact the chief measures that the Nationals are not advocating, and have failed simply because they did not possess a majority of votes in the Senate. We invite the attention to, and a careful perusal of the following:

When the honest Nationals especially if they be of Republican antecedents, hear their speakers say and see their papers proclaim that both the old parties have been alike untrue to the interests of the working masses and unsound on the question of finances, let them remember a fact or two in vindication of the democratic party, and inquire whether they themselves are not to blame for the present state of affairs. Did not the Democracy of the United States in their first National Convention after the close of the war, take precisely the issues with the Republicans that the Nationalists now make concerning the public debt, the currency, taxation, &c.? The Democratic National Platform of 1868, adopted in Convention at New York, declared:

Firstly—"That where the obligations of the government do not expressly state upon their face, or the law under which they are issued does not provide that they shall not be paid in coin, they ought in right and in justice to be paid in the lawful money of the United States."

Secondly—That there should be "equal taxation of property, including government bonds and other public securities."

Thirdly—That there should be "one currency for the government and the people, the laborer and the office holder the producer and the bond holder."

Fourthly—That the tariff ought to be "for revenue only."

And so on to the end. Let our Republican National friends ask themselves where they stood when, in 1868, the time to strike with effect, the Democracy thus championed the cause of the people with Horatio Seymour in the field as their standard bearer. And let our Democratic Nationalist friends remember the Democratic creed and campaign of 1868, and recognize the fact that the Democracy is now as true as ever in the interests of the people. Is there a nationalist, no matter what his antecedents, who to-day, if the parties and platform of 1868 stood array the Presidency, would not vote and labor for the success of the Democratic cause? Is there a Nationalist, a Republican of 1868, who, if he could then have foreseen the effect of Grant's election upon the finances and industries of the country as clearly as he sees it now, would have voted the Republican ticket in that year?

The truth is, vast numbers of those now enrolled in the National organization were blinded by the "bloody shirt" and deceived by his apparent prosperity and security in 1868, and so voted a continuance in power of the Republican party which has brought upon them and the rest of the people all their existing woes. Grant was elected and reelected, and it was not until after the lapse of the first few months of his second administration when the panic of 1873 occurred, that the people awoke to a true sense of their situation. Grant and his cabinets, and the Republican Congress that supported them, were for eight years the pliant tools of the money power—the base instruments of the class legislation by which the rich were made richer and the poor poorer.

The debt that was payable in currency was by an act of Congress declared to be payable in coin, thus swindling the people, it has been carefully estimated, out of $600,000,000. The bonds were declared exempt from taxation. Silver was demonetized. Forced resumption with gold as the single standard of value retirement and destruction of the $350,000,000 of Treasury notes that had been made legal tender, were decreed. Since the Democratic party partially regained power these false steps have been checked and as far as possible retraced. And it is only through the Democratic party that the full-tide of prosperity can be restored. Let the Nationals bear these facts in mind.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

Democratic Doctrine.

The Platform of the Party Adopted at the State Convention.

A Clear and Unequivocal Enunciation of Principles—Sentiments which the Masses will [illegible]

The democracy of the State of Indiana, assembled in delegate convention, declare;

That national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are, by the terms of the original contracts under which they were issued, expressly made payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money, as well as coin, is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

That we are in favor of such legislation by congress as will authorize the taxation by the states, of the United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad, through the means of home syndicates or other methods and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislating so as to distribute said debt among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practicable opportunity for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation as shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public any private; and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon the same terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

That we are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employes of corporations engaged in the business of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that such lien shall be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation.

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and owner.

That the democratic party is the friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last apportionment of the state for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonorable, and we demand that the next legislature, in apportioning the state for legislative purposes, as will be their imparative duty, shall have regard alone to population and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the circuit courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the states tends to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the interests of the people; and we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the constitution and expressed in the judiciary act of 1789.

That we are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the federal government either in lands, bonds, money, or by the pledge of the public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders of the republican party who secretly conceived and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for president and vice-president, were wrongly kept out of the position to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that only can be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the president of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the act of federal officers in attempting to interfere with the rights and powers of the state courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our senators and representatives in congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to the soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

A GLYCERINE magazine near Bradford, Pa., belonging to N. B. Fulver, and containing 70 pounds of glycerine and 100 pounds of dynamite, exploded a few days ago, and N. B. Fulver, J. B. Burkholder, Andrew P. Higgins and Charley Page were blown into fragments.

THE WEST.

GEN. MILES has been heard from. His official account of the recent fight in the Yellowstone park is as follows:

> I have to report that, with a detachment of the Fifth infantry and a small band of Crow allies, I surprised a small camp of hostile Bannocks on Clark's fork, west of Hart mountain, at daylight today. As near as I can ascertain, there were eleven Indians killed, thirty-one captured; also 200 head of horses, mules and ponies captured. From the prisoners I learn that a few lodges have gone to Washakie's camp of Shoshones. Capt. Bennett, of the Fifth infantry, Crow Interpreter Roque Barsome, and one Crow warrior, were killed. Private McAtee, company G, Fifth infantry, was wounded. The Bannocks endeavored to excite the Crows to hostility, but I have turned the latter against them.

THE regular weekly robbery of "the coach from Deadwood" occurred the other night near Hat creek, Wyoming. The usual monotony was varied, however, by a fight between the messengers and bandits. "While the robbers were engaged in going through the pockets of the two passengers and the mail sacks the two messengers, who were riding about 200 yards in the rear of the coach, came up, dismounted, and crept up within fifteen yards of the robbers, when they were commanded to halt, and fired upon. The fire was returned, and one of the robbers fell dead. The others retreated to a gulch, keeping up a steady fire on the messengers, who returned it, but dare not leave their position. The coach meantime had driven on, and, after waiting some time, and seeing that they were not strong enough to dislodge the robbers, the messengers mounted their horses and rejoined the coach, leaving the mail sacks lying in the road near the body of the dead robber. The messengers are confident that two of the robbers who got away are badly wounded."

A TELEGRAM from Dodge City, Kan., says fifteen cattle men and Company I of the Fourth Cavalry fought a band of Indians, thirty-five miles south of Fort Dodge. One or two Indians were killed, and one soldier wounded. The military fell back, and the Indians went on northwest. The dispatch adds that the Indians have killed several herders and stolen a great many horses within the last few days.

GEN. HOWARD has collected all the bands of surrendered Indians at Camp McDermott, in Oregon. The whole of them, about 1,000 in number, are held as prisoners, subject to orders from the authorities at Washington..... We have news of a fight with the Bannocks in the northwestern corner of Wyoming, near the Montana and Idaho lines. Lieut. Bishop, with part of Capt. Jack Hayes' company of the Fifth Cavalry, with a number of Arrapahoe and Shoshone scouts under Chief Black Coal, surprised a party of hostile Bannocks and captured, killed and dispersed the band.

THE SOUTH.

THE number of deaths from yellow fever in New Orleans on the 13th was 88; new cases, 228. At Memphis there were 203 new cases and 98 deaths. The disease had assumed a mild form, and yielded more readily to treatment. Vicksburg reported 31 deaths; the weather was growing cool, and there was hope of an early abatement of the plague. At Holly Springs, Hickman, Brownsville, and other towns in the interior, there was little or no abatement of the epidemic.

THERE were 78 deaths from yellow fever in New Orleans on the 16th inst.; new cases, 166; total deaths in the city for the preceding seven days, 703, of which 682 were males, 71 females, 261 children under 10 years of age; of the deaths, 501 were from yellow fever; 472 were white and 29 colored. At Memphis there was no decrease of the epidemic, the deaths numbering 111, and the new cases 126; the disease was rapidly spreading in the suburbs and surrounding country. In Vicksburg there were eighty-five new cases and twenty-three deaths. The interior towns reported no abatement of the pestilence.

AN attempt was made at Tracy City, Tenn., last week, to assassinate United States Deputy Collector J. M. Davis, who has been the leader of all the revenue raids in Middle Tennessee during the past six years. He had been attending court in answer to a charge of having killed Joseph Haynes near that point last May while on a raid, and was walking to dinner, when some unknown party fired at him from cover, the ball passing into the thigh of James Spears, another revenue man at Davis' side, fatally wounding him.

DISPATCHES of the 19th from the plague-infected cities of the South indicate that the fever had reached its height. The deaths in New Orleans for the preceding twenty-four hours numbered 63, and the new cases about 100. At Memphis 91 deaths were reported, but there was a marked decrease in the number of new cases. In Vicksburg there was a decided falling off in the mortality roll as well as in the number of new cases, the former figuring at 12, the latter about 50. Several stores had been opened, and the city was gradually assuming a more business-like appearance. Reports from the interior fever-infected towns were quite encouraging, nearly all of them reporting signs of an abatement of the disease.

WASHINGTON.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 13th inst. says: "Secretary Sherman late this afternoon issued an order postponing execution of recent orders for exchange of silver dollars for the United States notes. The effect of this order is entirely to suspend the order of Sept. 7, providing for the exchange of United States notes for silver dollars, and to modify the order of Sept. 2, under which silver dollars were issued to any persons through the sub-treasuries in sums of $10,000 and its multiple in exchange for legal tenders. The reason assigned for this change of base is that the exchange of these dollars for legal tenders in anticipation of Jan. 1 may not be justified by law. Secretary Sherman has long maintained that the Resumption act could not be interpreted to authorize him to redeem in coin before Jan 1."

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 16th inst. says: "After the conference of Cabinet officers on the financial question here on last Friday, it appears that a dispatch was sent to President Hayes requesting him to return immediately, in order that there might be a full Cabinet meeting upon the financial situation and the Maine election. The President replied that he had not and should not change any of his views or acts on the resumption question; that he should hasten to complete his coin payments as speedily as possible, and that he could not change his plans to return to Washington for the purpose suggested."

THE Secretary of the Treasury has issued the seventy-first call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of '65. The call is for $5,000,000—$3,000,000 coupon and $2,000,000 registered—principal and interest to be paid at the sub-treasury on the 18th of December and after, and interest to cease on that day.

GENERAL.

NORTHERN OHIO, Western Pennsylvania, and the lower section of Canada were visited last week by a series of most destructive rain storms. Rain fell almost incessantly for three or four days. It descended in furious torrents accompanied by high winds. Railroad bridges were washed away, and in some instances houses were carried off by the raging torrents and their inmates drowned. Railroad travel was seriously impeded, and on many roads temporarily suspended. Toronto, Canada, reports that no such a visitation has been experienced in that vicinity since 1861. In Northern Ohio the damage to crops and manufacturing establishments is immense; the entire loss in Ohio alone, it is estimated, will exceed $3,000,000. In Western Pennsylvania the damage was equally serious, and in the vicinity of Meadville was attended by sad loss of life. A train on the Pittsburgh and Erie road ran into a floating culvert and went down, killing three persons. Six people were drowned by the sudden rising of the waters and the washing away of their homes, making the death-list nine in the vicinity of Meadville, while the property damage is placed at $100,000. The gale was also severe on the lakes, and a number of vessels were driven ashore.

THE September returns to the Department of Agriculture at Washington give the average condition of the corn crop at 92, against 95 in August. The returns indicate an average of 87 in the condition of the wheat crop, against 92 in September, 1877. The reduction is mostly due to disasters to the spring-wheat crop in the Northwest. A preliminary examination of the returns of the acreage indicate that the breadth sown in 1878 was about one-sixth greater than in 1877. This will more than compensate the loss from decline in condition, and may probably bring up the yield to the popular estimate of 400,000,000 bushels.... John Riley and a man unknown fought a duel with revolvers in the Catholic cemetery, at San Francisco. They began shooting at ten paces, and advanced, firing till they closed, when the unknown placed his pistol against Riley's body, inflicting a dangerous wound. Riley was taken to the city and received at the hospital for medical treatment. He refused to divulge the name of his antagonist or seconds in the affair.

THE fifty-fourth annual communication of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the United States was held last week in Baltimore. The official reports show an increase in the number of lodges since the last meeting, but, for the first time in five years, the membership and revenues of the order show a decline.

THE Canadian Parliamentary elections came off last week. A Toronto dispatch says the result "is the complete defeat of the Government, and is as great a surprise to the Conservatives as it is mortifying to the Ministerialists. Messrs. Cartwright, Jones and Coffin, Cabinet Ministers, have been defeated, while Sir John A. Macdonald, who will probably be called upon to form a new Government, has been defeated for Kingston, which constituency he has represented for the past thirty years. He will have no difficulty, however, in obtaining another seat."

PRESIDENT HAYES visited the Ohio State Fair, at Toledo, Sept. 19, and addressed an audience estimated at 70,000. The speech was confined entirely to business and financial topics.... Col. William M. Boone, President of the Mount Vernon Cotton Mills, of Baltimore, was robbed the other day of $27,850 in bonds and $37,000 in cash. No clew to the perpetrators of the robbery.

POLITICAL.

THE Louisiana Republican Convention was called to meet in New Orleans on the 16th inst. A quorum failing to put in an appearance, the delegates adjourned subject to call.

THE Democratic State Convention for Connecticut assembled at New Haven on the 17th inst., and nominated all the present State officers for re-election. F. D. Loomis, however, declined to be run again for Lieutenant Governor, and Charles Durant was substituted.... The Oregon Legislature has chosen J. H. Slater, a hard-money Democrat, as a successor of J. H. Mitchell in the United States Senate. Slater, it is said, "is not in sympathy with inflation; advocates the substitution of legal-tender for national-bank notes; opposes fiat money, and demands that the currency shall be on coin basis."

THE Democratic State Convention of Massachusetts was called to meet at Worcester on the 17th of September, and, by the evening of the 16th, the town was filled with delegates and lookers-on. The State Central Committee decided to issue tickets of admission to the convention, and exclude all from the hall who did not hold these pasteboards. This incensed the Butler men, who looked upon it as a trick to defeat their favorite, and, before daylight of the morning of the 17th, the friends of the Essex statesman took possession of the hall. The anti-Butlerites, finding themselves thus checkmated, appealed to the city authorities for help. The Mayor, however, declined to use force to clear the hall. The State Committee then held a council of war, and decided that the only recourse left them was to declare the time of holding the convention changed. In pursuance of this plan, Edward Avery, Chairman of the committee, went to the hall and made three or four attempts to announce that the convention was postponed to Wednesday, Sept. 25, and would be held in Faneuil Hall, Boston. He denounced the proceedings of the Butlerites as revolutionary and irregular. He then retired from the hall amid a scene of uproar rarely witnessed in a political body. Gen. B. F. Butler was then nominated by acclamation for Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

THE Massachusetts Republican Convention at Worcester, last week, nominated ex-Gov. Thomas Talbot for Governor, put Speaker Long up for Lieutenant Governor, and nominated all the remainder of the present State officers, with the exception of Attorney General Train, who, after long service, retires in favor of Hon. Geo. Marston, of New Bedford.

THE Nevada Republican Convention met at Eureka last week and nominated John H. Kinkaid for Governor and R. M. Daggett for Congress.... The Montana Democrats have nominated Martin Maginnis for re-election to Congress.... The Nationals of Louisiana, in session at New Orleans, nominated Gen. Beauregard for State Treasurer. He declining, Dr. J. S. Gardner, of Baton Rouge, was substituted.

FOREIGN

NEWS of the retrograde movement of the Austrian forces in Bosnia has produced a stunning effect at Vienna. The succession of vexatious reverses encountered by the splendid army which crossed the frontier a few weeks ago is as surprising to the outside world as it is depressing to the Austrian people. The whole people of the revolted province does not exceed 1,000,000, while the invading army is said to number more than 200,000 men.

THE Mussulmans of the surrounding country threaten to make a descent on Erzeroum and plunder the Christians when the Russian troops leave that city. The Armenian Archbishop of Erzeroum has telegraphed to the British and French Ambassadors at Constantinople, asking that steps be taken for the protection of the Christian population. ...There seems to be a hitch in the negotiations, initiated by Germany, for joint action of the powers to compel Turkey's acquiescence in the stipulations of the treaty of Berlin concerning the rectification of the Greek frontier. England opposes the movement, it appears, while Italy hesitates about lending it her aid, and Bismarck is said to have decided to defer further action until a more urgent crisis is reached.

GERMANY is said to be taking measures preparatory to the formation of an army of 100,000 men, for use in settling the frontier question which the Berlin congress so foolishly left unsettled.... A Berlin dispatch says that Emperor William is desirous of resuming the reins of Government next month.

THE Fenian prisoners, Condon and Melody, were discharged from Portland prison, in England, the other day, and immediately sailed for America.

THE cable reports that the Austrians have captured several important positions from the Bosnian insurgents, after the most stubborn resistance.... Bismarck is confined to his apartments with a bad case of nettle-rash.

A VIENNA dispatch reports that the Christians have risen in Turkish Croatia.... A dispatch from Berlin says it is reported that the relations between Count Andrassy and Prince Bismarck are less intimate in consequence of the bungling in Bosnia.... A special congregation of Cardinals at Rome has decided that the Pope should not leave the Vatican unless under special overruling circumstances.

Guillotined.

The two condemned murderers of Madame Gillet, Barre and Lebiez, were recently guillotined in Paris. Generally the time fixed for an execution, says an account of the affair, is kept a profound secret up to the last moment, not only to the condemned, but to the public, but, by some means, a rumor that an execution would take place on or about this day had been circulated, and a careful watch had been maintained on the prison by those interested in selling seats in the houses which command a view of the execution. Before daylight it was seen that the guillotine had arrived, and that workmen were putting it up. In an incredibly short time the news had been sent to cafes and restaurants on the boulevards and other places, and an immense crowd was soon gathered. Some of the spectators had engaged their places days before, on condition that they should be notified when to attend. Shortly before daylight the condemned were informed that their hour had come. The jailer, accompanied by the priest, entered their cells, and each of the men was left alone for five minutes with the priest. The executioner and assistant then appeared. The shirt-collars of the condemned were cut off and their hair rudely shortened, their arms pinioned, and they were hurried toward the door, in front of which the guillotine stood. These movements were all executed with such rapidity and precision that neither of the men had time to speak, scarcely to think. As the door sprung open and the men caught sight of the guillotine they recoiled. The great crowd gave forth hoarse murmurs. The executioner was marvelously rapid in his movement. In an instant Barre was thrust forward against the upright of the guillotine and strapped to it. The plank was thrown forward, the knife fell, and his head tumbled into the basket. The execution of Lebiez was equally quick, and all was over in less than three minutes.

Seventy Women Choosing Husbands.

It is not often that women of any race become so inmeshed in circumstances as to be obliged to choose their husbands. But an instance of the kind has recently occurred. A Turkish slave ship having been captured by the English off the coast of Egypt, ten masculine and seventy feminine slaves were released. The former enlisted in the Egyptian army, but the latter were difficult to dispose of. By the treaty between Great Britain and the Khedive the importation and exportation of slaves is forbidden, but their detention and sale is permitted for some years yet. Several officers of the army came to the Pasha of the district and offered to buy some of the women, but he declined to part with them at any less price than that of marriage. He then announced that the women might select any man they should fancy on a given day, and that the man selected, if he approved, should pay 100 piasters for his wife. A number of men, mostly soldiers, assembled at the time appointed. The ex-slaves were very shy at first, and huddled together without looking up. Finally, one of them glanced around, advanced to a dark Egyptian sergeant, laid her hand upon his shoulder, and he accepted his connubial doom. Then all the others chose quickly, as if they might lose their chance. Five of the men demurred, but in a short time the seventy women were all provided for—quite as well, perhaps, as if they had been married in our fashion.

Workers Underground.

It is not generally known to what extent we are indebted to worms for the productiveness of our gardens and fields. It has been found by a series of experiments carried out by a German naturalist that the tunnels made by worms into the earth are frequently of much service to plants whose roots occupy the channels that have thus been made. The mold of our gardens, and fields, too, is improved to an almost inconceivable extent by the burrowing of these humble insects. Each worm, in less than a week, passes its own weight in mold, and the soil thus produced is fine and light, and extremely helpful to the growth of plants. When it is remembered that there are in every acre some 34,000 worms, and that in addition to forming every day about thirty-seven pounds of fine mold they open up the subsoil and render it fertile, we shall gain some slight conception of our indebtedness to these apparently quite insignificant and generally unthought-of little workers.

The Fruit Crop.

Notwithstanding the late frost last spring, which so seriously damaged trees and fruit-buds, it now appears that there is a fair, not to say good, crop of apples. In Western New York there is more than a usual crop of good fruit, while equally favorable reports come from New England. In Iowa and Southern Illinois the crop in most sections is light, yet enough for home use. Prices there are now ranging from 25 to 50 cents a bushel. Missouri is sending a good many North already. The prospect is that we shall have plenty of apples at not exorbitant prices.—Chicago Times.

MRS. GEORGE DIXON went to Mr. Dameron, a Cincinnati dentist, to have an aching tooth pulled. He extracted the wrong tooth. She went away very angry, and on the following day, when he said "Good morning" to her in the street, she retorted, "You'd better say good morning to my tooth." At that he lost his temper and choked her, but she pulled out part of his beard and had him arrested.

YELLOW JACK.

Notes of the Plague in Memphis.

[From the Memphis Avalanche.]

Dr. Force of Hot Springs, wears a sponge over his nose and mouth when he goes into a sick-room. He will be sure to get it.

The people of the country are afraid to send in their wagons with chickens, etc., from a fear of having their wagons pressed to bury their dead, and that their chickens will be taken without pay. They will be paid for everything obtained from them.

There was a touching little scene on one of our streets yesterday. A kind-hearted lady was going to see a sick friend, when she heard her name called. Turning, she saw a slender girl, dressed in mourning, advancing toward her. As the child came nearer, the lady recognized in her the daughter of a neighbor who had died the day before, near the city. The little girl threw her arms about the lady, and, sobbing, cried: "You aren't afraid of me, are you?" "No, my dear," was the soothing reply. "Everybody else is," said the poor child. "They won't come near me because papa died of the fever, and we were with him—I and mamma." The little girl's heart was stung by the chilling repulsion which came to her in so deep a sorrow.

Negroes will not work, will not leave town; but lie about and draw rations, and then get sick and become a burden intolerable. The fields are white with cotton, but not a foot will they move. They give their sick no care, and seem to think they must be fed in idleness and nursed with the greatest care. Mr. Langstaff, President of the Howards, was in despair. "I can get no food for my nurses. Our men are falling every day, and, if we do not drive these lazy people out of town, not one of us will be left." And he expressed the awful truth, not overdrawn. The food remains and the fever feeds. The nurses, in two more days, cannot attend one-half the sick. They must die like sheep, and rot where they die, if something is not done that we cannot advise or see any way of accomplishing now.

A Trip Through the Plague's Dominion.

A prominent business man, who lately returned to Cincinnati from a trip to New Orleans, describes the situation in the South as sorrowful in the extreme.

On the trip down, at Arkansas City, the boat was not allowed to coal or land. Men stood on the banks with guns in hand, threatening to shoot if the attempt was made. At Memphis, which was reached as evening was approaching, a most depressing scene was presented. Not a dog, not a mule, not a negro could be seen. The houses did not seem to be inhabited; from no chimney could be seen smoke ascending, and every place seemed deserted. Vicksburg was almost as bad as Memphis. Terror reigned all along the Mississippi. If the boat had freight for any town, it was taken on to New Orleans, the inhabitants refusing to receive it. At New Orleans things looked much better. Men were at work on the levee, the business houses were open, but little or no business was transacted.

The return trip was made by rail. At Grenada not a white man was visible—only a few negroes.

At Holly Springs about 200 came aboard. Yellow fever had broken out the night before. The scenes at the depot were heartrending. Wives were leaving husbands, and mothers leaving sons, bidding them farewell perhaps forever. At one place a mother with three children got on the train. Her husband had died half an hour previous, and before his death he had made her promise to leave on the next train to save the lives of herself and their children. She left her husband uncoffined, unburied.

Interesting Medical Statements Regarding the Epidemic in New Orleans.

A medical correspondent at New Orleans says that the physicians of that city are all at sea regarding the nature and proper treatment of the peculiar variety of yellow fever now prevailing in that city. The correspondent writes:

The complication with malarial fever is a new form, and one that calls forth the utmost skill of the physician. The patient is first seized with malarial remittent fever, continues in that state for three or four days, then is visited by yellow fever, which, in turn, will run a course of from seventy-two to ninety hours, leaving him so weak that recovery is extremely doubtful. Again, the primary symptoms will be those of yellow fever, but no sooner has that malady run its course than a secondary fever of remittent type sets in, sometimes assuming the typhoid form. In the former cases congestion of the brain, black vomit, or coma, are apt to supervene with fatal effect; in the latter, the tendency is to run to congestion of the kidneys, or else a stage of exhaustion, in which the sufferer rapidly sinks.

The fatal days are considered to be third, fifth, seventh and ninth, the danger decreasing in geometric proportion. After the ninth day the patient is considered to be out of all danger, save that of a relapse, which is certain to follow even the slightest imprudence in diet or exercise, and is sure death.

The sallowness, from which this disease derives its name, does not this year appear in more than one case in five. Below is a table, compiled from the memoranda of two eminent physicians, showing the immediate causes of death in 100 fatal cases of yellow fever, together with the days on which death occurred. It will be noted that few deaths take place before the third or after the fifth day:

CAUSES.	DAYS.
	First.	Second.	Third.	Fourth.	Fifth.	Sixth.	Seventh.	Eighth.	Ninth.
Black vomit	.	7	30	12	*3	1	*3	..	*1
Congestion of brain	3	5	1	.	.
Congestion of kidneys	.	.	4	6	9	*1
Exhaustion	.	.	3	5	1
Convulsions	1	.	1	.	*1
Total	4	12	39	21	15	3	5	..	1

*Relapse.

The aggregate number of deaths from each cause is given below:

Black vomit	58	Exhaustion	7
Congestion of kidneys	22	Convulsions	2
Congestion of brain	10
Total			100

Of the above ten were relapsed cases.

It can be safely stated that not over one-half of the cases are reported. The Creole doctors will never declare a case to be yellow fever when the patient is a native. Many prominent physicians neglect to report. Not over seventy-five physicians, including those employed by the Howards, report their sick, while there are over 300 now with large clienteles in infected districts. Hence the opinion given by experts can be relied on, that there are nearly 7,000 cases now in the city, including convalescents, and that the average mortality does not exceed 8 per cent. in private practice. The mortality, however, varies greatly in the different localities. The cleaner the streets and the more fashionable the quarter the greater, apparently, is the virulence. This is a severe blow to the theory that filth breeds the disease or tends to propagate it. It is a fact—which, I believe, never has been commented upon—that Vera Cruz, Mexico, is as free from filth of any kind as it is possible for a city to be. She has superb drainage, is thoroughly paved, has an excellent scavenger force, and has not a swamp or damp spot of ground within fifty miles. Yet she is a hot-bed of yellow fever during nine months of the year. At the present time in this city the filthiest streets are either wholly free from taint or have only widely-scattered cases of a mild type.

The fever plays strange freaks. There are squares on St. Charles, Poytania, Camp, Carondelet and Magazine, all fashionable streets, that have, so far, entirely escaped, although every inmate is unacclimated, while the adjoining houses, residences of natives who have had the fever once already, are heavily visited. Negroes, natives and persons who have been through five or six epidemics, are not exempt this year, and all the old theories have been entirely subverted.

A City of Death.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The following letter from Holly Springs, which was received from Mr. J. C. Tucker, an old resident of this city, is of sad but peculiar interest:

The beautiful "City of Roses" has become a city of death. We have been here nearly three days; and you cannot imagine the condition of affairs in which we found everything upon our arrival. I shall have to wait until I see you before I can attempt to describe, and then I doubt very much if I shall be able to tell you one-half. I have seen much of death and suffering in the army, but this beats it all. All the stores closed; banks and postoffice ditto. When our force arrived it looked as if everybody was dead, save four or five. The telegraph operators had fled, and only two of the Howard Association were left, and they greeted us cordially. Out of 3,500 only some 500 or 600 remain, and they are either sick or attending to the sick. There are about 200 now sick, most of whom will probably die, for thus far every case has proved fatal. Not one who was taken down is considered safe and out of danger. If I had time I could write you of incidents appalling in the extreme. All is "Egyptian darkness, deathly, horrible."

"What of the night?" We cannot tell. It is all dark, dark. We cannot look beyond the present. We scarcely dare think that we shall look at all tomorrow.

By a sort of inner light, heaven-born, however, we read words that make the darkness less dark, that make the grave less dreaded, cheer the heart and give impulse to the hand. They are these: "The noblest place for man to die is where he dies for man."

The First Steel Bridge.

Definite arrangements have been concluded by Gen. D. D. Smith, the Chief Engineer of the Chicago and Alton railroad, for erecting the first all-steel bridge in America. Gen. Smith will be remembered by those of our readers engaged in iron and steel manufacture by his connection with the United States Government Board for testing the strength of iron and steel, experiments for which were carried on at Munhall's farm, within a few miles of the city, several years ago. Gen. Smith's studies have recently convinced him that steel bridges can be built cheaper than those of iron. He is further persuaded that there is no steel made in America equal to that made in Pittsburgh. The bridge will be erected over the Missouri river, on the line of the Chicago and Alton railroad. It will be of five spans of 350 feet each; the elevation over high-water mark will be not less than eighty feet, at which height the light steel rods of the "Howe truss" will look like cobwebs, but for all that the bridge will have a bearing strength reached by but few existing structures in the world. The total amount of steel will be about 1,500 tons, equivalent to almost double that quantity of iron. The great point in Gen. Smith's opinion is, that steel has a far greater uniformity of tensile strength than iron, running always above 90,000 pounds per square inch.—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

Children of the Commune.

On the suppression of the Commune of Paris, among the prisoners taken were 500 boys of ages averaging from 9 to 15. Of the many atrocities committed during the time the Communists held Paris, the most mischievous were those perpetrated by these lads. While the murders and incendiarisms were perpetrated by men during an attack of political fury, the assassinations committed by these boys were done solely out of a spirit of cruelty and mischief. The Government, not liking to treat these lads as political criminals, sent them to the reformatory at Rouen, and shortly afterward two eminent physicians were requested to visit them, and report on their mental and physical condition. They found out of the 500 youths, 337 were of very delicate physical form and stunted growth. They were among the most mischievous of the whole, and all children of drunken mothers.—Good Words.

THE two rooms occupied by Voltaire in his chateau, at Ferney, have been kept lovingly and reverently as he left them. His little sleeping apartment, with its truckle bed, and its walls hung round with portraits—among them Milton and Newton—is exactly the same as when he died there a century ago. Unchipped, too, by Cook's tourists' knives, is still the black sarcophagus in which his heart is interred.

Government Finances.

The Treasury Department has published a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government in the last twenty-two years. The net revenue and net ordinary expenditures compared are:

Year.	Net Revenue.	Net Ordinary Expenditures.
1856	$ 74,056,699	$ [illegible]

The largest source of revenue for the whole period has been customs, but for the years 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867 and 1868 the internal-revenue duties yielded the most. The income from these two sources, for the years 1856 to 1878, has been:

1857	63,875,905	....

1878	130,170,680	110,581,625

The net ordinary expenditures are arranged under seven heads, and of these the payment of interest on the public debt is the largest. For the year 1878, the interest on the public debt cost $20,000,000 more than the Indians, pensions, Navy Department and War Department all together.

Disinfecting Foul Places.

The Scientific News calls attention to the importance at this season of getting rid of all vile smells about dwellings, and makes this practical suggestion: "The article commonly used to disinfect foul places is chloride of lime, but in reality it is not of much value. It may, and generally does, remove bad smells, but the cause still remains, as the chloride simply destroys the gaseous emanations. The much-advertised disinfectants are usually catchpenny nostrums, and unworthy of notice. One of the very best known disinfectants is old-fashioned 'copperas,' or sulphate of iron, which can be had very cheap. A barrel of copperas would weigh probably 300 pounds, and can be purchased, at wholesale price, for 1½ cents per pound, and every family ought, especially in warm weather, to have a supply of it on hand. A couple of handfuls of copperas thrown into a bucket of water will soon dissolve, and it can then be used freely, and is a valuable disinfectant. The best plan is to fill a half barrel or keg with water and suspend within it a moderate-sized basket full of copperas. In this way it dissolves more rapidly than when thrown to the bottom of the wooden vessel, and thus a supply is always at hand ready for use."

A PARTY of serenaders halted on Boundary street, the other night, touched the light guitar, and struck up, with great feeling, "Come where my love lies dreaming," and then a great bush-headed wretch, 48 years old, with a beard like a thicket, leaned out of the window and said, in a loud, coarse, unfeeling manner, "Young gentlemen, you mistake; she isn't dreaming. Far from her be it to dream, or even sleep. She's sitting on the back porch, with her feet in a tub of cistern water, drinking iced lemonade and fighting musquitoes with a palm-leaf fan, and she isn't dressed for company. Sing something true." But ere long he ceased to speak, the summer night was still, the front yard was empty, and the voice of the harp no more awoke the night in melody.—Burdette.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

Open Letter from Peter Cooper to John Sherman.

My Dear Sir:—Since I had the honor of your call at my house, and [illegible] and the receipt of your reply, I have [illegible] you on that currency, and on the acts of government since that time.

I hope you will recollect how earnestly I endeavored to show you that the constitution has made it the first and most important duty of congress to take and hold the entire control of all that should ever have been allowed to circulate as the money, the medium and the measure of the nation.

In all that I have written [illegible] to make plain the fact that the establishment of justice, with the making of the currency and power here [illegible] the most important duties enjoined on congress by the constitution of the United States.

I believe I have shown that nearly all the financial laws that have been passed during and since our late war, have been passed under the advice and in the interest of a class of men who have been allowed to control the moneyed interests of our own and other countries.

The worst of these laws were passed in direct opposition to your own earnest and eloquent declarations made by you in 1869 in the senate of the United States. You there and then warned the country in the most emphatic language, showing that a national policy designed to contract the circulating medium would cause gold to appreciate in value, as it has since done, so that gold will now purchase double the amount of real estate that the same amount of gold would have purchased four years ago.

You were right when you declared "that every citizen of the United States had conformed his business to the legal tender clause of the law" for the regulation of the currency.

You were also right, in 1869, when you gave to congress that most timely warning against any attempt to shrink up and contract the volume of legal money which the government had been compelled to issue as the only means for the nation's salvation.

At that time you declared, in language never to be forgotten, that an act of government intended to contract the currency of the country, would paralyze all industries, as it has done. You made it plain that the purchasing power of gold would increase in the same proportion. The contraction has actually shrunk the value of real estate to a condition where it cannot be sold, or mortgages obtained on it for more than half the amount that the same property would have brought four years ago.

Those cruel financial acts of the government have cost the nation thousands of millions of dollars, and have brought wretchedness and ruin to the homes of millions of the American people, proving what you said in the senate in 1869 to be true. You then declared that such policy "would be an act of folly without example in ancient or modern times."

These quote from my last published appeal in behalf of those suffering millions whose lawful money and property have been, I repeat, wrongfully taken from them by a course of legislation in direct violation of the first and most important requirement of the constitution of our country. That constitution, as I have said, covers in a few words the whole of the nation's wants.

It must never be forgotten that there is no effect in nature without a cause equal to its production.

In view of this fact, I have found myself compelled by an inextinguishable desire to do all in my power to call and fix the attention of the American people on a cause that has actually brought upon a great nation all those dire calamities so admirably foretold by you in your speech made in the senate in 1869.

The American people have come to know that our country has been subjected to a cruel national financial policy,—a policy that has (as I have said) converted the people's money, that was actually found circulating as a national currency at the close of the war, without cost to either the government or the people, into a national debt.

Your speech in the senate was intended to show that a nation's currency could not be contracted without bringing ruin on the debtors and on the laboring classes throughout our country.

We may well ask what will the people do when they come to realize the fact that their money has not only been wrongfully taken from them as a circulating medium, but has been converted into a national debt, and that debt has been unjustly released from bearing any part of the burdens of the state or national taxation.

To show the ruin that the contraction policy would bring on the country, you declared in the senate "that every citizen of the United States had conformed his business to the legal tender clause of the law," regulating the currency of the country.

In my late appeal to all legislators and religious teachers, I have demonstrated a fact that cannot be disproved, viz: that all the legal money paid out by the government for labor and property during the war, was beyond all controversy the people's money. To establish justice, this money must be given back to them, in the purchase of all the outstanding interest-bearing bonds of the government.

By this plan a partial justice can be established and the general welfare of the nation can be surely and effectually promoted.

This plan will return to all the original holders of government bonds nearly double the amount in the same kind of legal money that was originally paid for the bonds at the time they were first issued.

The holders of these bonds should not complain, after having been so kindly treated by a government that has altered the laws four times on their urgent solicitation, and on a most ridiculous pretence, namely, that such alterations in the laws were necessary to strengthen the credit of a nation that had just conquered one of the greatest rebellions ever known.

All that is now, or ever has been needed to secure a continued prosperity, was and is a national currency, made permanently receivable for all forms of taxes, duties and debts, public and private.

It must be just such a money as Secretary Chase declared our greenbacks to be. He said a "greenback is simply the credit of the American people put in the form of money for circulation among the people whose whole property is represented in its use. When I was secretary of the treasury, the question arose how should the soldiers in the field and the sailors in ships be fed. * * * I found that the banks of the country had suspended specie payment. What was I to do? The banks wanted me to borrow their credit, or pay interest on their credit. They did not pay gold or propose to pay any themselves, but wanted me to buy their notes. I said: "No, gentlemen! I will take the credit of the people and cut it up into little bits of paper." This is the true idea of the greenback. It is the credit and the property of the American people made to serve the purpose of money. It was that money that saved the nation's life, when gold and silver had entirely failed to meet the wants of the nation.

Our paper money did all this, notwithstanding a part of its purchasing power had been repudiated by an act of government.

This money can be made an ever-strengthening bond of national union, by making the people's money so found, the permanent unfluctuating measure of all values, and never to be increased or diminished only with the increase of the inhabitants of our country.

Such a currency can be made as uniform in its purchasing power as the yard, the pound, or the bushel measure.

The constitution of our country has also declared that congress shall have power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States or any department of office thereof."

The Declaration of Independence expressly says that it was to "secure these rights that governments are instituted among men" and that "whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its power in such form as to them shall seem most likely effectually to promote their safety and happiness."

And further, that Declaration states that:

"All experience has shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than they are to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But, when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty to provide new guards for their future security."

"Such has been the patient sufferance" of the American people; they have long borne with a course of financial laws that were as cruel as they are unjust. By these laws there has been taken from the people the very money which the government had authorized and paid out in exchange for all the forms of labor and property used and consumed by the government in a four years' struggle for the national life.

This money was actually paid out to the people, as I have said, for "value received" by the government. It was clothed with all the legal attributes of money, and sanctioned as such by the supreme court of the United States. It had become the people's money for all intents and purposes as effectually as though it had all been paid to them in gold. The government had lost all control over this money so paid to the people, except to tax it as all other property, to meet the current expenses of the government. This money had been used f[illegible] by the government and the people as a [illegible] declared when a [illegible] United States had conformed his business to the legal tender law," regulating the currency of the country.

The people are compelled to remember the noble words that you [illegible]

"The appreciation of the currency is a far more distressing operation than senators suppose." * *

You then stated that

"It is not possible to take this voyage without the sorest distress to every person except a capitalist out of debt, or a salaried officer or annuitant. It is a period of loss, danger, lassitude of trade, fall of wages, suspension of enterprise, bankruptcy and disaster. To every railroad it is an addition of one-third to the burden of its debt, [illegible] all debtors whose debts become twice their (business) capital, though one-third less than their actual property. It means the fall of all agricultural productions, without any great reduction of taxes. What prudent man would dare to build a house, a railroad, a factory, or a barn, with the certain fact before him that the greenbacks he puts into his improvements will in two years be worth 35 per cent. more than his improvements is worth. * * * When that day comes, all enterprise will be suspended, every bank will have contracted its currency to the lowest limit, and the debtor compelled to meet in coin a debt contracted in currency; he will find the coin hoarded in the treasury, no adequate representation of coin in circulation, his property shrunk not only to the extent of the appreciation of the currency, but still more by the artificial scarcity made by the holders of gold. * * * To attempt this task by a surprise on our people, by arresting them in the midst of their lawful business, and applying a new standard of value to their property without any reduction to their debts, or giving them an opportunity to compound with their creditors, or to distribute their losses, would be an act of folly without an example of evil in modern times."

It would be literally impossible for you to have drawn a more perfect picture of the scenes of wretchedness and ruin that you so manfully opposed in the senate in 1869, a policy that you then declared "was an act of folly without example in ancient or modern times."

It seems unaccountable how you, with your views, as expressed, could have drawn the resumption act, and now use all the powers of your mighty mind to consummate a ruin that you so well described as an "act of folly without an example in ancient or modern times."

These frightful evils you then predicted in the senate are now being painfully verified by the many thousands of failures that are annually taking place as the result of the unjust and unconstitutional laws that have been passed. Laws promising to pay some four or five millions in gold which the government did not possess and could not command. The constitution has never given to congress any such unreasonable power. It has made it the duty of congress to "coin the money and regulate the value thereof," without saying whether money should be coined out of gold, silver, copper, nickle, or paper.

That this unconstitutional promise to pay money in gold which they could not command, has been further made an occasion for congress to listen to, and adopt, the advice of the men who control the moneyed power of our own and other countries. These men, have, by their arts, succeeded in obtaining from our government a course of financial legislation to advance their own interests as a class. They have doubled the expenses of the war by their in defeating a financial law in the senate that had passed the house of representatives after the most mature consideration.

DANGEROUS CLASS.

The banks and the moneyed interests of our own and other countries have prevailed on our government to so change the laws as to make the bonds that were at first made payable in national money to be paid in coin. They next got the law so altered as to make coin mean gold. They then succeeded in getting the gold bonds relieved from being taxed for any part of the burdens of the state or national government. It should be remembered that all bonds were originally issued to be payable in currency. This currency our government had deliberately depreciated by refusing to receive it for duties on imports, or interest on bonds.

And then our government allowed war taxes to continue until they had taken from the people the very money the government had stamped and paid out, as so many dollars of real value, made legal money to be used as a national currency to enable the people to exchange commodities, and furnish all the supplies that were needed in a four years' struggle for the nation's life.

When that life was saved, the people had become the rightful owners of both their currency and their country.

Our government had no constitutional right to invalidate contracts by lessening the volume of the national currency, after the same had been issued and allowed to circulate as legal money in the payment of debts for so many years.

Such money having been paid out by the government for "value received," cannot be lessened in volume without invalidating contracts. This our government has done by having drawn from the people their money, which represents all forms of labor and property which the people had given in exchange for the money they received.

Was it not a most absurd act of legislation to invite foreign capital, in the shape of gold to take up our good money at 40 and 60 cents on the dollar, and turn that money into a government bond at par, payable both principal and interest in gold? Was ever a nation more deliberately and cruelly put under a heavy yoke of bondage by its rulers?

All these unjust acts must be rescinded. The people will not submit to them when they come to know their nature and purpose.

It must be manifest to all, that commerce cannot be regulated with foreign nations, and among the several states without a national system of money as a standard, over which congress can exercise an entire control. This can never be done by the use of gold while congress allows local banks to expand and contract, appreciate and depreciate the money of the country in their own interests as a class.

THOMAS JEFFERSON WAS RIGHT

when he said that "BANK PAPER MUST BE SUPPRESSED, AND THE CIRCULATING MEDIUM MUST BE RESTORED TO THE NATION TO WHOM IT PROPERLY BELONGS." He wisely declared that "it is the only fund on which the government can rely for loans; it is the only resource which can never fail them, and it is an abundant one for every necessary purpose."

CONGRESS HAS NO EXCUSE.

I find it impossible to frame an apology for a congress that could make an unconstitutional promise to pay hundreds of millions in gold which they could not command, instead of promising to receive such money as the government was compelled to issue as "the only resources which can never fail them."

Money so issued and accepted by the people should have been considered, as it was, the most sacred treasure that our country had ever possessed. It should have been held as more especially precious after it had fed and clothed our armies, and had carried our country safely through a most terrible war, proving to the world that President Grant was right when declared the money so issued by the government was the "best currency our country had ever possessed," and that "there was no more in circulation than was needed for the dullest period of the year."

If our government had taken the advice of Franklin, Jefferson, Calhoun and Webster, in the enactment of financial laws, they would never have put our country in the power of the most dangerous community of banks that obtained power in any country. They would also have saved to our country the one-half of the cost of the late war, and the disgrace of being compelled to sell our nation's bonds at some fifty or sixty per cent. below the face value of the bonds.

Senator Beck, of Kentucky, in the senate of the United States, has drawn for the American people of the course of special legislation, that has taken from the people, as I have before stated, the people's money, and has converted the same into a national debt.

The following startling amounts have been wrung from the toiling masses of the American people, leaving the debt in the main as large as ever.

The senator says "the bondholders had, up to 1869, received $100,000,000 of profit before they got the principal of their bonds made payable in gold!"

It can be shown by the treasurer's report, from year to year, giving the amount of bonds sold each year, and the premium on gold from 1862 to 1869, that the purchase of the bonds with paper at its face value, and the purchase of the paper at the discounts gave a profit to the bondholders as follows:

AN ACCOUNT OF THE BONDHOLDERS' CLEAR PROFITS, arising from no investments at all, may therefore be stated in the following tabular form:

1862	$ 96,138,989
1863	94,865,713
1864	306,654,533
1865	110,159,867
1866	53,157,163
1867	167,916,741
1868	283,189,765
On acc't of 5 per cent bonds	98,297,864
Total	$1,012,880,304

This most remarkable statement was, as Senator Beck declared, "carefully and truthfully prepared." The proof is in the official records. "It will satisfy the country," said the senator, "and ought to satisfy the bondholders and their advocates that they ought not to insult a suffering people whose hard earnings have gone to enrich them, by any complaint or want of good faith to them in the effort we are making to save the country from bankruptcy."

As the present secretary of the treasury you have before you all the facts referred to in Spalding's and other histories of the public debt.

On June 30th, 1864, there were then outstanding, United States notes:

Greenbacks	$431,178,670 00
Postal fractional currency	22,894,877 29
Interest bearing legal tenders	164,471,877 00
Certificates of indebtedness	160,729,000 00
National Bank notes	31,235,000 00
Old State Bank circulation	130,000,000 00
	$944,166,[illegible] 18
Seven-thirty treasury notes, temporary deposits for which certificates were issued	$179,850,180 00
	$1,123,977,824 41

The record shows that there were outstanding in October, 1865, $830,000,000 of seven-thirty treasury notes, which, Assistant Secretary Spinner states, were engraved, stamped, and paid out to the soldiers as legal tender money, at the close of the war $830,000,000 00

Making $1,953,977,824 41

This amount of legal money was paid out by the government and accepted by the people as so many dollars of real value, and was thereby made the people's money, which, as I said before, President Grant said, "was the best currency that our country had ever possessed."

And that, "there was no more in circulation than was needed for the dullest season of the year."

Our government, in addition to all the other acts of class legislation, has taken from the American people their small currency that was costing them nothing, and has put in its place, unsolicited by the people, a more inconvenient silver currency, thereby creating a debt of some forty millions of dollars to be paid by the already overtaxed people of our country.

With regard to the demonetization of silver, every intelligent man must see, that inasmuch as silver now forms more than one-half of the coin money of the world, that the effect of demonetizing silver must not only lessen the volume of the world's money, but must appreciate the value of gold in proportion as the value of silver has been reduced.

The plan for demonetizing silver is said to have been first presented to the great bankers of Europe, assembled at the Paris exposition.

It required but little examination to show them that the demonetization of silver would appreciate the value of gold, and add hundreds of millions to their wealth, if they could only persuade the American government to join with them in the demonetization of silver.

Those bankers appointed a committee to visit our government for the accomplishment of their object, which as the Commercial Record states "The suggestion of the house committee made by the gentlemen from England in regard to the demonetization of silver, was incorporated into the house bill and passed."

NOTHING CAN BE MORE IMPORTANT

for us as a nation than to ascertain and remove a cause that is shrinking the values without shrinking debts in the same proportion. Our national policy, in trying to force specie payments on a debtor country, is now producing a similar condition of wretchedness to that which was brought on England, by their attempt to force specie payment on that country, after a suspension of more than twenty years. During all that time their paper money had not only carried their country through their wars with Napoleon, during more than twenty years of suspension of specie payment, but that same paper money had secured to England the greatest national prosperity ever known in that country.

This policy, according to Sir Archibald Alison, brought on England a greater scene of widespread bankruptcy and ruin than all the wars, pestilence and famines than had ever afflicted that country. Notwithstanding the warnings of such an example, Mr. McCulloch, in his address, made at the banquet given by the chamber of commerce in New York, spoke boastingly of his earnest efforts, both personally and in writing with members of congress in trying to persuade them to allow him to take out of circulation the people's money, which (in his address) he states "had all the legal attributes of money."

He stated that in the very year in which the war closed, the

REDUCTION OF THE DEBT WAS COMMENCED,

and this reduction has been steadily continued, to the amazement of foreign nations. He adds:

"In none of the treasury statements which I have seen, since the advent of the administration, has any mention been made of the reduction of the debt, previous to the present one. * * * A person looking at one of these statements would suppose that the reduction of the debt was commenced with Gen. Grant's administration, while in fact, the previous reduction had been reported of two hundred and fifty millions of dollars, according to the books and published statements of the treasury, while a larger sum than this was paid to the war and navy department, which did not yet appear on the books of the department."

Thus does Mr. McCulloch speak of having contracted and taken out of the currency of the country, during his administration, some five hundred millions of dollars, that had been paid out by the government and received by the people as money, possessing, he declared, "all the legal attributes of money." consisted in his regarding the money, actually authorized and paid out by the government for value received, as something to be got rid of as soon as possible.

SECRETARY MCCULLOCH'S GREAT MISTAKE

Mr. McCulloch stated at the banquet, that this legal money that was then serving the country so well, "gave him more anxiety than all the rest of national debt." It seemed that it cost him much writing and a great deal of personal effort to persuade senators and members of congress to allow him to take from the American people, by a continuation of war taxes, the very money that the people had received as dollars in payment for all the labor and property that had been consumed in the prosecution of the war.

I do not wonder that Mr. McCulloch found that "it required the strongest kind of personal and written arguments" to persuade senators and members of congress to allow him to take from the people their money, and convert the same into a national debt, after the same money had been allowed to circulate until (as I have said) it had bought and sold many times more in value than the whole property of the nation.

If crime is to be measured by the misery it produces, the act of taking from our people their money, and converting it into a national debt, must rank as one of the most unjust and cruel acts ever known to any civilized legislation. I do most when he says:

"The present is the acceptable time to undo the unwitting and blundering work of 1873, and to render our legislation on the subject of money conformable to the constitution of our country. * * We cannot, we dare not, avoid speedy action on the subject. Not only does reason, justice, and authority, unite in urging us to retrace our steps, but the organic law commands us to do so; and the presence of peril enjoins what the law commands."

The claims of a common humanity, with all that can move the manhood of the American citizen, demand of our government the return to the people of their currency.

WE MUST GET BACK OUR CURRENCY.

This can be done in a way that will restore prosperity to the paralyzed industries of our suffering country, and establish justice in obedience to that first and most imperious requirement of the constitution. It will only require an act of congress declaring that the people's money actually found in circulation at the close of the war, shall be returned, as I have said in the purchase of all the outstanding interest bearing bonds of the government.

Such a national policy will put the tools of trade again in the hands of the people, and will enable them to work out their salvation from the enslavement of an interest bearing debt, created by taking their own money wrongfully from them, and then by converting the same into national interest bearing bonds, that now hang like a millstone on the neck of the nation.

In the fervent desire of promoting the welfare of our common country, I subscribe myself,

Yours respectfully, PETER COOPER.

A New Departure in Education.

A complete revolution has been introduced this year in the primary departments of the Boston public schools by the substitution of oral exercises and object lessons by the teacher for books. There will be an exercise called "language," which means English, and which is intended to train the scholars to express in their own words what they really know. The spelling and grammar books are abolished (this is in the primary section) and correct reading takes the place of both. The spelling lesson is never so valuable as when it is a written drill, as spelling comes by the eye quite as much as correct grammatical speech is properly taught to young children by the ear alone. Much of the time heretofore given to geography and the constant exercises in boundaries and capitals is to be spent in natural philosophy and physiology. Instead of parsing there will be written exercises in composition, in letter-writing and the arrangement of words, which may be made of great interest to the class, if they are called on to criticise blackboard work. From May to November plants will be studied by the little folks, from November to May animals, trades, occupations, common phenomena, mythological and biographical stories, metals and minerals, by means of these teachers' talks.

FACTS FOR THE MILLION.

Republican Duplicity, as to Democratic Economy, Exposed by Representative Blackburn, of Kentucky.

What the Record Shows in Refutation of Senator Windom's Misrepresentations of the Expenses of the Government Under Republican and Democratic Rule.

The Immense Saving Effected by two Democratic Houses.

What it Might Have Been if Assisted by the Republican Senate.

The following is the result of an interview between a reporter of the Washington Post and Hon. Joseph C. S. Blackburn, of Kentucky, in review of the charges and misrepresentations alleged to have been made by Senator Windom, in the interest of the Republican party, and by which that gentleman has endeavored to break the force of the economy of Democratic rule, as established by the records of the Government.

Reporter—Have you read the so-called "Windom Interview," circulated by the Gorham-Hale committee?

Mr. Blackburn—Yes, carefully. It is of a piece with similar campaign misrepresentations with which the Republican Congressional Committee are trying to deceive the people.

Reporter—What action, if any, will the Congressional Democratic Committee take in reference to this and similar efforts of the Republicans to cry down the reputation of the Democratic party for economy?

Mr. Blackburn—Senator Windom is only following out a plan adopted by his party in its death-struggle to break the force of the savings actually effected by the Democratic House, and he, like his co-laborers, endeavors to mislead the uninitiated in various ways. For example, he refuses to take note of the actual decrease of expenditures under Democratic rule, and, whilst he cannot deny also the great reductions in the appropriations which the Democratic House has effected, he endeavors to explain it away by saying that these reductions were made "by denying appropriations indispensable to the public service; by postponing necessary public works; by repudiating national obligations; by withholding large sums for deficiency bills." All these charges are known to be entirely untrue, but it seems to be an understood thing all along the Republican line that something must be done to explain away Democratic economy.

Reporter—What is the comparative record of the Democratic and Republican parties as to economy in conducting the Government?

Mr. Blackburn—The official figures will verify what has become a matter of household knowledge, that the record of the Democratic party is one of economy, and the record of the Republican party is one of extravagance and corruption. Economy with the Democratic party is of no recent origin, and, as was to be expected, as soon as the Democracy obtained control of the House of Representatives, it forced upon the Republican administration and Senate reductions of great magnitude, both in appropriations and expenditures. Before discussing recent savings effected by the Democratic House, let us examine the actual expenditures from the commencement of our Government down to the last year when the Republican party had control of both houses of Congress. The net ordinary expenditures of the Government, exclusive of the public debt—principal, premiums and interest—and exclusive also of pensions—being only expenses for the army, navy, Indians and miscellaneous civil, from the fiscal year 1789 to the fiscal year ended 1876, can be easily found in the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury: For the war period from the fiscal year ended June 30, 1862, to the fiscal year ended June 30, 1866, both inclusive, more than one year after the close of the war, covering a period of five years, the net ordinary expenditures above named amounted to $3,530,929,581.64. Now, in order to make a comparison which even the Republican Chairman of a Senate committee cannot with all his acquired knowledge of figures successfully refute, we will eliminate this war period from our calculation. This being done, we find that, from the commencement of the Government to the beginning of the war, that is, from the fiscal year ended March 4, 1789, down to and including the fiscal year ended June 30, 1861, both inclusive, covering a period of more than seventy-three years, the net ordinary expenditures of the Government for the purposes above stated amounted to $1,506,726,151.15. Now, the net ordinary expenditures of the Government for the same purposes, for the last ten years of unbroken Republican rule, beginning with the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, more than one year after the war, and including the fiscal year ended June 30, 1876, amounted to $1,528,917,137.87, thus showing an excess of expenditures of $22,190,986.72 against the Republican party. Or, to state it plainly, the net ordinary expenditures of the Government, exclusive of the public debt, principal, premiums and interest, and exclusive also of pensions, for a period of ten years, beginning more than one year after the conclusion of the war, were more than $22,000,000 in excess of the expenditures of the Government for seventy-three years next antedating the accession of the Republican party to power.

Rep.—How do the ten years of Democratic rule before the war compare with ten years of Republican rule since the war?

Mr. B.—If we take the ten years of Democratic conservative rule, beginning with the fiscal year ended June 30, 1852, up to the fiscal year ended June 30, 1861, both inclusive, we find the net ordinary expenditures of the Government to have been $572,872,960.52 as against $1,528,917,137.87 for the same purposes for ten years of Radical rule during peace, namely, from the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, to the fiscal year ended June 30, 1876, both inclusive, giving an excess of Republican expenditures over the expenditures under Democratic conservative rule of $956,044,877.35, being an increase of net ordinary expenditures under Republican rule of about 170 per cent. The average net ordinary expenditures per annum for the ten years of Republican rule was $150,672,614.11, while the net ordinary expenditures for the ten years of Democratic rule above named were only $57,287,226.05, showing that the net ordinary expenditures under Republican rule during a decade of peace were nearly three times as large as for the decade of Democratic rule immediately preceding the war. If it shall be objected that there is at least one element of unfairness in this presentation of official data, upon the score of an increase of population, it is answered that, taking as a basis of this calculation the census of 1860, we find that the cost per capita for the ten years next previous to the war, for net ordinary expenditures, with which we alone are now dealing, was $18.26, whilst, taking the census of 1870 as the basis of the calculation, we find that the cost per capita for the ten years of Republican rule during a time of peace, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, was $39.65, being an excess against the Republican party of about 117 per cent., so that it seems difficult to find the ground upon which any Republican statesman may defend his party from the charge of excessive expenditures when considered either in bulk or upon the per-capita calculation, and we certainly feel that we deal fairly in selecting that decade of Democratic rule immediately preceding the war, and contrasting it with a like period of Republican rule beginning more than one year after the war had closed, and coming down to the last fiscal year in which the Republicans held control of both houses of Congress. For your use, if you desire it, I have hand you a tabulated statement, an examination of which will show the particular branches of the service in which these heavy discrepancies occur. Take, for instance, the expenditures in the matter of the regular army (it being remembered that the regular army was more than doubled after the conclusion of the war, for what purpose it is difficult to tell, unless it be for the accomplishment of political or party advantage, in aid of which it has been so busily and efficiently employed, until an American Congress, by solemn act, was forced at our last session to incorporate into the Army Appropriation bill a restriction that absolutely prohibited such use of that arm of the Government in future), and we find that the aggregate expenditures for this purpose during this time were over $588,000,000, as against $150,000,000 appropriated for the same purpose under the last years of Democratic administration next preceding the war; leaving a difference against the Republican party of more than $424,000,000. So in the navy we find that it cost $234,000,000 for the maintenance of the navy during these ten years of Republican rule, as against $123,000,000 during the said ten years of Democratic rule, showing a difference of $110,000,000 in this branch of the service against the Republican party. Take the Indian Bureau and we find that there was over $82,500,000 expended in this behalf, as against $32,500,000 expended for the same purpose under Democratic rule, leaving a balance of more than $50,000,000 in this regard charged to the Republican account. Take the expenditures for civil miscellaneous purposes, and we find that in this decade of Republican administration we have over $538,000,000, as against $247,000,000 expended during this Democratic decade, leaving a balance of nearly $291,000,000 to be accounted for by the Republican party as an excess of expenditures upon their part. The exact figures can be found in the table furnished you marked "A."

Increased cost per cent. of ten years of Radical rule, 167.69; average per annum of ten years of Radical rule, $152,891,718.78.

Average per annum of ten years of Democratic rule, $57,287,226.05.

Cost per capita of ten years of Radical rule, $39.63.

Cost per capita of ten years of Democratic rule, $18.26.

Rep.—Senator Windom said in his interview that the Republicans had gradually reduced the expenditures of the Government since the war. Is this true?

Mr. B.—I answer emphatically, no! For example, let us examine the expenditures of the Government, beginning with the fiscal year 1871, and ending with 1876, the last fiscal year a Republican Congress controlled the appropriations, embracing net ordinary expenditures only, and excluding the public debt, principal, interest and premiums, and excluding also pensions. Here they are:

For the fiscal year 1871	$123,139,932.00
For the fiscal year 1872	124,628,453.42
For the fiscal year 1873	151,129,210.04
For the fiscal year 1874	165,080,570.34
For the fiscal year 1875	142,073,632.05
For the fiscal year 1876	136,600,417.67

This shows the gradual increase for 1876, the last fiscal year the Republicans controlled both Houses, of $13,460,485.67, over the expenditures for 1871, and an increase of expenditures for 1874, as compared with 1871, of $41,940,638.34. These figures show a positive increase of appropriations for the expenditures of the Government under Radical rule as we recede from the war period, for which no justification can be plead. When we consider, too, that the purchasing power of the dollar has greatly augmented since 1871, these enormous increases of public expenditures appear still more inexcusable and criminal.

Rep.—How does this record of Republican extravagance contrast with the record made by the Democratic Houses of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses?

Mr. B.—If we take the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal years 1877 and 1878, being the years appropriated for by the Forty-fourth Congress, the first year since the war when the Democrats controlled the House of Representatives, we find a very heavy decrease of expenditures as compared with any two years since the Radicals came into power. The actual net ordinary expenditures, exclusive of the public debt, principal, premiums and interest, and exclusive also of pensions appropriated for by the Forty-third Congress and the Forty-fourth Congress, are as follows:

Republican Forty-third Congress.		Forty-fourth Congress, Democratic House.
1875	$142,073,632.05	1877	$116,246,211.01
1876	136,600,417.67	1878	107,055,370.68
Total	$278,674,049.72	Total	$223,301,581.69

Here, then, we have stated for each fiscal year the actual net ordinary expenditures for the years 1875 and 1876 under the appropriations made by a Republican Congress, against which we place the expenditures for the same purposes for the years 1877 and 1878, under the influence of a Democratic House, showing an actual saving of $55,372,468.03, made under the greatest difficulties placed in the way of retrenchment by a Republican Senate and a Republican administration.

Rep.—Were not the reductions in the eleven great Appropriation bills, exclusive of the Pension bill, passed by the Forty-fourth Congress under the same bills passed by the Forty-third Congress greater than the reduction of $55,000,000 on the expenditures secured by the Democratic House in the Forty-fourth Congress?

Mr. B.—Undoubtedly they were. The reductions in these bills secured by the House, after repeated struggles with the Republican Senate, foot up $61,983,615.63; but even this great saving would have been largely increased had not the Democratic House been thwarted at every step in the direction of retrenchment and reform by Republican Senate and Republican officials.

Rep.—How do the appropriations for the fiscal years 1874, 1875 and 1876, when the Republicans controlled both houses, compare with the appropriations for 1877, 1878 and 1879, when the Democrats had control of the House of Representatives?

Mr. B.—In the eleven great bills for the support of the Government, the appropriations for 1877, 1878 and 1879 show an attempted saving by the House of over $114,000,000, and an actual saving of more than $88,000,000, as compared with the similar bills passed by a Republican Congress for 1874, 1875 and 1876. The actual appropriations for these eleven bills, including pensions, is as follows:

1874	$181,587,064.51	1877	$145,997,656.72
1875	177,679,473.77	1878	140,584,606.95
1876	172,600,215.63	1879	157,313,913.77
Total	$531,866,753.91	Total	$443,596,407.44

This shows an actual reduction secured by the untiring efforts of the Democratic Houses in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses of $88,270,236.47. But, great as this reduction was for a period of three years, it does not represent all that was sought to be accomplished, for it should be borne in mind that the reductions above shown are not as great as were demanded by the Democratic House, but only represent the concessions that the House was able to secure from a protesting Republican Senate, whose Committee on Appropriations, continuously struggling for an increase of appropriations, and thwarting the House at every step in its honest efforts at reduction, was presided over then, as now, by the gentleman whose interview you have called attention to; so that if there be anything in this record of retrenchment for which that Senator may justly claim credit; it is his partially successful but persistent efforts to resist every attempt of a Democratic House to reduce the current expenses of the Government. It must be recollected also that the Democracy have not, as yet, secured control of both branches of Congress, and can hardly be made fairly responsible for such failure of reductions as the Senate may have refused to accede to. There can certainly be no injustice in incorporating just here a record of the reductions proposed by the Democratic houses of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses for the fiscal years 1877, 1878 and 1879, and coupling therewith a statement of additions insisted upon or secured by a Republican Senate. Examining in detail the history of the eleven great Appropriation bills, namely, for the military academy, fortifications, consular and diplomatic, navy, postoffice, Indians, army, legislative, executive and judicial, sundry civil, river and harbor, and pensions, we find the following:

For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1877.
Estimates of departments	$[illegible]
Appropriations as passed the House	[illegible]
Appropriations as increased by the Senate	[illegible]
Appropriations as reduced by the House	[illegible]
For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878:
Estimates of departments	[illegible]
Appropriations as passed the House	[illegible]
Appropriations as increased by the Senate	[illegible]
Appropriations as reduced by the House	[illegible]
For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1879:
Estimates of departments	$176,[illegible]
Appropriations as passed the House	147,[illegible]
Appropriations as increased by the Senate	161,[illegible].41
Appropriations as reduced by the House	157,[illegible] 77

It might here be remarked that in this year's appropriations is to be found an item of $5,500,000 for the payment of the fishery award, which is in no sense fairly embraced in the net ordinary expenditures of the Government, but which is, nevertheless, included in the above statement. Taking the aggregate for the three years 1877, 1878 and 1879, we find that the Democratic House, as it originally passed these bills, made the following reductions, namely: If the bills had become laws as they passed the House, there would have been a saving of $142,706,008.24 under the amounts estimated as necessary by the Republican Secretaries, while there would have been also a saving of $114,788,809.88 for the three fiscal years 1877, 1878 and 1879, under the three fiscal years 1874, 1875 and 1876. But this is not all, for while these unquestioned facts, from official sources, show attempted savings by the Democratic House of over one hundred and fourteen millions for a like period of Republican rule, it also shows that a Republican Senate added $51,188,018.85 to these eleven appropriation bills against the earnest protest of the Democratic House. Now, taking these same bills as they finally passed both houses for the years 1877, 1878 and 1879, we find the following reductions, namely: The saving secured by the Democratic House under the department estimates was $117,187,409.79, and under the appropriations for 1874, 1875 and 1876 it aggregated $88,270,297.47, as before stated, while the increase secured by the Republican Senate over the bills as passed the House, after a most desperate struggle, was $26,518,595.45, so that the very pertinent question remains for the distinguished Senator, the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to answer, how do his professions of economy tally with the stubborn figures, which prove him and his Republican associates on the floor of the Senate and of the House of Representatives to have labored earnestly to fasten more than $51,000,000 upon Democratic House bills, and who succeeded in increasing them over $26,000,000? In some of the statements here given to you I have dealt in round numbers, leaving off the fractions, but, should you desire it, you are at liberty to use the tabulated statements from which these estimates have been taken, and, in that connection, I may assure you that the sources of information from which these tables have been made are not to be questioned, as they are, so far as they relate to expenditures, taken from the official reports of the Treasury Department, and, so far as they relate to appropriations, are obtained from the records of the Appropriation Committee.

Rep.—What force is there then in the point the Republicans are trying to make against the Democracy upon the score of deficiency bills, which, it is charged, are larger in the present fiscal year than heretofore?

Mr. B.—No more than there is in any other of the campaign misrepresentations that are being manufactured by their Campaign Committee and sent broadcast throughout the country. The appropriations made by Congress constitute the law by which the several departments of the Government are to be conducted. No deficiency can occur so long as the law is observed. The appearance of a deficiency is generally proof conclusive that the officer charged with the administration of the department in which the same appears has passed out of and violated the law. It must be remembered that the execution of all laws during these years has been intrusted to Republican hands, and that it is Republican Secretaries and Republican officials that have manufactured the deficiencies that a Democratic House has been forced to confront. We believed at the time that these appropriations were made, and do still believe, that it is susceptible of proof that the appropriations as made, notwithstanding the heavy reductions, were more than sufficient, with proper administration of the several departments, to have provided for all the necessities of the Government. Now, however, we are charged with any laxity of administration that may, during the last eighteen years, have crept into and established itself in the management of the Government in the hands of the Republican party, and thus they seek to detract from the great savings secured by a Democratic House by charging against it the millions illegally expended by Republican Secretaries. But beyond this it is to be said that a very large proportion of the sums found necessary to be provided for by deficiency bills ante-date the advent of the Democratic party into power in the House, reaching back to the fiscal year 1876 and years prior thereto. For example, by way of illustrating the character of these debts for which appropriations were made in these deficiency bills, take the case of the late administration of the navy, which bequeathed to us as a legacy a debt of nearly $10,000,000, the greater portion, if not all, of which had been created outside of and without any warrant of law, no one denying that under the head of deficiencies for 1876 and prior years, and those growing out of misappropriation of funds in the Navy Department, of the whole amount of $5,550,000, about $1,500,000 of it was for deficiency of pay of the navy, produced by an illegal diversion of funds that had already been appropriated for that purpose, and the remainder, nearly $4,000,000, being for the liquidation of contracts made without any warrant of law, and many of them covered with suspicion at least, if not tainted by fraud, so that but little justice can be discovered in the effort of the Republican leaders to make us responsible for these sums of deficiency which their own officials unlawfully created and left to rest as an incubus upon some succeeding Congress. Indeed it was a matter of grave doubt in the minds of many whether this vast debt, created without semblance of law, and much of it the product of fraud, should have been discharged without searching investigation or judicial inquiry. But, to avoid the semblance of repudiation on the part of the Government, even of obligations entered into by faithless officials, it was deemed best to provide payment for such sums as might not be avoided, recognizing in this one of the many penalties imposed by Republican rule. Again, I might say, by way of illustration, you will find one item in the shape of an advanced appropriation on the next year of three hundred and odd thousand dollars, for subsistence to the army, which sum was inserted in a deficiency bill, and deducted from the Army bill, upon the suggestion of the Secretary of War. And so you might go through the lists. There is nothing in this point of substantial truth or force, and it is only made use of by the Republicans because the very title of the deficiency bill affords them a pretext for the confusion of facts. So that, view it as we will, no one can deny that during the last three years, with the control of the House in Democratic hands, the appropriations have been smaller, even as loaded down by Republican Senatorial liberality, than for any like period of time under complete Republican rule; and however much or little importance may be attached to the Democratic policy of economy, as evinced by the work of reducing appropriations, the country is yet confronted by the fact that on the score of actual expenditures there is no period of Republican domination that does not suffer grievously in comparison with the two years now last past, wherein the hand of the Democratic party, through its control of the House, has been firmly fastened upon the purse-strings of the country.

The desperate efforts of Republican leaders, like Senator Windom and Mr. Foster and others, to torture official figures into a cloak for their party's extravagance and corruption, whilst not to be justified is probably not to be wondered at. But the uncandid attempt of these gentlemen in taking the offensive, and thereby seeking to show before an intelligent people that the charge of extravagance belongs to us, will only suffice to illustrate the audacity of an effort made necessary by the desperation of their cause.

The "Republican" of last week contains a labored effort ostensibly appealing to REPUBLICAN-NATIONALS to stand by their old party, the real object being to give the candidates on the Democratic county ticket a sly dig. We do not deem such argument worthy of reply, but just for our own amusement we have repainted the picture drawn and touched it up in brighter colors. In the first place we give the Nationals credit wi h being just what they claim to be, a party separate and distinct from either of the old party organizations, with principles just as distinct, as they understand them. Then why question the motives of the Nationals individually? Because the Republican party thought the leaders of the Greenback party in this state in 1876, body, soul and breeches, is no proof that the National party of to-day is destined to a similar disgrace. The "Republican" recently took issue with us for advocating the support of PRINCIPLES rather than MEN, and now we find it humbly begging some of the NATIONALS to forsake principle and support the very party they were compelled to leave on account of its trenchery to the best interests of the people. Why should the "Republican" manifest so much anxiety about those it pleases to term REPUBLICAN-NATIONALS? Is it because the Republican party has "ascertained by a canvass of the county in which every name has been recorded" that several hundred votes will be required more than it now has, to even anticipate the election of a single candidate on that ticket. We can think of no other reason for such an acknowledgement of weakness. But to the picture. Can a National "who has been a soldier, or is a friend of the soldier," afford to vote for Moss simply because he has held a fat office four years and now wants it four years more, and because he is a gentleman, (though no more a gentleman than either of his opponents) and thereby defeat Darby who represents National principles, and Mays who faithfully served in the army of his country for four years, and represents principles much nearer the National idea than Moss? Can a National who loves his country afford to vote for Robbins because he is a Republican and advocates John Sherman's financial policy, as against Dr. Hoopingarner, the National candidate, or Walters, the Democratic candidate, who is a farmer and competent business man? Can a National afford to vote for Leas with no other recommendation than that of his detective ability, which might not be called into requisition in behalf of his constituents once during his term of office, as against Crooks, the National candidate, who will receive as many votes and come as near an election as Leas, and who has no blemishes upon his character and no political sores to heal ever, or, as against Work, the Democratic candidate, a popular citizen, a farmer, a man of large experience in business transactions and one who would make a live wide-awake and attentive sheriff? Will the Nationals vote for Andrews for Treasurer, another representative and endorser of radical misrule, in preference to Knott, the National candidate who has been chosen as one of the leaders of the new party, or Gonser, the Democratic candidate, who is a farmer by profession and who has proven himself worthy of the confidence of the people by the satisfactory manner in which he has discharged the duties of the office he now holds? The time is not far distant when we believe the Nationals will prove to the people of DeKalb county that they are honest in their pretentions, and are not 'cats-paws' for either of the old parties.

Tuesday, Oct. 8th, is to be a day of victory for the Democracy of Indiana.

The People at Waterloo!

Senator Voorhees Delivers an Appeal to the Masses.

Thousands of People, and Great Enthusiasm.

Last Thursday was the time appointed for Senator Voorhees to speak at Waterloo. Early during the forenoon of that day the people began to arrive from all directions and continued to come without intermission until one o'clock, by this time at least three thousand people, with five brass bands, had congregated to hear the great defender of the people in his convincing and logical argument.

The present condition of the country was discussed with remarkable clearness, showing beyond a doubt that the radical party is responsible for the embarrassed and impoverished condition of the country; that by the unwise contraction of the currency, by the retirement and cancellation of greenbacks, the passage of the resumption act and other unwise legislation the people have been reduced to want and pauperism.

Rounds of applause greeted the speaker throughout his entire speech, at the close of which the crowd gave three cheers for Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees and retired strong in the Democratic faith

Stoll's Reply to the "Record."

LIGONIER, IND., Sept. 13, 1878.

ED. BUTLER RECORD:—I do not expect to be able to correct ALL the misrepresentations likely to be made of me during the progress of the present campaign, but when the conductor of a public journal knowingly and maliciously perverts the utterances of a public speaker, common justice demands a correction.

I quote from your review of my Butler speech the following:

"For instance, Mr. Stoll said that in 1860 there was in circulation about 400 or 500 millions of gold. This is positively not so."

Yes, this is positively not so; and I go a little farther and declare the statement an unqualified falsehood—MADE BY YOU. What I DID say was this: The paper circulation of 1860 is uniformly stated at $207,000,000, and Republican stump speakers and journalists would have us believe that this $207,000,000 of paper money constituted the ENTIRE circulating medium of that period, conveniently and characteristically ignoring the existence of between two and three hundred millions of gold and silver, then in active circulation, swelling the entire circulating medium to between four and five hundred millions.

Your assertion that the "entire circulation" of the currency "was only $18,000,000," is so at variance with truth and the official records of the finance department, that I have no patience to waste even a minute in refuting such an absurd statement.

You say next:

"But what was the most astonishing part of Mr. Stoll's speech, was his reference to the resumption act. He read the act as it first passed Congress, and then, repeatedly, said that resumption would contract the currency, while every school boy and girl, who have reached the age of discretion, knows that the last congress passed an act to prohibit the retirement and destruction of treasury notes when presented for redemption, and instructs the Secretary of the Treasury to put each note which is presented for redemption again into circulation"

When I read the resumption act of 1875, it was for the purpose of showing that it contemplated the retirement and withdrawing from circulation of the greenbacks, calling especial attention to the similarity of the language of that section providing for the retirement of the fractional currency and the language of the section providing for the retirement of the greenbacks To clinch this argument I quoted from Secretary Bristow: Now, my dear sir, if a subsequent act of Congress, passed in obedience to the popular demand, commands that the things contemplated in a former act shall not be done, does that show a change of the ORIGINAL DESIGN? Do you suppose that if the people had not the good sense and wisdom to retire the Republican majority which passed the resumption act of 1875, that its edicts would have been annulled in 1878? Most assuredly not. If the men who passed the act of '75 could have had their way, they would assuredly never have consented to the act of 1878.—They knew what they were about when they voted to permanently retire the greenbacks from circulation.

Your remarks on this question lead me to infer that your position with reference to the resumption act is similar to that of the fellow who said he was in favor of the Maine prohibition law, but opposed to its enforcement. You oppose the repeal of the act for the destruction of the greenback circulation, but gleefully point to the fact that popular demand and democratic votes in Congress spoiled the mischievous game of the Republicans in 1875.

Very Resp'y.,
J. B. STOLL.

BUTLER, IND., Sept. 24, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER:—Considerable difference exists here between Democrats and Republicans as to the probable vote of Garrett at the county election. The change in political sentiment at that place from the State election in 1876 to the township election last spring, leads many to believe that the "politics" of said town are not very well defined. Will some one in Garrett give us the probable vote through the columns of the COURIER.

The Fight for National Banks.

The following circular letter has been sent from the Ohio Republican State Committee-rooms within the past few days to the Presidents of the National Banks in Ohio:

"COLUMBUS, OHIO, Sept. 17, 1878.

"DEAR SIR: The Republican party of Ohio is engaged in a contest for honest money and a maintainance of the public faith. The opposition is composed of ALL the enemies of a sound currency and good government. Ohio is the battle ground of an "Idea" that, if triumphant, will have a terrible effect upon our material interests. To make the fight successfully we must have more money, especially in the last ten days of the campaign. With the necessary funds we can organize a corps of workers that will certainly give us the state, and elect ten or eleven Congressmen, thus turning back the tide of inflation and consequent repudiation. Now you can assist us very much by sending us FIFTY OR ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS, and asking your wealthy friends to do the same. It is true it is a small matter to you and to them, but you will readily see that a number of such contributions will be of great assistance to us, as the main onslaught of the enemy will be made upon the National Banks. We need not call your attention to the danger that threatens this part of our financial system, or the importance of the impending blow. In a word, sir, we need pecuniary assistance, and, of course, you will understand, as well as the committee, that whatever is done for us should be done quickly, as it is expected to be of considerable assistance to us in the present struggle for the financial life and prosperity of our country. We, therefore, hope you will respond early and give a good sum to the relief of our cause. Yours Resp'y.

"J. S. ROBINSON, Chairman.

"To——, President——National Bank ——, Ohio."

The foregoing is a "verbatim" copy of a letter that has been sent to either the President or the Cashier of every National Bank in Ohio by the Chairman of the Republican Committee. "The Republican party," it says at the outset, "is engaged in a contest for honest money"—that is to say it has a struggle on hand for the money of the National Banks, and they must put up of their money to carry it on; or, going a step further, the "honest money" is that of the banks, while the dishonest money is the greenback with which the banks redeem their issues.

GARRETT, IND., Sept. 23 1878.

EDITOR COURIER, Dear Sir:—In reply to a letter in the COURIER of last week, written from Sparta, Ohio, by E. D. Bryant, in which he attempts to refute the charge of having obtained under false pretense two hundred and sixty-nine dollars and twenty-four cents, ($269.24,) of road money belonging to the town of Garrett, I would state, 1st, that E. D Bryant never was Treasurer of the town of Garrett—2nd he never was ordered to obtain said money or pay it out, by our town council. The council knew nothing of the transaction until Mr. Bryant informed them that he was entitled to the office of town Treasurer as the county Auditor had recognized him as such, and had paid the road money over to him belonging to the town and that he had paid it out again—then he was informed by one of the council that he had no right to do so, and that he would have an injunction served on him. We don't know what Mr. B. has been in the habit of voting and don't care. As to the Garrett Bank we don't know whether it had any depositors or not, and the whole bank personal property and all was only assessed at seven hundred and twenty-one dollars, so you can judge how much was left after the heavy depositors were paid, and how many "Pin Strickers" it was capable of buying and keeping. We are correctly informed that the republicans are busily engaged trying to defeat some of our Democratic county candidates by charging them of being temperate and not spending enough for drinks and then charging others of intemperance, using the two arguments as the case may require, trying to influence the saloon keepers with one argument and the temperance people with the other, but that is the principle feature of the party, to serve God and the devil to gain success. Democrats should be on their guard against such duplicity and stand by their ticket. Washington Teeters was defeated when a candidate for Trustee of Keyser township last spring with this same kind of two faced hypocrisy. The argument was held up to Democrats who live in Garrett, that if Teeters would be elected Trustee of Keyser township that he would build a large graded school building out by his farm, and take the school away from Garrett, and then to democrat farmers the argument was advanced that Teeters had pledged himself to the people of Garrett, that if he was elected he would have the township assume $3500 of the Garrett school house debt and establish a graded school in Garrett. Men who will willingly and knowingly lie in this style for the purpose of getting into office, are they to be trusted? has the republican party not been kept in power from the very highest to the lowest office on this same principle?

The following taken from the Detroit News seems to indicate that Auburn is to be on the line of the Grand Trunk Railroad: "The Grand Trunk will head for Chicago by leaving its own main line at Ridgeway, in this state, and using, first, its own purchased road, the old Air Line, which runs through Romeo and to a point within six miles of Rochester. Here a new road will have to be built to Jackson, a distance of 90 miles; from there it is proposed to use the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw road, which connects with the Baltimore & Ohio road at Auburn, and from that point the Chicago connection is afforded by the latter road. It will be a longer route than the Michigan Central or any of the great through lines by at least 20 miles, but has been adjudged good enough for the Grand Trunk."

Excursion to the Indaina State Fair.

The excursion to Indianapolis Tuesday next promises to be an immense affair. We hear a number of our citizens say that they are going. Everyone should go that can possibly do so, as the very low rates of fare, ($3.00 for round trip,) should be an inducement to all that wish to see the capitol of our state, and also take in the grand display that will be made at the State Fair. The State Board of Agriculture have made every preparation to make it a grand success, which it undoubtedly will be.

The archery tournament at the State Fair is an exhibition of a revival of one of the most primitive modes of warfare. Experience in the use of the bow and arrow was once a great accomplishment, and many a boy's heart has thumped livelier at reading the story of Tell shooting the apple off the head of his boy. Center shot at 100 yards, with bow and arrow, is no mean achievement. The archery clubs will meet at the Grand Hotel, Monday, evening, Sept. 30, for the purpose of arranging all rules for the tournament on the following day.

One day last week a young man supporting fine harness and kid gloves walked into an Auburn drug store, commenced a conversation in the course of which he revealed the fact that he was "fresh married," and that he had promised the old folks a bottle of wine, which he procured; before leaving a thought struck him a young man in his neighborhood had had his arm broken, and thought perhaps it would be a good idea for him to get some sweet oil for an application, so he bought ten cents worth and went his way rejoicing. Wine, Sweetoil, Perseverence.

Printing, as well as other branches of trade should be carried on in a business-like manner, therefore statements of all accounts for job work and advertising on the books of this office will be rendered quarterly on the 1st of January, April, July and October. In order to make prompt payments we must make prompt collections, and for this purpose quarterly statements will be submitted for settlement on or about the first day of next month. "Be ye also ready."

Another attraction has just been added to the long list of amusements at the State Fair. A grand balloon race by Helene A. Theirs, the most daring lady aeronaut in the world, in command of the mammoth balloon "Erken brecher," and Prof. Harry Gilbert in command of the monster balloon "America." The race will take on Tuesday, Oct. 1st at 3 o'clock P. M. Persons going on the excursion from this place will be there in time to see the grand sight.

Paul Jones, a prominent young man of Terre Haute, and law partner of Hon. D. W. Voorhees was accosted by two men on the street at 2 o'clock at night, secured and thrown down and his money demanded. He refused to deliver and tried to secure his revolver when he was shot through the breast, and robbed of $400 in money. The thieves made good their escape. Mr. Voorhees was immediately summoned to his bed-side.

How is this for hard times prices:—Coffee A Sugar 10c., extra C Sugar 9c., best Rio Coffee 20c., new Turkish Prunes 10c., Gilbert's Corn Starch 10c., Gilbert's Gloss Starch 10c., 5 eight cent bars of Soap for 25c., 4 ten cent bars of Soap for 20c., 4 ten cent boxes of Matches for 25c., and all other goods equally as cheap. At a meeting of the Auburn Neoteric Society held last Monday evening, the following officers were elected. President, D. S. Littlefield; Vice President, David Hampton; Secretary, George Lanning; Treasurer, John Leasure; Executive Committee, A. J. Little, Chas. Emanuel, Robert McClellan; Floor managers, John Leasure and David Hampton. The first meeting of the society will be on Thursday evening, Oct. 3d.

Caution.

We wish to caution users of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder against buying it in bulk. Unprincipled dealers are mixing flour, and other substances with it, and selling it as Dr. Price's. Buy it only in cans, and it will make lighter, sweeter and healthier biscuits, cakes, &c., than any other in the market.

The damnable villainous transactions of Geo. Hazzard are effecting the business interests of Auburn to a much greater extent than was anticipated. Every person is looked upon with suspicion, confidence and credit are things of the past, and financial ruin stands glaring in the face of a number of our wide awake, active business men. The citizens of Auburn have learnd a lesson long to be remembered.

Dr Gorrell of Maples, Allen county, recently volunteered his services to the yellow fever sufferers of Memphis, Tenn. After doing duty in the printers hospital about two weeks, he was attacked with the dread disease, and laid his life down bravely for those he had never seen. Such is true bravery and noble heroism. He leaves a wife and five small children in Maples upon the charities of the people.

Grand Class Rehersal.

The musical convention now in session at what is known as the Tamarack Church, three miles north of Auburn, under the direction of Prof. J. F. Kinsey, will give a public rehersal on the evening of October 3rd. This promises to be one of the best entertainments, as some of the best musical talent in the country are members of the convention, and as Mr. Kinsey stands in the first rank as a director, none should fail to attend this entertainment.

Mr. Henry Bashelier is now prepared to accommodate a few private boarders at very reasonable rates, at his residence, formerly the Auburn House. It has been re-fitted and every convenience will be furnished his guests. For further information call at the Auburn Fruit House 38-4w

NOTICE.

To the ladies of Auburn and surrounding country. 30 pieces of latest style prints, bleached muslins and cotton flannels just received at the New York Store, and will be sold at net cost. Wishing to close this large stock out within the next twenty days, we will offer goods cheaper than any other house in America. J. A. COTTMAN.

Auburn, Sept. 25, 1878.

Our enterprising blacksmith on south Main street, Mr. Daniel George, is having a good run of work and gives excellent satisfaction. He gives particular attention to horse shoeing and is regarded as one of the best in that line in the county. He does good work at reasonable rates.

Mr. H. H. Stamets having decided to continue in the millinery and fancy goods business in this place, will leave for the eastern markets next Monday for the purpose of purchasing a large and complete assortment of goods in that line for the fall trade.

IN DEATH.

It is with much sorrow that we mention the final passing away of an esteemed friend. Another light in the circle of our acquaintance has gone out, another intellectual rose as bright and fresh as morning, and full of the dews of heaven, has been forced by the frost of time to droop and break the stalk, the leaves to fall and be gathered in remembrance of Miss KATE E. HOOPER, [daughter of HON. A. Y. HOOPER, dec'd.] of Columbia City. Miss Hooper was the idol of the household, loved and admired by all who knew her, cherished and adored by him who had gained her heart only to hear the bitterness of sad bereavement.

We extend our heart-felt sympathies. "Heaven gives its favorites early death."

Our friend Mac., at Newville, went sailing down the St. Joe the other day in search a voters. Meeting a farmer with whom he was unacquainted, and finding he was not committed to either side, Mac. sailed into him by showing up the beauties of Republican legislation for several years past, refering to the general prostration of business, the low price of wheat, &c., as its most tangible results. "Now, join us, and we will keep this thing up," says Mac. "I have thirteen reasons for not voting with the Republican party," says the farmer, "the first of which is that I have not been long enough here to vote, and——" "That will do," said Mac.. "I don't want to know the rest," and in a few moments he glided around the bend of the river and disappeared in a cloud.

FRIAR PHILIP.

Poor friar Philip lost his wife,
The sunshine and comfort of his life;
He mourned her—not like modern men—
For ladies were worth having then.
The world was altered in his view,
All things put on a yellow hue;
Even ladies, once his chief delight,
Were now offensive to his sight;
In short, he pined and looked so ill,
The doctor hoped to make a bill.

At last, he made a vow to fly,
And hid himself from every eye;
Took up his lodgings in a wood,
To turn a hermit and grow good.
He had a son, now you must know,
About a twelvemonth old or so;
Him Philip took up in his arms,
To snatch him from all female charms,
Intending he should never know
There were such things as girls below,
But lead an honest hermit's life,
Lest he, likewise, might lose his wife.

The place he chose for his retreat
Was once a [illegible] country seat;
Far in a wild, romantic wood,
The hermit's little cottage stood,
Hid, by the trees, from human view—
The sun himself could scarce get through.
A little garden, tilled with care,
Supplied them with their daily fare;
Fresh water-cresses from the spring—
Turnips or greens, or some such thing—
Hermits don't care much what they eat,
And appetite can make it sweet!

'Twas here our little hermit grew—
His father taught him all he knew,
Adapting, like a cheerful sage,
His lessons to the pupil's age.
At five years old, he showed him flowers,
Taught him their various names and powers;
Taught him to blow upon a reed,
To say his prayers and get the creed.

At ten, he lectured him on herbs
(Better than learning nouns and verbs),
The names and qualities of trees,
Manners and customs of the bees;
Then talked of oysters full of pearls,
But not one word about the girls.
At fifteen years, he turned his eyes
To view the wonders of the skies;
Called all the stars by their right names,
As you would call on John or James;
And showed him all the signs above,
But not a whisper about love.

And now his sixteenth year was nigh,
And yet he had not learned to sigh;
Had sleep and appetite to spare;
He could not tell the name of care;
And all because he did not know
There were such things as girls below.
But now a tempest raged around—
The hermit's little nest was drowned—
Good-by, then, too, poor Philip's crop;
It did not leave a turnip top.
Poor Philip grieved, and his son, too—
They prayed—they knew not what to do;
If they were hermits, they must live,
And wolves have not much alms to give.

Now, in his native town, he knew
He had disciples—rich ones, too—
Who would not let him beg in vain,
But set the hermit up again.
But what to do with his young son—
Pray tell me what you would have done?
Take him to town he was afraid,
For what if he should see a maid!
In love, as sure as he had eyes,
Then any quantity of sighs!
Leave him at home? The wolves, the bears—
Poor Philip had a father's fears!

In short, he knew not what to do,
But thought, at last, he'd take him, too;
And so, with truly pious care,
He counts his beads in anxious prayer—
Intended as a sort of charm,
To keep his darling lad from harm;
That is, from pretty ladies' wiles,
Especially their eyes and smiles—
Then brushed his coat of silver gray,
And now you see them on their way.

It was a town, they all agree,
Where there was everything to see,
As paintings, statues, and so on—
All that men love to look upon.
Our little lad, you may suppose,
Had never seen so many shows;
He stands, with open mouth and eyes,
Like one just fallen from the skies;
Pointing at everything he sees—
"What's this? What's that? Oh, here, what's there?"
At last he spies a charming thing
That men call angel when they sing—
Young lady, when they speak in prose;
Sweet thing! as everybody knows.

Transported, ravished at the sight,
He feels a strange but sweet delight.
"What's this? What's this? Oh, heavens!" he cries,
"That looks so sweetly with its eyes—
Oh, shall I catch it? Is it tame?
What is it, father? What's its name?"
Poor Philip knew not what to say,
But tried to turn his eyes away;
He crossed himself and made a vow,
"'Tis as I feared, all's over now;
Then, prithee, have thy wits let loose?
It is a bird men call a goose."
"A goose! Oh, pretty, pretty thing!
And will it sing, too; will it sing?
Oh, come, come quickly, let us run;
That's a good father, catch me one!
We'll take it with us to our cell—
Indeed! indeed, I'll treat it well!"

TWO IMPORTANT PAPERS.

"I don't know what I shall dew with that are boy," said Farmer Long to his wife, as they sat by the fire that winter morning. "He's more harum-skarum than that State's reform-school boy was."

"Well, father, have patience with him for the sake of his folks. I think there's something in Jim that will surprise you, one of these days."

"I dunno whether he'll surprise me enny more'n he has er not. Last spring he made b'lieve he knowed all 'bout baling down sap, 'nd supprised me by burnin' the bottom uv the sap-pan eout, 'nd settin' the sap-house on fire. Last summer he broke more tools in hayin' time than all the rest uv us together. And, dear me! Yeou'd orter seen him dig pertaters last fall! I'll venture he cut every third one in tew—struck at 'em ez ef he was splittin' rock-maple logs. 'Nd neow he's broke my best three-tineu pitchfork, some way, a feedin' the cattel. He's only 16 y'r old. Ef he does this in the green tree, what in nater 'll he dew in the dry?"

After these remarks about the boy he had taken to keep until he was of age, the farmer started for the barn. He was bending over the great meal-chest, just inside the barn-door, as a tandem team was turning around the corner of the barn. This team consisted of a wild yearling steer, and the boy, Jim Fowler. The "team" was on the "dead" run. The youth had hold of the steer's tail with his left hand, and held aloft a milking-stool in his right.

Mr. Long was unaware of danger; and, when something struck him, and immediately he found himself on his back in the meal-chest, his first thought was of an earthquake or a tornado, or other dread outbreak of forces. He emerged from the chest just in time to see his lime-backed steer pass on into the stable, and Jim Fowler arise, half-stunned, from the floor.

"Yeou young scamp!" he thundered, "yeou'll murder somebody yit—er—er I shall, ef yeau don't stop yer dumbed work."

The boy did not laugh at the miller-like appearance of the man. His own face was quite as white as the farmer's as he said:

"I'm awful sorry, Mr. Long."

"I dunno whether yer be er not," replied the latter; "but I'll tell ye neow 'nd here, Jim Fowler, what's what, when yer father died yeou hadn't a relative left—"

"No, sir, they wan't none left," broke in the youth, and the tears filled his eyes.

"I promised him, a little afore he died, I'd take care on ye until yeou was old enough ter take care uv ye'self, 'nd dew well by ye—give ye a common-school eddicat on 'nd so on. 'Nd I mean ter dew it ef yer conduct don't become onbearable. But yeou must be more stiddy 'nd manlike, 'nd not plague me ter death by yer recklessness. D'ye hear?"

"Yis sur'n I'm goin' ter try, Mr. Long."

"That's the sorter talk. I want ye ter go ter school 'nd git ter be ez smart ez Jennie is, ef ye can. Yeou er tew years older'n she is, 'nd y'ain't nowhere side uv her."

"I know it. I ain't nowhere side uv her."

Jennie, the farmer's daughter, was a bright girl, and as pretty as a pink. Jim did not wonder that her father and mother were proud of her, nor that they felt there was a vast difference between him and her. He thought there was himself, and he believed she did, for one day of the last summer, when he stumbled on to her flower-bed, she spoke sharply at him and, if he had not misunderstood her, called him a "beggar."

He was careless and stupid. If she had said as much, he would have thought it justifiable under the circumstances. But for her to speak in that way—as if his misfortune was his fault—made him almost hate her. He did not answer back, but the look he gave her kept her from ever repeating that taunt, and also from forgetting that she had once made it.

Yet he continued to be the same careless "Jim" up to this winter morning. But when Mr. Long had administered his reproof and returned to the house to brush the meal from his clothes, the youth fell into a profound meditation, out of which he came with this ejaculation:

"I'll do it!"

When the next term of school began, there were two scholars from Farmer Long's.

Jennie and Jim.

They went together; but separated when they got there, for Jennie was in in a higher department than Jim could enter. This was the first term the latter had ever begun with a determination to learn. That he was so determined is proved by the answer he gave to his teacher on the first day of school, when she asked him, among other things, what he wanted to do; it was this: "I want ter git ter know ez much ez Jennie Long does."

How did he come out? Well, he went to school every term for three years. He studied evenings and all the time when not at work, during vacations. By incessant devotion to his books through those three years he was able to master all the text-books used in that institution. For the last two terms of his course, he was a member of Jennie's classes. He graduated when she did; and, in most of their joint studies, was marked several points above her.

How did Jim think he came out? Going home with Jennie that last day, after school had closed, he repeated the words Mr. Long had spoken three years before: "Y'ain't nowhere side uv her;" and thought they were truer now than ever.

Had the "want ter git ter know," with which he began, given place to a "want" less likely to be satisfied?

If Jennie had been aware that her own views concerning the result of their rivalry—if it was such—coincided with Jim's she probably would not have expressed herself as she did to her mother, that evening, when they two were alone. "I suppose," said she, "he thinks he has done a wonderful thing; but I don't. If I had studied and studied and studied as he has, I should have been far ahead of the great—great—giant. But of course I don't care a fig about it, mamma."

Whether Jennie's remarks indicated a happy frame of mind or not, might be a question. But without question she used a very happy word when she spoke of Jim as a giant, for he was a mighty youth. Jennie was really petite. She knew it; but it did not trouble her that those girls who were familiar with her called her "Little Jennie Long."

Jim knew that he was of great stature for his age; and was a little sensitive on that point. I don't think he fancied being called "Big Jim," and it may have been his aversion to that name that accounted for his blushing so deeply one morning of his last term, when he had taken his seat at the opening of the school. Some mischievous boys had written a stanza on the blackboard—which was on the wall that faced the seats—and written in such a large hand that every scholar could read it from where he sat. This is a copy of the lofty verse that the teacher hastened to erase, as soon as she discovered what the scholars were laughing at:

> But one dares write—what everyone knows—
> That several little fellows fret,
> Because a chance they never get
> To walk and talk with Jennie Long.
> Who hinders them? Big Jim—the strong.
> He comes with her, and with her goes;
> And thinks she wants him to, I 'spose.

When Jim's eye caught that, his face turned very red, as red as—Jennie's.

The youth that wrote that poem "dared" to write it; but he did not dare to make himself known.

Of course it was nothing but "boy's play," but Jim felt that he was near enough to being a man, to look at it from a man's stand-point. And, looking at it in that light, he thought it proper to tell Jennie that night when they went home that he was very sorry that some mean fellow had annoyed her in such a way; that he would find out the puppy who wrote the stuff and give him a sound thrashing.

But Jennie, to the surprise of Jim, could not see wherein she had been injured to an extent that demanded any such course as he proposed to take. And she dissuaded him from his sanguinary purpose. Not easily, however, but by arguments made in an earnest manner, and urged more and more strongly, until he was conquered.

Without meaning it, perhaps, Jennie said some things, before they reached her father's door, that were calculated to mislead Jim as to the place he occupied in her thoughts. It was nothing positively encouraging; but something that came nearer to being that than anything she had ever before said to him. Of course it must have been unintentional, for nothing in the line was repeated during their walks to and from school the remainder of the term. And when the term closed, as was said before, Jim felt that she was farther from him than ever. He saw, with the clearness of vision that is characteristic of young men in his state of mind, the hopelessness of any attempt to make himself her equal in any respect, and then acted as a youth in his circumstances usually does. He intended to remain with Mr. Long until he was of age, for he knew he could be of great service to the farmer in the two years that intervened between the present and that time. And he wished to repay the latter for his kindness to him.

For the first few months of those two years he was apparently quite self-possessed in his association with Jennie. But that is all that can be said to his credit. He broke down—utterly succumbed—before six months had passed, proposed, and—told Jennie he did not blame her for not caring for him, and hoped she would forgive him for offering such a poor creature as himself to one like her; that he could not help it; that he felt he must know what he was to her, and now he did know.

Jim had discovered Jennie the evening when he asked that question, sitting on the bench under the great maple back of the house. There she left him, and went into the house; and there for a long time he remained after she had gone, sitting in her place, with a sensation at his heart unlike anything he had ever before experienced. Not contented to let "well enough" alone, he had gone from the negative comfort of conjecture into the positive pain of certainty.

The next morning he entered upon his labors, with less encouragement than Jacob did upon his, after Laban's second promise. Less by as much as a refusal is less than a promise.

And Jennie? If her night's rest had been less sweet and refreshing than usual, she showed no signs of it. She appeared to be merrier than she had been for some time. Early in the day, when she and her mother were engaged in the labors of the household, she surprised the latter very much by a "season" of laughing—a season of very violent laughing.

"Jennie!" exclaimed Mrs. Long, at last, dropping into a chair, "What does ail you?"

"Why, mamma, it's the funniest thing—I've been proposed to."

"Proposed to? By whom?"

"By Jim."

"By our Jim, Jennie?"

"Our Jim, mamma."

"The foolish boy! Of course you told him, kindly, that you were both too young to think of marriage. Your father was 26 and I was 22 when we were married. What did you tell him, Jennie?"

"I told him—no!"

"That was right; only I hope you did not hurt his feelings any more than was necessary. I trust he will forget all about it soon—"

"What, mamma?"

"I mean, Jennie, that I hope he will see how foolish he has been, and forget all about you before he goes away."

"Oh, certainly—I hope he will—will forget—and—see how it is before then. He's poor, you know—very poor. I—I told him so. I wanted to—help—him for—forget, as you say, and so I said in case I married, in the course of twenty or twenty-five years, I should probably wed a very rich man; and then I shouldn't be any trouble to my—hus—husband; but that I shouldn't do for a poor man at all."

"Well, Jennie, I do sincerely wish that he may soon care as little for you as you do for him."

As the months passed away, Mrs. Long, watching Jim, concluded that he had not suffered much by the rejection he had received. The kind-hearted woman was glad to think it was so. Considering all things, the less attraction her daughter had for the young fellow the better.

Jennie also, hoping as we may suppose that Jim, for the sake of his peace of mind, would outgrow his affection for her, after a little while, decided that he had. She was very glad of it. And yet there was a tinge of melancholy in the discovery. She was glad for his sake, because he had suffered so; but it was—abstractly considered—a very solemn thought that so strong an attachment was so short-lived. Not that she would have had it last longer in this particular case—O, no; but there might come a time when she should want to know that the one who had so great a regard for her was to have it forever. But what was she to expect? Was Jim a fair sample of mankind in this respect?

If Farmer Long had been an observing man, during these days he would have seen coming into Jim's face something that could not have failed to remind him of the time when the youth's mother and Mrs. Long were girls, and the best-looking ones in the village. The father's strength had come into Jim's body and limbs, but he was getting his mother's face, by installments. These were to be his possessions when he was of age.

As his 21st year drew toward its close, he could not tell whether to be glad or sorry for it. His reason told him to go, and forget—he had not forgotten, you see—in the excitement of business somewhere, his disappointment. But that heart of his kept forever answering "Stay another year." He was in this state of mind the day before he was 21. After dinner that day he went and sat on the bench under the great maple. He went there that he might be alone to decide whether he would follow the dictates of his reason or give way to the longings of his heart. Reason at last carried the day. He arose from his seat, and said aloud, and decisively, "I shall go." It was settled. He had told the family all along that he should go away when he became of age. He was glad they knew it and had become reconciled to (perhaps wished) it. He was set upon looking straight ahead now, and determined not to look back.

And he did look straight ahead—Look? he stared, for just a second or two, and then went ahead, straight and fast. Up the slightly-ascending meadow Jennie was running toward the house; and, not far behind her, was the 4-year-old lime-back, pursuing. It was fortunate for Jennie Long then that Jim was near; and that he was "big" and strong and brave. Jim was bent on getting between Jennie and that mad brute, and he could not stop to find weapons. He rushed past her, and at that moment her strength gave way, and she fell. If Jim had made a mismove—but he did not. With great dexterity he seized the animal by the horns as it came up, and, putting forth all his strength, drew its head with such force and suddenness to one side as to throw it down. Then, springing to where Jennie had arisen, and stood unable to move from fright, he caught her in his arms and bore her to a place of safety over the wall.

When Jennie could speak, she turned to Jim and asked, "What if you had been killed?"

"Oh, there would have been a beggar less, that's all," said he, and walked away.

An hour later Jim, in a deep reverie, was sitting under the old maple. He heard the rustling of a dress, the sound of approaching feet, and then, Jennie's gentle call, "Jim!"

He arose and looked at her.

"Jim, do you—hate me?"

"No, worse than that—for me."

"Worse? Then you—don't—feel toward me as—as, you did once!"

"No, for I love you more."

"Truly, Jim?"

"Truly."

"Well, then you may read what I have written on this paper; but don't open it till I get a long way off."

She handed him the paper and turned and walked in the direction of the house. Jim was not long in opening that note and reading:

DEAR JIM:
Don't go away. JENNIE.

Nor did the writer of it get a "long way" off before he overtook her.

When Jim and Jennie entered the house together, a little later, Farmer Long looked at them sharply for a moment, and then, as if what he saw warranted him, he arose and also handed Jim a paper, saying as he did so:

"I sh'd like ter have yeou look this ere dockerment over'n see ef it is kerrect. I don't want no mistake 'bout it. The place that jines mine was fur sale 'n I've bot it. This ere's the deed on't."

And so it was. And that "dockerment" was made to run to James Fowler and his he'rs.

Give Them the Glory of It.

It is nearly twenty years since Father Newell, as he was called, happened to be in Charleston, S. C., during the pastoral vacation, and was invited to preach in the old Circular Church, then as venerable as St. Michael's. The committee had heard of him and his eccentricities, in which he rivaled Lorenzo Dow, and resolved to give him a hint on the Sabbath. They did so, saying that he must not forget that he was in the great city of Charleston and was to preach in a very fine church to a very refined audience.

There was an ominous smile as he said he would remember.

Service commenced, and hymn and prayer were not much out of the common, save with more power in them, and the Committee on Pulpit Supply began to breathe freely, and to use their fans and handkerchiefs.

It was time to preach and old Newell got up. He looked all around, and up at the gallery, crowded with quadroon and mulatto nurses and servants of the quality, and then he began.

"I am told I must be careful what I say to-day, for this is a refined church and a refined city, and I am to preach to a refined audience. I have been looking around for the refinement, and I see it. You refine anything when you take it in its coarse state, like black molasses or yellow sugar, and make it white and fine. You bring a ship-load of negroes to this city of Charleston, and every face is so black it would cast a shadow on the chimney back, and the hair is as kinky as a theological student's ideas. You keep them in Charleston a hundred years, and, to save my soul, I can't tell, half the time, the negro from the white man, nor the quadroon nurse from the child's mother, nor the yellow girl from the white, only she ain't so bilious. Yes, I own up to you. You are a powerful refined people, and I give you glory for doing it all, for the Lord had no hand in it. It is your refinement, for the Almighty never made a mulatto or a mule."

Then he preached to as humble a congregation as he ever had in the flatwoods of Elbert. But he was not asked again. —Hartford Post.

The First Artificial Precious Stones.

The first precious stone reproduced, not only in its appearance but its real nature, and in all its component parts, is the lapsis-lazuli, the sapphire of the ancients, not to be confounded with the sapphire of our modern jewelers. This untransparent stone, of a magnificent azure-blue color, was most highly prized by the ancient Hindoos, Assyrians, Persians, Jews, Egyptians, Greeks, etc.; and this irrefragably refutes the erroneous theory of some archæologists that the ancients were unable to distinguish the blue color. When pulverized, this stone furnishes the surpassingly beautiful ultramarine color with which the artists of the middle ages delighted to paint the mantle or gown of the Virgin Mary, although they had to pay the most extravagant prices for the pigment, which they always charged in the bills of those who had ordered a sacred picture from them. Some fifty or sixty years ago, Gmelin, the German chemist, discovered that this most beautiful of blue colors could be artificially produced by heating argillaceous earth with soda, sulphur and carbon; and, now that Guimet, the French chemist, has practically introduced this process, Europe manufactures annually about 160,000,-000 pounds of this pigment, most of which is produced in Germany.—Popular Science Monthly for September.

Around the North and South Poles.

The question whether it is possible that there can be at all times or at any time anything in the form of an open polar sea seems to be virtually settled, and in the most unsatisfactory manner imaginable. From the observations of Count Wilczek, in 1871, and Weyprecht and Payer, in the following year, and from those of Dr. Hayes, in 1861, and Capt. Nares, in 1875-'6, it is evident that the polar basin is neither open sea nor continuous ice, but a fatal compromise between the two; and there seems now to be only two plans—one nearly as hopeless as the other—to choose between in any future attempt to reach the North pole—either to establish permanent stations, as proposed by Lieut. Weyprecht, and already initiated at one point by Capt. Tyson and Capt. Howgate, and to seize the opportunity of running north in the early autumn from the station where the sea appears most open, or to run as far north as possible, at enormous expense, with a great force of men and abundance of provisions and kerosene oil, and push northward during the Arctic winter by a chain of communicating stations, with ice-built refuge huts. But little progress has been made during the past quarter of a century in the actual investigation of the conditions of the Antarctic regions. From information derived from all sources up to the present, it may be gathered that the unpenetrated area of 4,700,000 square miles surrounding the South pole is by no means a continuous continent, but consists much more probably partly of a series of continental islands, bridged between and combined and covered to a depth of about 1,400 feet by a continuous ice cap.

NATURAL HISTORY.

THE ASCENT OF SAP.

A theory as to the rapid ascent of sap in the tissues of plants has recently been brought forward by M. J. Boehm. It is based upon the elasticity of cells. He states that "when the surface cells of a plant have lost a portion of their water through evaporation they are somewhat compressed by the air-pressure. Like elastic bladders, however, they tend to resume their original form, which is only possible by their taking in air and water from without. Since moist membranes are little penetrable by air, the outer cells draw from the cells which are further in a portion of their liquid contents. These, in turn, borrow from their neighbors further down, which contain more water, and so on, either to the extreme root cells or to those parts of the stem which are supplied with water from below through root pressure."

FECUNDITY OF THE QUEEN BEE.

Baron Berlepsch, in several different experiments made to find out how many eggs are daily deposited by the queen bee, discovered that she laid 1,604 eggs in twenty-four hours, as the result of the first. In the second, she deposited on an average 1,913 daily for the space of twenty days. On the third one, an average of 2,400 daily was found for the same length of time. In the fourth, she deposited 3,021 in twenty-four hours. She was seen by him to deposit six eggs in one minute. A writer in the National Live Stock Journal states that a gentleman told him, at the Illinois State Fair, that he had known a queen to deposit an average of 3,800 eggs daily for several days. As to his own experience, he had known 1,500 eggs to be deposited within the short space of four hours.

THE "POISON-UPAS" TREE.

Among the numerous fictions regarding the animal and plant world that still go to form the staple of "popular science" compilations for the village library, that regarding the pestiferous exhalations from the "poison upas" is prominent. The erroneous and exaggerated statements respecting the upas tree (Antiaris toxicaria) are due to a Dutch surgeon, Dr. Foersch, who circulated them about the close of the last century. The tree was described as "growing in a desert tract, with no other plant near it for the distance of ten or twelve miles. Criminals condemned to die were offered the chance of life if they would go to the upas tree and collect some of the poison. They were furnished with proper directions, and armed with due precaution, but not two out of every twenty ever returned." Dr. Foersch states that he obtained his information from some of the survivors who had been lucky enough to escape, although the ground was strewn with the skeletons of their predecessors; and such was the virulence of the poison that there are no fish in the waters, nor has any rat, mouse or other vermin been seen there; and when any birds fly near the tree, so that the effluvia reach them, they fall dead, a sacrifice to the poison." These statements, having been quoted by Dr. Darwin in his "Botanic Garden," were thence disseminated through Europe. The upas is a tree often attaining a height of over 100 feet, and found native in the islands of the Indian Archipelago. The stamens and pistils are found on separate flowers on the same tree, or, botanically speaking, the plant is monœcious. The tree belongs to the natural family Artocarpaceæ, the plants of which almost all abound in juices that are deleterious to a high degree; although it includes many that are extremely useful to man in many ways; among these, for instance, the famous cow tree, which yields a rich and wholesome milk; the Ficus Indica, which produces gum shellac; Ficus Carica, producing figs; Morus, or mulberry tree, etc. The upas tree, when pierced, exudes a milky juice which contains an acrid, virulent poison, called antiarin. This, when dried, forms a poison in which the natives dip their arrows. As specimens of the tree have long been cultivated in botanic gardens, the reports regarding its venomous exhalations are known to be as erroneous as those will be some day that at present ascribe to Eucalyptus the power of emitting febrifuge exhalations. The mistaken notion that long connected this noxious property with the upas arose from the fact that the tree occasionally grows in certain low valleys in Java, rendered unwholesome by an escape of carbonic-acid gas from crevices in the ground, and emitted in such a quantity as to be fatal to animals that approach too closely. These poisonous valleys are connected with the numerous volcanoes of the island. According to Reinwardt, sulphurous vapors are given off in such abundance from the craters of some of these volcanoes as to cause the death of a great number of tigers, birds and insects, while, in some cases, the rivers and lakes are so charged with sulphuric acid that no fish can exist in them. The upas tree, therefore, although there is no doubt as to its inherent poisonous nature, has had to bear the reproach really due to volcanoes and their products.

THE POOR INDIAN.

Lo, the poor Indian, whose untutored mind
Sees God in clouds or hears him in the wind;
His soul, proud science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk or Milky Way;
Therefore, a scientific aborigine
Is something which we never hope to see,
[illegible]
And report the same to Mr. Barnum's show,
Which will prove a bigger attraction than
[illegible]
Or the Cardiff giant [illegible],
[illegible]
Sticking out of his mouth and ears.

Yet simple nature to his hope has given,
Behind the cloud-topt hill, a humbler heaven—
Some safer world in depth of woods embraced,
Some happier island in the watery waste,
As if a safer world than this could be,
Where Government is kind, and Howards flee
From the shadow of an Indian
As if the very Old Scratch was after them
With a [illegible] pitchfork;
And, reaching a telegraph station,
Immediately send word to the Associated Press
That they have caught up with the red demons
And killed seven hundred and fifty Sioux,
Eleven hundred and seventy-five Comanches,
Four thousand Piutes, and untold numbers
Of Crows, Cherokees and Black Feet, among
The slain being Sitting Bull, Hole-in-the-Day,
Spotted Tail, Old Stick-in-the-Mud,
And all of their braves and papooses.

To be content's his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, no seraph's fire,
But fire-water is his heart's delight,
Whether it comes in the form of Bourbon,
Robinson county, forty rod, alcohol, aquafortis,
Or nitro-glycerine with a stick in it.

HARTFORD Times: A little 5-year-old boy, residing with his parents in the Cheney block, was asked by a lady a few days since for a kiss. "Well, yes," the young man said, "rather urgent, I think. Just as I started away from home my youngest brother was falling out of a second-story window."

Torpedoes.

There is a generally received but erroneous notion that the torpedo is a modern invention, and that during the recent hostilities in the East it was for the first time employed in actual warfare. As long ago as the 15th of August, 1777, a boat was blown to pieces and nearly all its crew killed by the accidental explosion of a torpedo which had been used in an attempt made by the Americans against the English man-of-war Cerberus. In 1805 a brig, which had been anchored off Deal, England, for the purpose of experiments in submarine explosions, was destroyed in the presence of Mr. Pitt and a large concourse of spectators by a torpedo containing 170 pounds of powder. Previously, in 1797, a machine had been designed by which, to use the inventor's own words, he proposed "to impart to carcasses of gunpowder a progressive motion under water to a given point and there explode them," and which, therefore, contained the germ of the present fish torpedo.

THE GREAT PLAGUE IN LONDON.

How the Metropolis Was Ravaged by the Plague.

The authorities agree that the first heard of the Great Plague was in Holland in September, 1664, whither it had been imported from Turkey. About the beginning of December of the same year, two Frenchmen, living in Drury Lane parish, died of the disease. Investigations that were afterward set on foot showed that it had been brought over from Holland in a vessel. Some of the goods had been stowed away in this quarter of the city, and the first two victims lived in the house where the goods were held. The astrologers, at the head of whom was the remarkable William Lilly, had been predicting pestilence, and the approach of other troubles. A comet had appeared, pale in color and shadowy in outline. This had been interpreted by the almanac-makers as a direful portent, and Lilly had foretold that when the Plague attacked the city there would be "neither buriers for the dead, nor sound to care for the sick." Though the times were superstitious, the gloomy prognostications of these seers did not at first alarm the people.

The population of London at that time was about 200,000. Let this be borne in mind, as the events of that memorable summer of 1665 are recalled. The deaths from the disease, as well as from other causes, continued to increase. When the mortality in St. Giles parish and in Drury Lane had increased from 16 or 17 to 23 and 25, and the weekly bills of the city from 291 on the 27th of December to 474 on the 24th of January, then, indeed, the attention of the city was arrested. The symptoms of the disease were a dull headache, restlessness, chills, and vertigo, eyes red and muddy, tongue coated, and skin hot and dry. But the immediate and visible tokens of the presence of the plague were gangrenous spots or mortified flesh, in small knobs, "as broad," in the words of De Foe, "as a little silver penny, and hard as a piece of callous or bone."

After the middle of January the disease began to abate. The weekly mortality bills ran lower, and hopes were entertained that the city had passed through the worst of the visitation. The weather in May, 1665, was fine and beautiful. No rain fell for many days. Then the plague gathered new and terrible strength. The deaths, in St. Giles, ran up from 20 to 53 a week, and portions of the city that had before escaped began to be invaded. Then ensued the first panic. Thousands left the city. So great was the demand for means of conveyance that De Foe relates that men who tried to find a horse could obtain none.

By this time the city officials had become thoroughly alarmed. Ordinances were passed forbidding games, plays, bear-baitings, singing of ballads and tippling houses. In May, too, on a certain night, thousands of bonfires were started all through the city, on a preconcerted signal. A well-known enthusiast, Solomon Eagle, denounced the effort in the name of the Lord, and declared that, though the rains had been withheld for weeks, they would fall to the confusion of the wicked city that was trying to escape the judgment of Jehovah. Sure enough, copious showers did fall, and the pestilence gained new strength thereafter. Then it was resolved that infected houses should be closed for a month, with all those living in them. This order was odious to many, and to avoid it they kept from the officers the knowledge that their houses were affected. But watchmen went about, and those who evaded the law were subjected to a heavy fine. Over the doors of infected houses were written in red ink the words, "The Lord have mercy upon us," and a watchman was stationed at the door to prevent all ingress and egress, except the doctor and nurse. Once a mob, enraged at the closing of the houses, ran about the streets knocking open the doors and letting out the sufferers to spread the pestilence anew.

The death-rate grew. In the week ending July 18 the deaths numbered 1,761. The sweating treatment was the one generally resorted to, but only four or five out of a hundred attacks were saved. August came, and the mortality was greater than ever. It grew to be impossible to bury all the dead. A pit was dug forty feet long, fifteen or sixteen broad, and twenty feet deep. Into this the bodies were tumbled, rich and poor together, and often in such haste that not even a handful of earth was thrown upon the remains. The little child and the old man lay in the charnel-house side by side. Instances were known where friends, wild with grief at the loss of loved ones, threw themselves into the pit, and were buried by the side of those who had already passed away. Over 1,100 bodies were covered up in the first pit, and then a second—a larger one—was dug. Mad persons went about the streets infecting those whom they met. A young man kissed a girl whom he saw, and then, tearing open his clothes, showed the fatal spot.

The air became more and more tainted. Even provisions were infected. Instead of taking meat from the hands of the butcher, people would take it from the hooks. Men no longer touched the dead. When persons were to be buried the bodies were grappled with hooks at the end of long poles and tumbled into the general pit or a shallow grave. All business was stopped. The dust settled thick on the windows of the great mercantile houses. No living thing was to be seen on many streets save those who were collecting the dead in common carts. "Bring forth your dead," was the cry that filled the air as the undertaker, Chowles, and his assistants engaged in their work. Thieves, even, did not dare to go into the open houses for fear of the infection. Even the dogs and cats, "ten thousand of the former and five times as many of the latter," were killed in pursuance of a city decree. The river's waters became polluted, and dead bodies floated on its surface. For about nine weeks together the deaths numbered nearly a thousand a day. De Foe, in his graphic picture, says: "As the desolation was greater during those terrible times, so the amazement of the people increased, and many unaccountable things they would do in the violence of their fright, as others did in the agonies of their distemper, and this part was very affecting. Some went roaring and crying, and wringing their hands, along the streets. Some would go praying and lifting their hands to heaven, calling upon God for mercy." Many tried to escape from the city, only to be driven back by those outside the town who feared the danger of contagion.

There is one well-authenticated case where a man sick with the plague escaped from his keepers, and, running to the river, jumped in. He swam across, and there landing, and being pursued by citizens on the other side, jumped again into the Thames and swam back. When he was through with this hydropathic treatment he was free from the plague, "the cold of the water having abated the fever of the blood."

We are outrunning the due limits of an article. There is only room to put down the record of deaths in September, the most fatal month of all:

August 22-29	7,496
August 29—September 5	8,252
September 5-12	7,690
September 12-19	8,297
September 19-26	6,460

A physician of the time said in a book he published in Latin that, one night in September, in the week ending the 18th, there were 4,000 deaths. The total number of deaths from August 8 to October 10 was 59,918, of whom 49,605 died of the plague alone. De Foe estimates that there were 100,000 persons who died in that great epidemic. By December the disease had abated, the total deaths that month being less than 1,000. The next year came the great fire.

Uncle Remus eyed Charley curiously a moment, while the latter looked quietly at his timber toe. Finally the old man sighed and spoke:

"How long is you bin in de chu'ch, son?"

"Mighty near a week," replied Charley.

"Well, lemme tell you dis, now, fo' you go enny fudder. You ain't bin in dar long nuff fer to go 'roun' takin' up conterbutions. Wait outwell you gits sorter seasoned like, an' den I'll hunt 'roun' in my close an' see ef I can't run out a thrip er two fer you. But don't you levy taxes too early."

Simple Lessons in Science.

Force is that which sets a body in motion, as, for instance, the police force, which makes a body move on.

There would be no heaviness in the world if it were not for gravity. Corollary: Never forget to have your Fun.

A liquid violently resists all attempts to force it into close confinement, spreading itself out so as to make its surface level, and many liquids communicate these little peculiarities of theirs to those who imbibe them.

When anything is weighed in water it suffers a loss of weight. This is especially true in the case of salt.

A pound avoirdupois is exactly equal to 7,000 grains. Take a pound of sand and count.

When bodies become heated, movement a little backwards and forwards takes place, as you must have seen for yourself in the case of a street fight.

Heat causes a copper rod to be extended, and it has the same effect on a policeman's staff.

It is erroneous to suppose that the barometer is used as a yard measure in ascertaining the height of a mountain, or that the Branch Press has anything to do with the car of Juggernaut.

Most physicians teach that noise is the result of a single blow given to the ear; music, of a series of blows. In our experience, however, we have observed that noise was the result in both cases; in the latter more unmusical, even, than in the former. Experimentum fiat in corpore vili. Box a small boy's ears, first singly, and afterward repeatedly, and you will soon see, or rather hear.

Attraction and affinity are synonymous in chemistry, but in life we often find that the greater the affinity the less the attraction.

Some precious stones are called cats' eyes; diamonds, surely, might be called cats' claws, since they scratch everybody.

Electricians neatly divide all bodies into conductors and non-conductors, but in the world there are bodies who, although they never mounted the monkey-board of an omnibus, nevertheless are cads.—London Fun.

SUCCESSFUL fishing cost John Scull, editor of the Somerset (Pa.) Herald, his life. After securing a string of some thirty pounds of fish, he tied them to his wrist and waded in the river with them. Falling into a deep hole, the weight of the fish drew him under water, and, although an expert swimmer, he was drowned.

A LADY said of her nose: "I had nothing to do in shaping it. It was a birthday present."

BUSINESS NOTES.

THE hay crop of this season is worth $250,000,000 to the farmers at home.

THE agricultural fairs throughout the West have this year been somewhat more numerous than usual, and have been more successful than ever, both in the quantity and quality of the products exhibited and in the number of people in attendance.

THE forthcoming International Dairy Fair is not only to be an exhibition of dairy products, but is to embrace a full show of the finest breeds of dairy cattle. Gilmore's garden, in New York, would be an excellent place for holding the fair.

THE earnings of twenty of the principal Western railroads for the month of August, amount to $5,849,645 as against $5,701,347 for the same month last year, an increase of $148,296. The earnings of the same twenty roads for the first eight months of this year were $40,766,633 against $36,997,773 for the same period last year, an increase of $3,768,860.

THE accounts of the fall trade throughout the Northwest continue to be satisfactory. In Minnesota the trade has been the largest ever known, with two exceptions. The purchases for Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Missouri, Michigan and Wisconsin have been large. As soon as the yellow fever is over there will be a great demand from the South for all kinds of goods.

THE live-cattle trade with England is to receive a new impetus by shipping the cattle direct from Galveston to Barrow-in-Furness. The Great Eastern, it is stated, has been purchased to be fitted up as a cattle-steamer; and the Barrow Shipbuilding Company have fitted up a steamer of 4,000 tons, called the Brazilian, to be the first of a line to run with cattle from Galveston to Barrow-in-Furness.

THE partial failure of the spring-wheat crop in Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota has caused some chagrin to the farmers, and has prospectively damaged the receipts of the railroad companies. But the very large emigration into these regions during this year, the purchase of new farms, and the additional bustle and business thus created will probably be found to more than compensate for the loss sustained by the failure of the wheat crop to turn out so well as was expected.

THE total receipts of stock at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, for the last twelve years, were 7,866,656 head of cattle, 34,094,978 hogs, 3,700,000 sheep and 92,700 horses. The value of the stock received there during the last six years alone was $621,614,004, more than $100,000,000 a year. The largest day's business ever done at these yards was 7,087 cattle, 62,424 hogs and 6,651 sheep. Chicago, as a hog-packing place, now far outstrips Cincinnati. In 1877, Ohio altogether packed 810,037 hogs, while Chicago alone packed 1,618,084, and the increase since then has been very great. This is only the winter packing—the summer packing for the whole West amounted to 2,550,090 hogs, more than half of which were packed at Chicago. The winter packing season begins Nov. 1 and ends March 1; last season the Western States packed during these four months over 6,000,000 hogs. Hog raising is very profitable; the animals are sold when 1 year old, and they bring in an immense amount of money—more than $300,000,000 all told.

What Is Done With Buttermilk.

A young lady from the city, boarding for the summer at a farm-house on the borders of Delaware county, visited the dairy attached, and watched the country maid in her toil with marked attention.

"Your task is a laborious one!" she remarked to the maid.

"Somewhat, ma'am," was the reply.

"Nature is indeed wonderful in her workings," continued the lady. "Observe the green grass in the fields, and in a short time it is converted into milk, and from milk to butter."

"Yes, ma'am."

"Honey is a strange anomaly, also. Observe the little bee wandering from flower to flower, extracting the sweetness therefrom, and depositing it in the globular form into the comb."

"Yes, ma'am."

"Is there sufficient nutriment in it to be of any practical use?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"If I am not exhausting your patience, may I ask you what use is made of the buttermilk?"

"We feed some of it to the hogs, and what's left we feed to the boarders."—Camden Post.

A Sister's Revenge.

A woman was recently seen going through the streets of Birkenhead, Eng., covered with flour and treacle. It seems she had been too intimate with her sister's husband, and a letter from her addressed to him, making an appointment, fell into his wife's hands. Instead of the husband meeting his sister-in-law, the wife made arrangements with about forty or fifty of her friends, and money was freely spent in flour and treacle, which having been applied to the person of the sister, rendered her a pitiful object as she made her way through the streets, followed by a crowd of jeering women.

A BEAR robbed of her cubs is generally supposed to be furious and dangerous, but at Reed City, Mich., a bereft mother bruin adopted a missing 3-year-old child of one Flinn in their stead. There the neighbors found it, after searching twenty-four hours, with never a scratch upon it, and the old bear seemed very loth to give up the child of adoption.

Prompt Reform of Bodily Evils.

The prompt reform of those bodily evils, enfeebled digestion, incomplete assimilation, inactivity of the liver, kidneys and bladder, as well as of the nervous symptoms which these ailments are especially prone to beget, is always accomplished by the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine accredited by physicians, pronounced pure by analysis, and eminently wholesome and agreeable. Surely such a restorative is preferable to unpalatable and indigestible mineral drugs and unsanctioned nostrums. The nation at large assuredly thinks so, judging by the unprecedented demand for the article from Maine to the Pacific, a demand now supplemented by immense orders for it received from tropical America, Mexico, the British and Spanish colonial possessions and elsewhere. Both at home and abroad it is recognized as a standard remedy and preventive, the decisiveness of its effects recommending it everywhere.

MRS. DE GROSS and her 10-year-old daughter made up their minds to drown themselves in the river at Alton, Ill. They waded into the stream, and the mother obligingly aided the child by holding her head under water; but her courage failed when her own turn came to die, and she got ashore.

THERE is a man in Pittsburgh who is so thin that a window-glass company there have hired him to cut glass with his elbow-joint.

Awards to America at Paris.

The cable announces most of the prizes won at Paris. The Howe Scale Co. must feel satisfied with their share. They take the gold medal (the highest award), the silver medal in class 65 (the only award to any scale manufacturer), and the bronze medal in class 64 (the highest in that class).

Fairbanks Scales.

Numerous foreign governments, as Russia, Cuba, Siam, Japan, etc., have adopted the Fairbanks Standard Scales for government use, and in the last four years only, our own Government, in the Postoffice, War and Treasury Departments, have bought over 11,000.

Another Fat Man Reduced.

H. A. KUFUS, dealer in dry goods, Woodhull, Ill., writes BOTANIC MEDICINE CO., Buffalo, N. Y., June 22d, 1878: "Gentlemen: Please find inclosed $5.00, for which send me, by express, Anti-Fat. I have taken one bottle and I lost five and one-quarter pounds."

WILHOFT'S TONIC!—UNFAILING AND INFALLIBLE!—This great Chill Tonic cures Chills without the intervention of doctors and their bills. No consulting visits—no prescriptions to be filled—no huge bills, entailing pecuniary embarrassments, added to loss of health. It is the friend of the poor man, because it enables him to earn a living, and of the rich, because it prepares him to enjoy his wealth. This great boon to mankind is cheap, safe and prompt. OLD age does not prevent you from being cured of your Heart Disease. Mr. Thompson says:

I have had Palpitation of the Heart for ten years. Two years ago I had a paralytic shock; since then I have been troubled very much worse. I found no relief until I had used Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR. I have used it for four months; the palpitation has entirely left me. I was so bad at times that I could not breathe freely, and used to have a faint, sinking feeling; was so bad that I could not sleep, and had to get up and walk around in order to get breath. I feel entirely well of all my heart troubles, and would advise all afflicted with Heart Disease to use it. I am seventy years of age, and live in Bakersville.

JAMES THOMPSON, Manchester, N. H.

Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

Dr. GRAVES' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

THE destructive progress of that insidious foe to life and health, Scrofula, may be arrested by the aid of SCOVILL'S BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP, a botanic depurent which rids the system of every trace of scrofulous or syphilitic poison and cures eruptive and other diseases indicative of a tainted condition of the blood. Among the maladies which it remedies are white swelling, salt rheum, carbuncles, biliousness, the diseases incident to women, gout and rheumatism.

A WONDER FOR THE WORKSHOP.—Every mechanic should have at hand a box of GRACE'S SALVE, as it is a ready remedy for accidents such as Cuts, Bruises, Contused Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Poisoned Skin and Eruptions caused by operations in the factory, dye-house, or printing office. Only 25 cents a box.

FOR upwards of 30 years Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

IF there is anything in this life that will give one a foretaste of hell, as some represent it, that thing is Neuralgia. It is the refinement of torture. But there is a simple and inexpensive remedy for it. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment snuffed up into the head will give instant relief.

PURE, rich blood gives us health, long life and a "green old age," but how few pay any attention to the state of their blood? Parsons' Purgative Pills make new, rich blood, and taken one a night for three months will change the blood in the entire system.

HOG CHOLERA
It is estimated that the farmers of this country have lost
FOUR MILLION HOGS
by this terrible disease. Many patent nostrums have been imposed upon the public under the pretension that they would cure the disease, but in almost all cases they have proved failures. The disease seemed absolutely incurable until Dr. Albert Dunlap, an accomplished physician, undertook a thorough examination of the disease. After much study and many experiments, he announced his now celebrated remedy,
THE EUREKA SPECIFIC.
The success of this remedy has been wonderful. It has saved the hogs from the cholera wherever used.
Mr. G. W. Hardesty, of Canton, Ill., had a lot of sick hogs. He bought some of the EUREKA SPECIFIC, and, FOLLOWING DIRECTIONS CAREFULLY, SAVED EVERY HOG. He highly commends it, and says: "I have no interest in the matter personal to myself, but having tested the remedy and seen it tested by others, I KNOW IT TO BE A GOOD THING. I KNOW IT WILL PREVENT DISEASE AND CURE THE HOG CHOLERA.
"As far as I am able to tell, the Specific is unlike any other preparation for the diseases of swine. Dr. Dunlap is a scientific man, as the specific goes to prove.
"I advise farmers to keep a supply of the remedy on hand at all times."
Do not let your hogs suffer any longer, but send for this SURE CURE. The price for single package, $1; per doz., $10. Send money order or bank draft. Sent by express anywhere. Address

The Continued Decline in Teas.

Has had a depressing influence on the market; so much so that they have declined to the lowest point they have ever reached and at these low prices are relatively much cheaper than coffees. Our trade in them is constantly increasing. The 25c and 40c Teas are taking the lead as they are fresh, sweet and good drawing goods. The 60c and 80c Teas are extra selections. We purchasing direct of the importers and selling direct to our customers, thereby saving the profit of the middle men, which is 10 to 25 per cent.

The Howard Association

This association is formed for the benefit of the sick and suffering, and its treasury is maintained by voluntary contributions. Its members are liable for duty whenever called upon, and that duty consists in ascertaining where suffering exists and where aid is needed —and then applying it. Like the members of the masonic fraternity no nationality, nor sect, nor race, nor condition is a bar to their efforts in doing good. The services of its members are given "without money and without price." The luxury of doing good is the compensation each enjoys. In times of epidemics south the members report themselves at their established headquarters. The city is divided into districts, each with its head, and when a case needing their attention is reported a careful investigation is made and aid rendered commensurate with its necessity. Indeed, there is no waiting for reports to be made. Each district has its working members, who go seeking out those who need their help. If too poor to pay for it themselves the sick and suffering are supplied with medicines, nurses and such comforts as their condition demands, and the bill is paid from the treasury of the association. The treasury is maintained by the voluntary contributions of the charitably disposed everywhere. Vouchers are taken and filed, and the records show where every dollar was applied and the necessity for it, for a report of the financial condition of each patient is ascertained before he is supplied from the charity fund. It sometimes happens that they are called upon to aid those who are financially able to pay for their attention. In such cases the Howards contract for nurses for them, supply physicians, and the cost of these the patient pays. Each member is liable at any time to to be called upon to attend the suffering, and there has been no instance yet recorded where one has failed to respond to a call for duty.

No one can be a member of the association who in character is not above suspicion. The glory they reap is in service to their fellow men. Their compensation the Almighty will render in his own way and time. Wherever it has an organization south, it has the confidence and support of all classes of the population. Wherever it has combated fevar and death, wherever its good offices have been given, the sick and suffering have ever called it blessed There never has been an organization in the interest of human life and in assuaging human suffering in which there has been so little inefficiency as compared with the good the Howard association has done. It is wothy the good wishes and the aid of those who desire to maintain it in its work of aiding suffering humanity.

The Shams.

John Sherman is a millionaire. He acquired his fortune during a Congressional career of eighteen years, with a salary ranging from three thousand to five thousand dollars per annum. During this time he devoted himself exclusively to politics, but he was fortunate enough to be chairman of the Senate Committee of Finance when all the large loans were issued, and was the confidential friend of Jay Cooke through whose hands most of them passed. He therefore enjoyed the best opportunities for getting rich, and he knew how to improve them.

Of all the members of the Fraudulent Administration, he has been the most forward and persistent in requiring the officeholders to be assessed for money to be used at the election this fall. He set the example of removing a competent subordinate in the Treasury for no other reason than because of his refusal to be blackmailed. All the lower grade of clerks from $1,200 a year down are arbitrarily taxed one per cent. on their pay, and the assessment is graduated upward to two per cent., the heads of bureaus being expected to pay more than the levy on the clerks. Sherman's salary is $8,000, and when called upon for his subscription he put down $100, or at the rate of one and a quarter per cent. on the pay. Hayes headed the list with his name, as an admonition to the hundred thousand officeholding patriots, but he has not contributed a dime to the fund. Reformer Schurtz gave $100. The others are waiting for Hayes to show his greenbacks.

Meantime, the collector goes through the departments, exacting the last cent from the victims of civil service reform.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by McIntyre & Son's.

NOTICE TO CONSUMERS —OF— Tobacco

LORILLARD

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many imitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such imitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metallic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

The genuine Lorillard Tin Tag Tobacco can be distinguished by a Tin Tag on each lump with the word Lorillard stamped thereon.

Over 7,000 tons tobacco sold in 1877, and nearly 3,000 persons employed in factories.

Taxes paid Gov'm't in 1877 about 3,500,000, and during past 12 years, over 20,000,000.

These goods sold by all jobbers at manufacturers rates.

Improved and Unimproved FARMS and CITY PROPERTY —IS— MONTGOMERY, LABETTE —AND— Chautauqua Counties.

Cultivated farms in this vicinity, with plenty of good water, convenient to coal and timber, and with

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

The Radical Roll of Rascals.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

Under radical administrations of the government vice got the better of virtue, a thief theory was introduced, and stealing statesmen hobnobbed with party perjuries; the most illustrious patriots of the radical persuasion proud to be political pirates, and its heroes have become infamous for hypocrisy. Lickspittles and liars, cowards and criminals engaged in fraud and forgery serve to make up an exhibition of radical theories and practices so essentially repulsive, and at the same time so entirely characteristic of radicalism, that neither painter nor sculptor, though possessing the abilities of all the masters, could do justice to its deformities, nor could Shakespear and Milton, Dante and Byron, were they living now, with their native abilities, strengthened by centuries of growth and improvement, find in all their wealth of metaphor and invection words with which to add to the haggardness of the picture. Americans have said and sung—

"Let independence be our boon, Ever mindful what it cost."

They have, with generous pride, eulogized the founders of the republic and built monuments to the memory of its heroes. Poets and orators have exhausted the resources of rhetoric to find apt illustrations to describe the country's growth; Christians and philanthropists have pointed to our civilization and advanced Christianity; still Americans of to-day, amidst church and school house monuments and ministers are confronted with public debauchery unparalleled in the world's history, crimes dovetailed into crimes, criminals in high places, as rewards for transactions that mantle the cheek of every honest man with the burning blush of shame and humiliation. [illegible] present administration is a crime against the most sacred rights of the people. It is the outgrowth of fraud. If the perfidious gang of villains who made it possible to utilize perjury to overthrow the rights of the people and reverse their sovereign will had been quietly rewarded by Hayes out of a salary to which he has no more right than a footpad has to the watch or pocket book of his bludgeoned victim, the country would have been spared, in some degree at least, the indescribable degradation to which it had been subjected by the scandalous impudence of Hayes in publicly bestowing rewards for crimes perpetrated in his interest; nor is the public bestowal of these rewards the most shameful part of the proceeding. Hayes, instead of paying the crime stained gang out of his own pocket, for frauds committed in his interest, quarters them upon the people whom they have robbed and insulted, whose rights they have trampled upon, and whose will they have disregarded. The list as prepared by a Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette will attract universal attention, and as honest men read it they will burn with indignation. Here is the catalogue:

Here are fifty-five, who for the part they took in stealing the states of Louisiana and Florida, are paid annually from the revenues of the country nearly $200,000. The list "includes not only the visiting statesmen and the attorneys before the election commission, but the returning boards and the army of understrappers who did the dirty work in the parishes in the capacity of supervisors, to say nothing of the mob of retainers around the New Orleans custom house. The only corrections in the list are in the names of Dennis, the little giant of Florida, who is now in government employ, and Maxwell of the same state, who was recently cashiered and court-martialed from the army in disgrace."

We defy the world to match this exhibition of perfidious partisan scoundrelism. Mexico, amidst all of her revolutions, has made no record so infinitely vile. The United States of America stands alone in the infamy of having elevated a man to the highest office known to the government by fraud. The infamous distinction is made still more atrocious by compeling an outraged people to pay them $200,000 a year for their execrable exploits. With such a record the radical party asks for a further lease of power. We are glad to believe that its doom is fixed, and that its epitaph will be "dead and damned."

Eugene Hale.

Boston Gazette.

In the midst of its general grief the New York Tribune finds occasion to utter the following specific groan:

Mr. March, the greenbacker who is to rattle round in Mr. Hale's seat in Congress, boasted when he was nominated that he had never received much education and had not a dollar in the world. He is simply a shiftless laborer and a striker, whose first success is an election to congress. This is the sort of victory the democratic editor is holding a jubilee over.

The idea of anybody "rattling" in Eugene Hale's seat is decidedly unique when it is known that this diminutive snob could comfortably ensconce himself in the hull of an acorn and then have room for a couple of neighborly cock roaches. Although we would be delighted to see none but educated, refined and intellectual people sent to congress, we are especially pleased that Mr. Hale has been beaten by just such an ignoramus as March. We have often thought that the country would have been just as well off if the 4th Maine district had sent a small yellow dog to congress instead of Hale. In view of the constitutional inhibition touching yellow dogs, we accept March in the spirit in which he is sent.

Before and After.

Hale, of Maine, before the election:

"The republican party was the real Greenback party, it made the greenback; it had done more to keep it afloat than any other party. The Democrats had opposed it from the first, and had denounced President Grant for packing the Supreme Court to make it reverse its decission, pronounced by Democratic Judges, that the legal tender act was unconstitutional."

Hale, of Maine, after the election.

"This was only a skirmish. The fight must go on. Hard money must be espoused more earnestly than ever."

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by McIntyre & Son's.

THE BIGEST THING ON REKORD.

Having bought what is known as the New York Store, Auburn, Ind., at a bankrupt sale and at figures that will guarantee to me a profit, I now offer the entire stock consisting of dry goods, clothing, carpets, hats, caps, trunks, valices, notions, etc., at bankrupt prices at prices far below original cost. Wishing to close this immense stock of goods out within the next thirty days, I will offer them at prices that will astonish you. Come one, come all, come everybody, come early while bargains can be obtained.
Yours &c.,
36-4w. JOHN A. COTTMAN.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

Democratic Doctrine.

The Platform of the Party Adopted at the State Convention.

A Clear and Unequivocal Enunciation of Principles—sentiments which the Masses Will Endorse.

The democracy of the State of Indiana, assembled in delegate convention, declare;

That national bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are, by the terms of the original contracts under which they were issued, expressly made payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money, as well as coin, is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

That we are in favor of such legislation by congress as will authorize the taxation by the states, of the United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad, through the means of home syndicates or other methods: and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislating so as to distribute said debt among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practicable opportunity for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation as shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public and private; and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon the same terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

That we are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employes of corporations engaged in the business of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that such lien shall be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation.

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and owner.

That the democratic party is the friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last apportionment of the state for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonorable, and we demand that the next legislature, in apportioning the state for legislative purposes, as will be their imparative duty, shall have regard alone to population and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the circuit courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the states tends to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the interests of the people; and we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the constitution and expressed in the judiciary act of 1789.

That we are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the federal government either in lands, bonds, money, or by the pledge of the public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders of the republican party who secretly conceived and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for president and vice-president, were wrongly kept out of the position to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that only can be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the president of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the act of federal officers in attempting to interfere with the rights and powers of the state courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our senators and representatives in congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to the soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

AUBURN COURIER.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE ice-cream depot of J. M. Horton, Fourth avenue, New York, was entered by burglars on the other morning, and the safe in the place torn open and robbed of jewels valued at $800, and $140 in cash, and notes, bonds, and mortgages, etc., representing $100,000.

ACCORDING to a statement prepared in the New York Custom House, for the benefit of the Committee of Ways and Means of Congress, the Government was cheated out of $2,500,000 on imported sugars last year....A Saratoga (N. Y.) savings bank has shut up shop, with liabilities amounting to $153,000, and $3,000 cash in the treasury.

JAMES A. HAMILTON, son of Alexander Hamilton, has just died in New York city, aged 91 years.

THE WEST.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON, the greatest of the world's comedians, continues his unequaled impersonation of "Rip Van Winkle," to the delight and admiration of crowded audiences, at McVicker's Theater, Chicago. This is beyond question the grandest piece of character acting produced on the modern stage, and it is well worth a journey to the Garden City to witness it.

THE military authorities are unable to obtain positive information as to the whereabouts of the main body of the Cheyennes who lately left the reservation in the Indian Territory, but the general expectation seems to be that they will attempt to cross the Union Pacific railroad within a few miles of Sidney, Neb. Consequently a considerable force of United States troops has been collected at Sidney, and is held in readiness for an instant movement on the Union Pacific railroad. One body of about 300 Indians was encountered last week by a force of troops and citizens, at a point south of the Kansas Pacific railway. The Indians were badly thrashed, but we are not informed of the extent of their losses....Three little children—Joseph Toney, Charles Steps and Polly Brooks—met with a frightful death in West Kansas City, Mo., the other day. They were playing in an excavation, when the bank caved and they were smothered. They had been dead several hours when discovered.

GEN. SHERIDAN has sent word to Col. Miles that Sitting Bull and the other Sioux Indians in the British possessions will be permitted to return to the American side upon the same terms extended to all other fugitive redskins, viz.: unconditional surrender. This was in reply to a telegram from Miles conveying the information that Indian emissaries had arrived at Fort Keogh who represented that the Northern reds were Sioux-ing for peace and easy capitulation.

THE SOUTH.

AMONG the victims of the yellow fever at Baton Rouge, La., is ex-Gov. Sam Bard, editor of the Herald, and long known as an active politician in the South.

ADVICES from the plague-infected cities of the Mississippi valley to Sept. 21 show a marked abatement of the disease, both as to the number of new cases and the mortality lists. The weather was growing colder, there were hopes of an early frost, and the sorely-stricken people were beginning to hold up their heads again. At New Orleans, Memphis, Vicksburg and other points the mortality roll showed a decided decline. At Grenada, Miss., the fever had run its course, the visiting doctors had all left, and business was being resumed.

SINCE the beginning of the yellow-fever epidemic in Memphis, sixteen of the physicians employed by the Howard Association there have died of the disease. Nearly all of them were volunteers from other places—several being from Cincinnati and other northern cities.

THERE were 64 deaths and 156 new cases of yellow fever in Memphis on Sept. 23; many prominent names figured in the death roll. At New Orleans there were 44 deaths and 134 new cases. At Vicksburg there were 7 deaths; Holly Springs, 5 deaths and 15 new cases; Brownsville, 5 deaths and 10 new cases; Hickman, 6 deaths; Baton Rouge, 3 deaths and 36 new cases; Canton, 1 death and 23 new cases.

IN New Orleans, up to the 24th of September, there had been 7,072 cases of yellow fever reported and 2,514 deaths. Grenada, Miss., with a population of only about 1,500 at the start, has lost 230 white persons and 70 blacks by the pestilence.

DR. RIBBE, who went from New York to New Orleans with fever cots for the cold-water treatment of yellow fever, was attacked with the dread disease last week. He applied his own remedy to himself, but he died shortly after the application.

THE present business outlook in the South and Southwest is anything but encouraging. What with the yellow-fever epidemic, the utter stagnation of trade, and the gloomy prospects of the growing cotton, it is said the people in that section are sorely depressed, and look forward to a winter of unusually hard times.

THE deaths from yellow fever in Memphis, Sept. 25, numbered 45; in New Orleans 36, and in Vicksburg 9. The Howard Associations of New Orleans and Memphis have notified the country at large that they are in possession of funds believed to be sufficient for all demands upon their resources, present and prospective. Holly Springs reports the situation there as "fearful; fully 500 down with the fever." At Mississippi City thirteen cases of fever had broken out at one hotel. Canton, Miss., reports (Sept. 26) no abatement of the fever. At Baton Rouge and other interior towns of Louisiana the epidemic was as virulent as ever.

VICKSBURG announces the death of William Rockwood, President of the Howard Association. He was a leading citizen, President of the Young Men's Christian Association, an untiring worker, and beloved by the entire community. The whole city turned out at his funeral.

WASHINGTON.

EFFORTS are being made by Western manufacturers to induce the Internal Revenue Bureau to abandon the use of the new stamped wrapper for tobacco packages, which, they contend, impose needlessly burdensome expense upon them. They are compelled to send their paper to New York by the car load, get it stamped there, and take the risk of its safe return, with the added cost of the stamps attached. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is said to be willing to abandon the present system, if the manufacturers unite in demanding it, after a fair trial.

A WASHINGTON dispatch announces that the department chiefs have issued orders that eight hours constitute a day's work, to be paid for the same as now for ten hours. Men electing to work ten hours a day will be paid extra therefor.

IT is announced from Washington that the Mexican Government has made a demand upon the United States for the withdrawal of the order given to Gen. Ord authorizing him to cross the border and inflict punishment upon raiders on Mexican soil; and that our Government has replied that the United States has trusted Mexico many times when that Government was able to maintain peace upon the border; that peace was not established, and that no effort was made to establish it; and, finally, that the United States is weary of this business, and will not recall the order to Gen. Ord.... Spear, Commissioner of Patents, has tendered his resignation, to take effect Nov. 1. He will be succeeded by Halbert E. Paine, of Wisconsin, former Congressman.

GENERAL.

THE case of Henry A. Parr, second in command of the rebel party which captured the steamer Chesapeake in Long Island sound in December, 1863, and murdered the engineer, has just been disposed of by the United States Commissioner at Boston. The Commissioner found that the capture was made in behalf of the so-called Confederate States, and was an act of war, and came within the provisions of the proclamation of amnesty and pardon issued by President Andrew Johnson in 1868, and discharged the defendant.

ADVICES received in Washington from Mexico indicate that the situation in that happy country is growing precarious for the Government of Gen. Diaz. Revolutionary movements are occurring with increasing frequency, and are extending over the entire country. The reports received are such as to indicate that the Government which was born of revolution may itself be compelled to surrender to revolution.

AN examination of witnesses has lately been going on at Marquette, Mich., to secure testimony to be used in the case of the United States vs. Samuel J. Tilden, to recover a deficiency in his taxes. In the course of the examination certain books containing the accounts of the New York iron mine were being used. One evening last week, as the Commissioner was quietly proceeding with the depositions, two men suddenly rushed into the room, seized the books, rushed for a carriage that was standing conveniently by and made away with them. Mounted officers started in pursuit, but succeeded only in overtaking the empty carriage, about two hours after the robbery.

THE annual meeting of the North Pacific Railroad Company stockholders has just been held in New York. The gross earnings for the year were $1,193,381; expenses, $631,302; leaving a net balance of $562,079, or net increase of $169,381 over last year. The operations of the land department have been active, nearly three-quarters of a million of acres being disposed of.

THOMAS HARLAND, of New York, the attorney for Samuel J. Tilden at the time the books of the New York Iron Mine Company were seized and carried off, at Marquette, Mich., was arrested at Detroit the other day, upon a warrant issued upon the affidavit of the United States District Attorney. Harland denies all knowledge of the alleged robbery. It appears that the parties who seized and spirited away the books had a writ of replevin, but didn't take time to read, or even exhibit, the paper. The District Attorney affirms that the books showed that Mr. Tilden's net profits from the mine amounted, from 1864 to 1871, to over $1,000,000.

POLITICAL.

THE Republicans of Connecticut held their State Convention at Hartford, Sept. 24. Charles H. Andrews, of Litchfield, was nominated for Governor, David Gallet for Lieutenant Governor, David Torrence for Secretary of State, Tallman Baker for Treasurer, and Chauncey Howard for Comptroller....The Nevada Democrats have nominated L. R. Bradley, present incumbent, for Governor, and W. E. F. Deal for Congress.

THE Democratic State Convention of Massachusetts—or at least that portion which seceded from the Worcester assembly that nominated Gen. Butler—reassembled in Faneuil Hall, Boston, last week, and nominated the following ticket: Governor, J. G. Abbott; Lieutenant Governor, William R. Plunkett; Secretary of State, Henry C. Dewing; Treasurer and Receiver, Gen. David N. Skilling; Auditor, John E. Fitzgerald; Attorney General, Richard Olney.

CARTER H. HARRISON has been defeated for a renomination in Chicago, Miles Kehoe, a local politician and a leader of the Irish, having been selected by the Democratic convention as his successor.

THE Democrats of New York held their State Convention at Syracuse Sept. 25 and 26. Erastus Brooks, of New York city, presided. G. B. Bradley was nominated for Judge of the Court of Appeals. The platform declares that "gold and silver coin and a paper convertible into coin at the will of the holder should be the only currency of the country, and steady steps be taken toward specie payments and the honest payment of the public debt," denounces the seating of Hayes as an "infamous fraud," and declares that "it is the stern resolve of the American people that such a fraud has been perpetrated for the last time."

THE New York Republican State Convention was held at Saratoga last week. Roscoe Conkling was chosen to preside. George William Curtis sat on the platform and heartily applauded his utterances in the convention. Hon. George F. Danforth, of Rochester, was nominated for Judge of the Court of Appeals, and A. B. Cornell was reappointed Chairman of the State Committee. The platform declares in favor of hard money and the early resumption of specie payments, demands "free and unintimidated elections in the South as in the North," and declares that the "Electoral Commission was a wise and honorable mode of settling a dangerous dispute."

FOREIGN.

THE International Peace Congress has opened at Paris. The objects of the congress are to discuss the practical means of insuring peace, reforming international law, and carrying out the principles of arbitration.

A REPORT comes from Constantinople to the effect that the envoy from Afghanistan, now in that city, is endeavoring to persuade the Sultan to abandon his English alliance and enter into one with Russia....A Havana dispatch says that horses, mules, cows, and oxen, and all agricultural machinery and implements may be imported duty free for one year into the provinces of Puerto Principe and Santiago de Cuba. ....Fevers are very prevalent in the island of Cyprus, and about one-sixth of the British army of occupation are on the sick list.

CABLE dispatches report the entire Austrian army engaged in a forward movement in Bosnia. Several important Bosnian positions had been captured, though not without stubborn resistance and serious losses of men. ....The island of Hayti was lately devastated by a furious hurricane. Plantations were laid waste, houses demolished, ships and lighters wrecked, and a great many people killed and drowned. It was one of the most destructive visitations of the kind experienced in the tropics for many seasons.

THE Servian Government, at the request of the Mohammedan chiefs, has consented to receive women and children fleeing from Northern Bosnia....A strong force of British troops is being concentrated on the borders of Afghanistan....The Albanians are manifesting their sympathy for the Bosnia insurgents by marching, in large numbers, to their assistance....Advices from Santo Domingo announce the success of the revolutionists, the capitulation of President Gonzales, and his departure from the country....Cable dispatches report that the great volcanoes of Europe and South America, Vesuvius and Cotopaxi, are simultaneously in full eruption.

THREE cases of blasting powder recently exploded in the St. Gothard tunnel, killing ten workmen, and mutilating many more. ....It is reported that 100,000 Armenians have risen in arms, and are ready to fight for autonomy.

IT looks as if war between England and Afghanistan was among the probabilities, if not an actual certainty. The cause of the trouble seems to be about this: The Ameer of Cabul, the capital city of Afghanistan, refused permission to a British commission to enter Afghanistan from India, for purposes of observation and treaty. England and Russia are rivals for the future possession of that important portion of Asiatic India, and the Ameer appears to be favorable to Russia. England is in high dudgeon at the snubbing of the mighty Ameer, and has about resolved upon sending a force of red-coats for the invasion of Afghanistan.

THE YELLOW-FEVER EPIDEMIC.

A Terrible Story of Death's Doings in Memphis.

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal.]

Mr. Chas. C. Dobb, a wholesale grocery merchant, was one of the arrivals from Memphis. He has been in the doomed city attending to business every day since the plague began, and tells a woful story of the scourge. On Tuesday the deaths were so rapid that the undertaker was 100 bodies behind in interment. Dead bodies were lying unattended in every quarter of the city, and their friends and relatives were running about the streets crying and wringing their hands in the agony of despair, beseeching their fellow-citizens to come and take away their dead.

Mr. Dobb said that for several weeks it had been his habit to drive into the city in the morning, attend his business during the day, and leave in the evening. When going in it was an ordinary occurrence to see as many as twenty-five hearses in procession wending their way to the graveyard, and often he met large express wagons loaded with coffins and boxes containing the dead. Sometimes, from the long delay in burying the dead, the boxes would be seen bursting open by the force of the swelling bodies, and the stench was sometimes almost intolerable. Day and night the sound of the undertaker's saw and hammer was heard all over the city, and frequently the sidewalks in front of the shops were blockaded the distance of a whole block with coffins and boxes piled high upon each other.

The reporter asked Mr. Dobb if it was true that whole families were swept away in a day, unattended by a nurse or physician.

"The few accounts you have seen," he replied, "do not tell half the story of misery and death. The truth is that one-half the woful story has never been told. It is indescribably terrible and heartrending. Memphis is a charnel-house torn up. Turn which way you may, go where you will, and there is constantly before you a scene that will bring tears to the eyes of the most callous. Stout and stubborn men, broken down with grief, can be seen upon the street weeping together like children. To-day a fond mother gathers her children about her and prays that their lives may be spared. On the morrow they are snatched from her bosom by the grim monster, and soon she follows them to the grave. In the next household the parents are taken first, leaving the children to die alone, unless perchance they have the good fortune to fall into the hands of a nurse in time for treatment. Sometimes a whole family is found dead together. In some instances all are down, some dead, others dying, and the helpless sick lying beside the dead and offensive bodies. The Relief Committee, searching for such cases, a few days ago, entered a house where all was still save the faint cries of an infant. Upon opening the door a scene most painful and shocking met their gaze. Mother, father and children lay dead upon the floor, and a poor little babe, the only survivor, was crawling upon the bare breasts of its dead mother, struggling in vain for its food. Such scenes, varying only in the nature of their horrible circumstances, are numerous and of daily occurrence."

Mr. Dobb said the sensation of fear had long since past. The most shocking scenes have lost their terror to the people. They live day by day looking to their end, which every one who remains feels must come sooner or later, and look death in the face with callous indifference.

In the minds of the physicians and the people the disease is not characterized as yellow fever. All seemed to submit to the feeling which comes over each one alike that it is a plague, and they don't know what to call it or how to treat it.

Mr. Dobb says the atmosphere of Memphis is so heavily impregnated with the poison that its influence is easily perceptible. Persons living in the country and going to town in the day immediately experience oppressed breathing, with a drowsy sensation of head and depression of spirits, and these are his sensations as long as he stays within the atmosphere.

The Pestilence in the Crescent City.

[From a New Orleans Letter.]

It has been remarked by several newspapers that a stranger coming to New Orleans at this time would not be able to tell, from a cursory view of the town and the people, that we were suffering from a very serious epidemic. Those who are left here have become convinced that the best way to fight the disease was to banish all fear of it and take care of themselves. The consequence is that, though the fever and mortality have undoubtedly increased, very few native adults have died, and many strangers who were not frightened to death have successfully wrestled with it. The people pursue their usual occupations without any evidence of fear, and things look as they usually do at this season of the year, with the exception of some dullness in trade. The funerals show only too plainly the presence of the disease, and the fact that the fever is the only topic of conversation confesses its hold on the community. At night the rattle of wheels shows the activity of the doctors, who get little or no rest. They are nearly worn out, and one of them told me that he was so sick of yellow fever that when called in to see a man that had something else it buoyed him up and gave him new strength. It can easily be understood how monotonous this one disease becomes to a physician.

In some localities the fever takes a violent hold, and seems to stay there until the material is completely used up. Such a locality is that around the intersection of Enterpe and Carondelet streets. It appeared there over a month ago, and is still there. So bad had it become that a few weeks ago it was found necessary to barricade Enterpe street at the corner of Carondelet, and near the corner of St. Charles. In addition to this, saw-dust was laid along the car-track on Carondelet street for two squares, to deaden the sound of the mules' hoofs on the cobble-stones. Some time ago a milkman endeavored to take down the barricade mentioned above, and drive his cart through. A gentleman who had two sick children living on that square told him to stop. The milkman refused, and became angry and excited, and struck at the gentleman with his whip. The gentleman pulled out a revolver, and fired one shot at the vender of chalk and water, which, though it unfortunately missed him, caused him to move away. "He stood not upon the order of his going," but went as rapidly as possible. I visited that neighborhood last night for the purpose of calling to find out some news about a very sick friend. On approaching his house I saw something white on the bell-handle, and feared the worst immediately. On going up to it I discovered that it was not crape, but a piece of paper with this notice upon it: "Please don't ring the bell." It was sadly suggestive of serious sickness, as were the sawdust on the track and the barricade at the corner.

There are many sad cases in connection with this epidemic which could touch the heart of even the most hardened. In one instance the fever attacked a family consisting of husband, wife and three little children. Within a week all three of the little ones died, and the mother is now very ill. In another case a family of three—husband, wife and child—were attacked, and the child died. The husband was convalescent when he heard of the child's death, but when he found this out he gave up immediately, and died just three hours after his child. The poor, childless widow was taken with the fever, and, being a stranger and "sore afflicted," could not fight the disease. She has died. These instances could be multiplied, I have no doubt, but they show the severe side of the epidemic, and are too sad to be dwelt upon.

Assassination of Gen. Mezentsof.

The following account of the assassination of Gen. Mezentsof, Chief of the Czar's Private Police, is given by a correspondent of the Paris Temps: "He was in the habit, each morning, of taking a walk after performing his religious duties. He generally went in the direction of the Gestinoi Dvor, or bazar; at other times he extended his promenade toward the Newsky Prospect. His favorite walk was the Place Michel, near the center of the town. He, as a rule, went out between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning, and alone. This habit of the General was, evidently, well known to the assassins. On the day of his death he rose as usual, dressed himself in uniform, and, accompanied by his friend and companion-in-arms, Col. Makaroff, in civil costume, went to take his accustomed and favorite promenade. On reaching the corner of the Place Michel two well-dressed men were observed close to a confectioner's shop which is situated there. They had, according to the Golos, the appearance of civil servants. As soon as they found they were observed they hurriedly made off. The General and his companion paid no attention to this apparently insignificant circumstance. But suddenly a man emerged from a corner behind and drove a poniard up to the hilt into the abdomen, which it penetrated as far as the peritoneum. Col. Marakoff threw himself upon the assassin; but a second person then suddenly came forward and fired a revolver at Makaroff, without, however, hitting him. Profiting by the confusion which then arose, both the assailants entered a droschky, which drove off through the Rue Italianskaya in the direction of Sadovaya. This droschky or cab is said to have been an elegant private vehicle, with an excellent horse. All that is known at present is that one of the two assassins wore a gray coat. So successful a flight would be regarded as incredible, but there were no police near, and, at that early hour, the Place Michel is almost deserted. Gen. Mezentsof was taken home severely wounded, but not, it was believed, dangerously. Gen. Zouroff, the Ministers of War and of Justice called afterward, and the physician, Bogdanovski, arrived about 12 o'clock. A dose of morphine was given to the patient, whose condition was not despaired of. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon grave symptoms manifested themselves, and, at twenty minutes past that hour, he died in great agony."

Extraordinary Enterprise.

A quarter of a century ago there was a memorable conflagration at Sacramento city, Cal., by which the entire business portion of the city was laid in ashes. When the great fire was at its maximum fury a wealthy merchant named McNulty, who owned some of the heaviest business establishments in the city, gazed for a few moments upon the work of destruction, and then, instead of folding his hands and weeping over the disaster, he went to the nearest livery stable, hired a fleet-footed horse, rode like John Gilpin during the remainder of the night, and before daylight the next morning had purchased every foot of lumber and every saw-mill at Grass Valley and Nevada City. There is, possibly, no human being on earth who would think of running off by the light of his burning property in order to literally make his fortune out of the disaster except an American. McNulty did so, however, and almost immediately realized out of the sale of his lumber fourfold as much money as he had lost by the great fire.—Grass Valley Union.

Washington Improvements.

Notwithstanding the much-talked-of "financial depression," there was never so much building going on in Washington as during the present summer. People who own real estate, and have money, are taking advantage of the cheap labor and materials to improve their property. The Inspector of Buildings reports that during July and August he issued building permits amounting to over $1,000,000. The recent legislation by Congress reorganizing the Government of the District of Columbia, fixing a maximum of taxation, and settling beyond dispute the proportion the United States should pay toward the support of the district, has had the effect to establish values here and encourage improvements.—Washington Cor. Chicago Inter-Ocean.

INSOLVENCY LAWS.

Provisions of the Bankruptcy Laws of the Various States.

The ranks of the bankrupts are full, says a New York paper, and no more recruits will be taken. It will take some time to prove all claims against their estates, to levy all fees, costs and allowances, distribute what there is left, and discharge them from legal obligations on account of their past debts. So far as future operations are concerned, business must be done with an eye to State enactments for the enforcement of the rights of creditors. So long as there is property within the reach of the law, the ordinary remedies are sufficiently effectual, but, in the case of insolvency, it will be a difficult matter to secure an equitable distribution of available assets among those fairly entitled to share in them. In fact, the difficulty and uncertainty will be so great as to prevent, in very many cases, any effort on the part of distant creditors to obtain their rights. Doubtless one result would be more care in extending credit, and a stronger disposition to trade for cash only, or with persons whose solvency is fully assured. This enforced return to more cautious and conservative methods may not be a bad thing, but it will not absolutely prevent failures, or preclude the necessity of some measure for securing the rights of all parties when failures occur. But the present condition of the law is such that, to all intents and purposes, the country is without the means of effecting the purposes of bankruptcy legislation, which are to secure to creditors, pro rata, all there is applicable to the liquidation of their claims, and to release the insolvent debtor, who surrenders all he has, in good faith, from future liability.

It will be of interest to recall, at this time, the principal features of the various States and Territories. In the first place, Alabama, Colorado, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Texas, Utah, Wyoming and Washington have made no provision whatever for the assignment or settlement of the estates of debtors, whether insolvent or otherwise. In Delaware, the District of Columbia, and North and South Carolina, the law applies only where the debtor has been arrested after execution against the property is unsatisfied, and is intended only to get him out of jail on surrender of his property. The following States have only assignment laws, which allow a debtor, if he sees fit, to surrender his property to be distributed among his creditors in satisfaction of their claims, most of them permitting preferences, but leaving any property that may be subsequently acquired liable for debts remaining unpaid: Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Maryland, Missouri, New Hampshire, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia. None of these have insolvency laws, properly so-called. In Missouri there may be a final discharge after assignment, by unanimous consent of the creditors, and, in Maryland, any of the creditors may sign a release, and the debtor will be free from their claims, but liable for all others. In New Hampshire, those accepting dividends from the estate are debarred from further recovery.

Maine has an insolvency law, passed at the last session of the Legislature, which provides not only for voluntary but for compulsory assignments. The assignee is chosen by the creditors, and a discharge may be granted if there has been no fraud practiced, and, on agreement of a majority of the creditors representing three-fourths of the claims to accept a certain percentage, a discharge follows as a matter of course. Massachusetts and Vermont also provide for both voluntary and compulsory assignments in insolvency cases, and a distribution of the assets to meet all proved claims. So far as such claims are concerned, there is a final discharge of the debtor. The law in Rhode Island, passed last spring, is similar. In Connecticut a trustee may be appointed on petition of a creditor after an attachment has been issued and no property found. A final discharge is granted only in case 70 per cent. of all claims is paid. The law in this State provides for voluntary assignments only, makes very inadequate provision against preferences, and works no final discharge. The case is similar in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Nebraska there are insolvency laws, but they provide for voluntary proceedings only. The assignee is selected by the insolvent debtor or the court, and must give bonds. Schedules of assets and liabilities are filed, and creditors are notified and allowed to prove their claims. In Michigan and Wisconsin there is a final discharge, so far as the claims are concerned, of those creditors who take part in the proceedings, but not as to others. In the other States named there is a discharge only so far as the claims are satisfied, the creditors still having redress against any property that the debtor may subsequently acquire. In Louisiana a debtor may surrender his property and obtain a discharge as to creditors who prove their claims and share in the dividends. California provides for voluntary assignments, and bars all claims not presented.

The details as to proceedings differ widely in different States, but the general aim where there are insolvency laws is to secure an application of all the debtor's property equitably for the liquidation of claims proved against the estate within a certain allotted time. All others are left to be collected or to be lost, as the case may be, under the operation of the general laws for collecting debts. In no case has the adjudication any effect beyond the limits of the State in which it takes place. All remedies that can be enforced elsewhere against person or property remain unaffected. Hence no discharge can be regarded as absolute and no settlement final until the uttermost farthing is paid. It may be stated in a general way that State laws are likely to prove a benefit only for the citizens of the State in which they have force. But the trade of the country is so extended from State to State, and has become so completely a national affair, that the need will soon be felt of some means of protecting the rights of those who are so unfortunate as to have insolvent debtors in distant States. In the meantime they must protect themselves as best they can by guarding against having insolvent debtors.

Grave Robbery.

The desecration of the venerable Harrison's grave, near Cincinnati, is not out of the public mind before an equally ghoulish deed is reported from Cleveland. Mr. Edwin French, an aged resident of the town of Willoughby, a few miles from Cleveland, died on Saturday and was buried on Monday in the family lot in the village cemetery. The case, from this point, presents some singular repetitions of the Harrison outrage. Mr. French's son, fearing that an attempt might be made to rob the grave, hired a young man to watch it. The youth absented himself temporarily, and the robbers took advantage of their opportunity. Notice of the crime was promptly spread about, and a protracted search discovered a Cleveland buggy which had been used all night, and on the seat of which was a tuft of an old man's gray hair. Of course, none of the officials of any medical college in Cleveland had any knowledge of the whereabouts of the stolen body; but the first one searched, the homeopathic, on Prospect street, disclosed the disfigured body. A vigorous prodding of the sawdust on the floor of the dissecting-room revealed a trap-door, tightly nailed. It was opened, only to expose more sawdust, false timbers and another trapdoor. Beneath this, in a tank, was the body of Mr. French, a hideous gash in his throat where the robbers' hook had been inserted. None of the officers of the institution had the slightest suspicion that the body was in the college of course not. Mr. French, during his life, had been a beneficiary of the institution—a fact which may have constituted a claim upon his body for the use of "science." There are the usual assertions of a vigorous prosecution of the guilty parties.

Every State should make provision for supplying these doctor-factories with what one of their professors calls "medical college plant," from among the unclaimed dead; but decency, humanity, civilization itself, require that a stop should be put to this ghoulish business of grave-robbing.—Chicago Times.

Diminution of Live Stock in Britain.

The London Times is apprehensive of coming evil to British farmers from the fact, brought out by recent agricultural statistics, that not only is the area of land in the United Kingdom under arable crop undergoing annual diminution, but that the number of head of live stock is also decreasing. There seems to be no doubt of the fact. From 1866 to 1874 there was a steady increase of all kinds of stock, and since that date there has been a steady decrease. In 1866 there were in the United Kingdom of cattle 8,570,000 and of sheep 26,380,000. In 1874 these figures had increased to cattle, 10,291,000; and sheep, 34,826,000. In 1877, however, the numbers are found to be, cattle, 9,734,000; sheep, 32,220,000. These figures indicate either that British farmers are discontinuing sheep and cattle raising, or that there has been excessive mortality among their flocks and herds—either of them a sufficiently-serious affair. The price of meat has never been so high as during the three years in which the decrease has taken place, so that the stimulus of a good market has not been lacking.

Unknown Regions.

According to an English writer there are four vast areas which have never been traversed by civilized man, and which among them constitute about one-seventh of the whole area of the globe. Of these, the greatest is the Antarctic region, the extent of which is about seventy-five times that of Great Britain; the second lies about the North pole; the third is in Central Africa, and the fourth in Western Australia. The areas of the unknown regions of the globe are estimated, approximately, at about 11,600,000 square miles.

THE Mikado having decided that all his subjects holding official situations shall dress a l'Europeenne, the Japanese milliners have sent a large portion of their stock of dresses to Paris, where they have been converted into very pretty dressing-gowns.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

WEEDS IN THE CORN FIELD.

Fifteen years ago, writes Rural Jr., in the Chicago Tribune, the farmer who suffered his corn-field to grow up full of weeds was looked upon as a sloven; now a clean field is the exception. We asked an old farmer whom we met on the road to tell us why this is so. His reason was simple: Because they tried to do too much, and only half finished their work. They did not like to hoe, and the weeds consequently took the crop. The farmers of the West will sooner or later realize that they must cultivate better or hoe their corn; for, if the fields continue to grow weedy as they have in the past two years, weeds will be the only crop grown. We expect that, in order to do a good job of cultivating, we shall have to return to the five-toothed cultivator, and cultivate our corn both ways. A little hoeing then will suffice to keep the weeds out. In one place we noticed about twenty acres of what was intended for corn, grown so full of cockle-burrs that the stalks of corn were almost hid from sight. The burrs stood six feet high and very thick. It is folly to attempt to grow corn on such foul land; but many farmers try to do it, and then blame Providence for the failure.

POOR STACKING.

In a recent letter we endeavored to impress upon our readers the necessity for good stacking, and gave a very few directions. On inquiry we find that a very large per cent. of the oat crop of Central Illinois has been injured by indifferent stacking. At least one-third the crop is so damaged, and sells from 6 to 8 cents below the price of a good article. We think it would be a good plan for farmers' clubs and agricultural colleges to teach how to put up a good stack, if they know how it is done, and give the reason for each operation.

EDUCATING THE PEOPLE.

Every now and then a political speaker insists that one of the principal things to be done is to educate the people, and then they will see that his party, or the principles he advocates, if he has any, are right. The folly of such a statement is at once apparent when we consider that there are well-educated people belonging to all parties, and believing all sorts of religions. It is not so much education that the people need as it is a good example. A good farmer will have many imitators. Agricultural and other journals have been preaching to the people the value of thorough cultivation and preparation of the soil, and yet, in passing a dozen plowed fields recently, we noticed that poor plowing was the rule, and good plowing the exception. Why does a man plow a stubble-field, and leave it looking as though a drove of hogs had been rooting in it, and had been driven away before they completed the job? Why not turn the weeds all under, out of sight, and out of the way of the drill-teeth? It is just as easy to do it as it is to half plow the ground. We assume that last spring, after there was no further use for them, your plows were wiped dry, and all dirt cleaned from the wood and iron work, and that the polished surfaces were coated with oil and whiting, or white-lead and tallow. If they were, you need not so much as rub their surfaces with a cloth to remove it. They will scour before they have gone a rod. If your weeds are a foot high or more, a single weed-hook, such as has been described in this correspondence time and again, will turn them under and out of sight. If the weeds are short, a chain may be fastened to the plow-beam in such a manner that it will drag just ahead of the furrow-slice as it goes over, and every weed will be covered. We presume that you always use a rolling cutter; it makes the plow run easier, and leaves the edge of the furrow square. These are all little things, but are not neglected by the good farmer.

POOR DRIVING.

Half the load is in the driver. A good strong team attached to a plow does not require a great deal of driving. If their harness is properly adjusted, the draught of the plow will keep them going straight. This is also true of a team hitched to a wagon, when the roads are good and both animals are of equal strength and spirit. But this rarely happens. One horse is nearly always larger, stronger or faster than the other, and such require a driver. Does one horse start quick and the other slow, the slow one should always be touched with the whip or given some other admonition before the word to start is spoken. The reins should always be a little shorter on the fast horse, so that he may be gently checked, and the other not feel the effect of a tight rein. The driver's attention should always be given to his team and the road over which he is traveling. If there is a root or a mud-hole to be avoided, it is his duty to prepare to avoid it before the team or the wheels are in a position to render avoidance impossible. The drivers who keep their team in the road, and the wagon-wheels always in the smoothest place, are entitled to all credit. Too many men give their teams the rein, and let them pick out the road as best they may. If the wheels get out of the track they jerk the team back to their proper place. If a rut is to be avoided, they wait until the wheels are in it before turning out, and then both team and vehicle are strained to get them out. When the feat is accomplished, after much straining and tugging, the necessity is past. Every farmer should instruct his boys and hired men how to drive. Teach them the importance of holding the lines taut; to be ready for any emergency; to watch the team, and keep the wheels in the smooth track, and such other instructions as will readily occur to an experienced driver.

GATHER FRUIT EARLY.

We have learned by experience that early-gathered winter apples keep the best. As soon as fruit has attained its full size we advise that it be picked. In Central Illinois this will occur by the last of the present month; further north, a little earlier. A few days' neglect of this important duty may cause the premature ripening of the crop.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

FINGER-MARKS.

For washing finger-marks from looking-glasses or windows, put a few drops of ammonia on a moist rag and make quick work of it.

TO TAKE STAINS OUT OF WHITE GOODS.

One teaspoonful of chloride of lime in about three quarts of water will take any kind of stain out of white goods; put the part with the stain on it in the water, and let it remain until out. It will not injure the cloth if prepared in this way; only spots on white goods can be taken out thus.

REMOVING INK SPOTS.

Apply spirits of salts made into a solution with five times its weight of water; then wash it off in a minute or two with clear water. A solution of citric acid or oxalic acid will answer the same purpose, and neither of them will efface the printing, but they will rot the paper if not washed off in pure water.

GOVERNMENT WHITEWASH.

Slack half a bushel of lime with boiling water, keeping it covered during the process; strain it and add a peck of salt dissolved in warm water, three pounds of rice boiled until it is a thin paste, half a pound of Spanish whiting and a pound of clear glue dissolved in warm water. Mix these well together and let stand several days.

CHINTZ GOWNS.

Chintz is about as troublesome to wash as anything can be. Ordinary soap spoils it and clear water does not cleanse it. Boil two quarts of rice in two gallons of water, and when it is nearly cool wash the chintz in it. Then prepare more rice water, but strain it and dilute it, and wash again. Then starch the chintz with the rice water, and when dry rub it with a cold iron, or better still, a bit of polished marble.

CLEANING RUSTY STEEL.

Steel which has rusted can be cleaned by brushing with a paste made of half an ounce cyanide potassium; half an ounce castile soap; one ounce whiting, and water sufficient to form a paste. The steel should first be washed with a solution of half an ounce cyanide potassium in two ounces water. To preserve steel from rusting, a good method is to paint it with melted caoutchouc, to which some oil has been added.

TO COLOR PHOTOGRAPHS.

Take a strongly-printed photograph on paper and saturate it from the back with a rag dipped in castor oil. Carefully rub off all excess from the surface after obtaining thorough transparency. Take a piece of glass an inch larger all round than the print, pour upon it dilute gelatine, and then squeeze the print and glass together. Allow it to dry, and then work in artists' oil colors from the back until you get the proper effect from the front. Both landscapes and portraits can be effectively colored by the above method without any great skill being required.

PAINTED FURNITURE.

In the days when every young lady is supposed to give her personal attention to furnishing her own room, nobody need hesitate to try her hand at painting her own chairs and bedstead, dressing-case and table. Tube paints may be used for the decorative work, and ordinary paint for the coarser parts. Backgrounds and scarlet, blue or pale-yellow decorations are pretty, and pale blue and pink have a good effect when the carpets and curtains correspond in tint. Imitating chestnut or any other wood is in bad taste. If you cannot have genuine expensive articles, be satisfied with those which make no pretensions.

Our Enormous Consumption of Timber.

In pleading for the protection and perpetuation of forests, the Lumberman's Gazette gives some interesting particulars of the amount of timber consumed every year in this country. "We have now," it says, "about 90,000 miles of railroad; the annual consumption for ties or sleepers alone is 40,000,000, or thirty years' growth of 75,000 acres. To fence these roads would require at least 130,000 miles of fence, which would cost $45,000,000 to build, and take at least $15,000,000 annually to keep in repair. We have 75,000 miles of wire, which requires in its putting up 800,000 trees, while the annual repairs must take 300,000 more. The little, insignificant lucifer match consumes annually in its manufacture 300,000 cubic feet of the finest pine. The bricks that are annually baked require 2,000,000 cords of wood, which would sweep the timber clean from 50,000 acres. Shoe-pegs are quite as important an article as matches or bricks, and to make the required annual supply consumes 100,000 cords of fine timber, while the manufacture of lasts and boot-trees takes 500,000 cords of maple, beech and birch, and about the same amount is required for plane-stocks and the handles of tools. The packing boxes made in the United States in 1874 amounted to $12,000,000, while the timber manufactured into agricultural implements, wagons, etc., is more than $100,000,000. The farm and rural fences of the country consume an immense amount of lumber and timber annually, but, as we grow older as a nation, this consumption may, and probably will, be reduced by the more general use of live fences or hedges. Our consumption of timber is not only daily on the increase, but our exportation of timber is also rapidly increasing. Our staves go by the million to France annually, walnut, oak, maple and pine to England, and spars and docking timber to China and Japan."

BEFORE the recent marriage festival of the daughter of Prince Frederick William of Prussia, it was thought advisable to test the strength of the floor of the great reception room of the new palace at Potsdam. With that view, a number of soldiers were ordered to enter it in double file, and, to their great surprise, were then ordered to dance the polka. They at first considered the matter as a joke, but as the strains of the band gave them encouragement they went through both a polka and a galop. The floor was found satisfactory.

Windom's Wasted Millions.

It is not often that a public man whose whole Congressional career has been illustrated by extravagance, and who is personally responsible for a large part of the reckless appropriations of the Senate, sets up a claim to be an economist, and seeks to deprive others who have done their best to effect some retrenchment in the loose public expenditures of their fairly earned credit. Mr. Windom, who has long been Chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, where, backed by a majority of his political friends, he has exercised absolute control over all the regular bills for carrying on the Government, has undertaken this new character.

The Republican Congressional Committee has issued a "supplement" and spread it broadcast over the West, in which Mr. Windom assumes to explain away the reductions made in the last and present Congress, and do deny the results which were achieved after the House of Representatives had passed out of Republican hands through the tidal wave of 1874. Every observer of affairs in the last three years, when, owing to the general distress, attention has been more fixed on these subjects than usual, knows that an immense saving has been effected in all branches of the public service since the power of the Republican party was broken in Congress by the loss of the House; and, if one cause more than another contributed to that remarkable change, it was the abuse of power in voting away the people's money, and the corrupt objects to which it was appropriated. The people in their wrath took the first weapon they could find to break the head of the party that was guilty of these wrongs, and Massachusetts was more conspicuous than any other in electing the Democratic ticket, in order to emphasize her indignation at the prodigality and open venality of successive Republican Congresses.

It was no love for the Democracy that led to that phenomenal change in politics, but a resolute purpose to sweep away into disgrace and exile the men who had prostituted their trusts to selfish uses, and to admonish the party which had tolerated them that there must be an end to that sort of corrupt rule. These facts are familiar to the whole country, and yet Mr. Windom tries to break their force by misrepresenting the actual good that has been accomplished, in spite of his constant, bitter, and unqualified opposition, which the majority of the Senate always sustained, and which the departments supported with false and exaggerated statements.

Take a few illustrations, which are fresh, and easily disproven if any way erroneous. A comparison of the last three years with a Democratic House, and the preceding three years when the Republicans had full swing, will show the difference in the appropriations actually made, as follows:

Republican.		Democratic.
1874	$181,567,054.81	1877	$145,997,956.72
1875	177,379,473.77	1878	140,384,606.95
1876	172,920,205.33	1879	157,213,933.77
Total	$531,866,733.91	Total	$443,596,497.44

Here is a plain reduction, which no sophistry can destroy, of $88,270,236.47 in the eleven great bills for the support of the Government. But these figures, imposing as they are, by no means represent the economy sought to be achieved in the last three years. The bills for these same objects, as they passed the House, were:

For the fiscal year 1877	$138,080,856.68
For the fiscal year 1878	131,309,307.37
For the fiscal year 1879	147,687,739.94
Total	$417,077,903.99

It is thus seen, by deducting the bills passed by the House from the appropriations actually made, that if the Senate had accepted them there would have been a further reduction of $26,518,593.45. When these bills went to the Senate, Mr. Windom and his political associates increased them as follows:

1877	$157,419,757.36
1878	148,988,795.75
1879	161,852,369.41
Total	$468,260,922.52
Deduct same bills as passed House for these years as above	417,077,903.99
Increase by Senate	$ 51,183,018.53

There is no possible escape from this showing, which proves that after the lesson of 1874, and the hard times since 1873, the Republican party has either learned nothing, or is unwilling to run outside of the old ruts. But for the Senate, led in this matter by Mr. Windom, there would have been a great reduction and a corresponding diminution of public burdens. As it was, the House was unable to carry out its policy, and consequently more than $26,500,000 were added to the expenditures, every dime of which and much more, too, by a reduction of the army, ought to have been saved. It is evident that, in the role of an economist, the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is not a great success, and he will not succeed in deceiving many people this year with his million or more of manufactured "supplements."

The Grant Movement Frosted.

Besides shelving Blaine as a candidate for President, driving little Eugene Hale to the shades of private life, waking up ancient Hamlin from a Rip Van Winkle sleep, and demoralizing the Republican party on the eve of the fall elections, the result in Maine has had another effect, which has not been taken into account. It has blasted the Grant movement with an early frost, from which recovery is hardly probable. Mr. Blaine recently declared for it, as reflecting the sentiment of a present majority of the Republican party, and other men of prominence have been helping it with all their influence in the most effective way.

That a regular campaign for a third term was organized and directed with skill on their side, seconded by Grant's efforts in Europe, no longer admits of the least doubt. If the scheme was not planned before he went abroad, it has certainly taken shape and been industriously worked up in the last eight or ten months, with the artful appliances known to shrewd politicians. Grant himself is cunning, and did not require much instruction after the general plan was marked out. A part of the programme was that he should come home by way of California, and be greeted with a series of preconcerted receptions, on the largest possible scale, from San Francisco to New York.

Though quite willing to take any ordinary chances promising success, Grant has an innate dread of defeat, and has no inclination to be the scapegoat of others, or to lead a forlorn hope. He will not need to be told that with the foundation of the Republican party in New England undermined by a defection that cannot be repaired in time for 1880, if ever, he would be beaten as no other candidate has ever been, if nominated two years hence. The popular repugnance to a third term, and the corruption, ring rule, and robberies of Grantism, would have crushed him in any event, had he possessed far more strength than his friends have ever claimed.

But this upheaval in Maine, which is the first blast of an angry storm that will carry all before it in other States, is an admonition which no man like Grant is likely to disregard. He will be told that the capitalists of the country, the national banks, and the railroad corporations will all unite upon him, and that their union means an election at any price. His instincts and his personal associations and his tastes being all in this direction, he will accept this assurance as in the main true, the wish being father to the thought.

Tempting as the suggestion is, it has drawbacks. A combination of wealth and corporate power would lead almost necessarily to a union of popular elements, against which they could not stand, and might provoke a condition of things which all good men would deplore in any political contest. Capital is naturally conservative, and would depart from safe moorings if it ever consented to engage in a struggle like that proposed. National banks depend upon Congress for their charters, and on the people for their support. Railroad corporations have no strength to sacrifice in politics, and are in no condition to invite risks.

When Gen. Grant comes to reflect on the surroundings of the next Republican candidate, he will be very apt to conclude that discretion is the better part of valor, and refuse to be put up merely to be knocked down like a nine-pin. Should he, from any weakness, yield to the temptation, and allow himself to be conquered by the politicians, his career will probably close in clouds, like those which darkened it before the great opportunity came that rescued him from ruin, and worse. The next Republican candidate will be the last under the existing organization. An overwhelming defeat will lead to a new formation, out of which may grow a great party in the future, when their opponents shall have run in the beaten track of success and proven their incapacity to bear it.—New York Sun.

Robeson to the Front.

The brazen and notorious Robeson has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the First district of New Jersey. In his speech of acceptance, the man whom Whitthorne's committee has apparently demonstrated to be the biggest corruptionist of the Grant corruption period said "the Republican party has been the bread and meat of my political life"—which is an undeniable truth; but when he added that he was ready to vindicate Grant's administration, those who nominated him must have had doubts in their minds about the possibility of even Robeson carrying out that contract. If he is elected, the fact will have to be taken as evidence that "Jersey justice is altogether as eccentric and astonishing as "Jersey lightning."—Chicago Times.

The Trombone in America.

The history of trombone playing in this country is a sad and suggestive one. In 1817, one Elias Brewster, of Boston, announced his intention of learning the trombone, and began to practice in a house in the then-lower end of Beacon street. Long before he had learned the seven positions of the slide he was found dead in his front hall, with the instrument lying much battered beside him. A Coroner's jury of the vicinage found that he died of apoplexy, and after the funeral his ruined trombone was sold as old metal. Two years later another Bostonian, one G. L. Plunkett, undertook to master the trombone. Three weeks after he had sounded his first note he was found dead in his room, with the trombone slide inserted in his mouth, thereby horribly distending his jaws. The verdict in his case was suicide, though at this distance of time the facts do not seem to admit of any such interpretation.

These occurrences put an end to trombone playing in Massachusetts. It was, however, attempted in various other parts of the country. In 1832 Henry Van Schaick, of this city, tried to learn the trombone, but died so suddenly that the Coroner's jury found that he had poisoned himself. Perhaps he did, but why did he first smash his instrument and imbrue it in the blood of the back of his head? In 1837, 1841 and 1849 three other men, named respectively Abrahams, Palmer and Escheubrodt, died in this city in the earlier stages of trombone playing, and in each case their trombones were irretrievably smashed at or about the time of death. In Illinois, a man who resided in a country town, and who had a trombone sent to him from an Eastern city, was taken out by his neighbors and hung on a tree.—New York paper.

MR. GEORGE LEWIS, a very successful London solicitor, has just leased three enormous houses near the new law courts for his business. The magnitude of this business can be conjectured when his staff of clerks and employes numbers 250. Mr. Lewis has a grand mansion in Portland place, between the Langham and Regent's Park. His office receipts are said to reach £50,000 yearly.

SOME SNAKE STORIES.

Rattlesnakes, Black Snakes, Cottonmouth Snakes, and a Frightful Monster.

[From Forest and Stream.]

Of the mortal enmity existing between the black snake and the rattlesnake, two instances have come under my notice, in each of which the rattlesnake proved an arrant coward, making a great noise, while the black snake did all the fighting—if I may call it fighting; it was rather a strangling and a squeezing. My attention was aroused to it by the rattlesnake passing close to me, paying no attention to my presence, but endeavoring to get away from something in pursuit, his rattles springing to their loudest note. I was in the act of throwing the gun up to stop him, when the black snake passed like a flash, going five yards to the rattlesnake's one, and the way he seized the rattlesnake by the back of the neck and went round him was something wonderful.

My experience with the king snake and the moccasin runs through a course of thirteen years, and in that time I have seen the king snake get outside of the moccasin many times. When the king first seizes his prey he coils around it until they are almost like a ball, turning occasionally and biting the coils of the moccasin. After being some time in the coil he will open out, and if the moccasin shows signs of life it receives another embrace. When life is extinct the king snake stretches out its victim and begins at the head. It takes some time to gorge, especially if the one going inside is about as large as the one crawling outside.

[From the Hardin (Ky.) Gazette.]

One dark night recently three men who dwell near Caseyville, on the Kentucky side of the Ohio, started to go over the river in a skiff that had been against the bank for some days. The oarsmen pulled vigorously for the other shore. When about sixty yards from the bank the man in the bow heard the hiss of a rattlesnake in the boat. In a flash the oars were stopped and all sat listening, and not a sound was heard. The skiff was pulled across to Caseyville, and there the man at the stern sprung into the water, afraid to go through the boat. Procuring a lantern at the hotel, they went down to examine the boat, and found a rattlesnake with eleven rattles coiled under the oarsman's seat.

[From the Kingston (N. Y.) Courier.]

Mr. James L. Dubois, who has built nearly half of Marlborough village, N. Y., paid a visit to his brother Isaac on the Lattintown road. Returning home toward nightfall he came by way of Graves' dye works, and as he was passing the upper pond a large spotted snake sprung up from behind a clump of bushes and bit him under the right eye. Mr. Dubois grasped the reptile by the neck and hurled it from him, but as he grasped it the snake fastened its fangs in Mr. Dubois under the ear. On his reaching home remedies were applied, and by midnight the swelling on his face and neck had been reduced. Yesterday he was still suffering severely, but no fatal results are anticipated.

[From the Columbia (S. C.) Spectator.]

Ed Squires informs us that there is a snake of tremendous size in our neighborhood, supposed to have escaped from some menagerie. It has been seen by a number of persons, and it is said to be about ten feet in length, and as large around as a man's thigh. Farmers will not work in undergrowth for fear of being attacked by this monster.

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

Miss Lydia Rusk, of Jefferson City, Mo., was bitten by a snake of the cottonmouth species. While picking up some wood for the kitchen fire, she felt a scratch on the forefinger of the right hand. During the morning she frequently bathed the wounded finger and applied some simple household remedies for such pains. Two hours later another of the family went for more wood, and discovered a serpent was lurking there. On a more particular examination it was found that two scratches or punches had been made an inch and a half apart, one on each side of the middle knuckle of the finger. The usual antidotes were administered.

[From the Columbus (Ga.) Times.]

A gentleman connected with the North and South railroad was overlooking the work of some hands who were clearing away some brush on the road near Mulberry creek. As one of the hands was knocking away briars with a spade a huge moccasin fell out of the bushes, and, dropping near the negro's foot, immediately wrapped himself about one of his legs. The snake struck at the man several times, but the spade acted as a shield, and the man's companions killed the reptile. His fangs were one inch long.

A Dog With a Bustle.

A thrilling occurrence is reported from Evanston, Ill., and, as it is probably the first instance on record in which the bustle of lovely woman became an implement of crime, the case is thus immortalized by an exchange. There was a boy in that town named Daley. The boy had a dog, which he was accustomed to take with him on his daily excursions to certain suburban pasture fields to drive home the cows. On the 6th inst. young Daily found on his way to the pasture something white and mysterious. He did not know what it was, but it was too beautiful to throw away, and the happy thought struck him that it might be intended as an ornamental portable awning for a dog. So he called his dog and tied the gay device around his body just behind the forelegs. This held the wavy frills of the tournure aloft like a canopy. Thus caparisoned, the dog pranced along gayly in front of his master to where the cows were quietly grazing in the field. Immediately there was wild commotion. The cows knew in a general way something about dogs, but an animal, half dog and half bird, with a towering banner of whalebone and wire and muslin floating in the summer wind, was to them a new and terrifying spectacle. They eyed the approaching terror a moment, then tossed their heads, turned tail and broke in a wild stampede for town. The frantic herd burst from the end of the lane into the main road just as a grave and serious ex-minister of the gospel, whose sands of life had nearly run, etc., came driving along. Him the cows heeded not. The dog, with his phenomenal attachment waving up and down, was behind, and they cared for nothing in front. One jumped across between the horse and the vehicle, two others dashed against the wheels, capsized the rider into a ditch full of muddy water, and left the buggy standing on its beam ends with two wheels in the air. Then the horse caught sight of the dog and ran after the cows, smashing the vehicle to atoms and distributing it along about two miles of the public highway. The cows, reinforced by the flying steed, carried the village like an invading army, and such was the terror and surprise of the people that they have since done little else but talk about it. The minister crawled out of the ditch and began legal proceedings against the boy, who came into town by a side street, and slipped up the back stairs supperless to bed. The dog with the bustle saw that he had overdone the thing and crept under a barn. The problem that absorbs Evanston is where to classify the crime of that boy under the statutes of Illinois.

MEETING.

Many years have floated by
Since we parted, she and I.
Now together here we stand,
Eye to eye and hand to hand.
I can hear her trembling sighs,
See the sweetness in her eyes,
Silently I hold and press
Her soft hand with tenderness.
Silence, who shall fathom thee?
Who reveal the mystery
Hidden between loving eyes,
Burning hands, and answering sighs?

Ericsson's New Torpedo Boat.

Capt. Ericsson, the inventor of the Monitor, which revolutionized the system of naval warfare almost as completely as gunpowder changed that of armies, has now built and launched a torpedo boat, against which he believes the stoutest ironclads will be perfectly helpless. It will not depend upon surprising its antagonists, and therefore be absolutely neutralized, as all existing torpedo boats are now liable to be, by a sufficiency of vigilance and light, and will not require the combined attack of a fleet of boats in which the most may be sacrificed at the chance of the success of one. On the contrary, it is strong enough to make its attack by daylight and alone, and to defy, with more than reasonable chance of impunity, the heaviest projectile that can be brought against it. The Ericsson torpedo boat is so constructed that but the smallest portion appears above water, and that is of such strength and shape that no known projectile will be able to affect it. The torpedoes themselves are supplied with such motive power by compressed air that they go with the rapidity of a shot, and with a force such as no netting or protective device that would not be entirely too cumbrous to use could withstand. This irresistibility of attack and destruction is what Capt. Ericsson believes he has accomplished, and his practical success in other matters, as well as deservedly high reputation as a scientific inventor, are guarantees that he has succeeded in some very important degree, if not to the extent which he claims. If it is so, the immense ironclad fleets of the world will be practically as useless as were wooden vessels of war after the invention of the Monitor. Already in the race between projectiles and armor the former are considerably ahead, and nothing but the discovery of some new method of making iron more resistible at its present weight can bring the defensive power again in advance. The invention of such a torpedo boat as that of Capt. Ericsson throws armor still farther in the rear, and threatens to strip the heavy plating almost entirely from the war ship of the future, and to call for new qualities of speed rather than immovable strength; and, until something to neutralize it is invented, to make naval warfare in a great measure impossible by its very destructiveness. It will be strange if it is twice given in the life of a peaceful inventor to revolutionize the naval warfare of [illegible]ized world, and to compel [illegible] nations to twice rebuild [illegible].—Providence (R. I.) Journal.

We trust every Democrat will go to the polls and vote the straight ticket.

Democrats should remember that every Republican officer elected in this county, helps to sustain the present ruinous policy of the Republican party

The 13th district promises to send Hon. Jno. B. Stoll to Congress this year, notwithstanding Baker is impressed with the idea that 2200 republican majority still exists.

For County Commissioners the Democracy present Messrs. Kelham and Shoub, both men of exellent busines qualifications. The office of Commissioner is one of the most important in the county, and should be filled by none other than careful, judicious men, who have a knowledge of the wants and necessities of the county, and who will protect the interests of the taxpayers. Our candidates fill the bill. Vote for them.

The radicals have committed a great outrage in so apportioning the state for legislative and congressional purposes as to give the minority the preponderance. By virtue of this infamous gerrymander, 212,000 democrats only elect four members of congress. In order to obtain a majority in the legislature the democrats must carry the state by 12,000 to 15,000 majority. Let fair-minded men think of this when they vote next Tuesday.

ELECTION LAW:

The following section of the act relative to elections, passed by the last general assembly, is specially important to the voters of Indiana:

Section 7. Any political party having candidates, or a candidate to be voted for at any election, may be represented by two qualified voters of such precinct in the room where the votes are counted, who may witness the counting of the vote, and remonstrate against any fraud or irregularity that may occur: Provided, That such persons shall conduct themselves in a quiet and orderly manner, and shall not unnecessarily interrupt the board in the discharge of their official duties. Said persons may be selected by the central committee of the county or township in which such precinct is located, or by the candidates to be voted for, or a majority of them, or by the voters of the respective parties.

FOR VICTORY.

But a few days remain until election, and the time should be devoted by every Democrat to thorough, earnest, hearty work for the success of the ticket, state, congressional and county. The election is certainly a very important one. In it the voters of Indiana pass their verdict upon the resumption law, and the other financial measures adopted by the Republican party. If they approve of the resumption law, of the demonetization of silver, of the coin act of 1869, and of all the measures adopted by the radical party, which have resulted in making money scarce and dear, and in depreciating all kinds of property, then elect the Republican ticket. The Republican newspapers and orators, having been driven into the discussion of these questions, have defended the record of their party upon the subject. A vote, therefore, for the Republican ticket is a vote endorsing the financial record of that party. If the Republicans should carry the state the verdict would be so construed by the country at large.

If the people of Indiana approve of the presidential conspiracy of 1876-77 which resulted in defrauding the country of its legally elected president and installing in the white house a man who had no moral legal right there, they will say so by electing the Democratic state ticket.

To the Democracy of DeKalb County:

On Tuesday next, you will be called upon to say, at the polls, whether a majority of the citizens shall be represented, or whether the principles of the Republican government shall be overturned by a corrupt minority. Your representation, both legislative and congressional, under the infamous gerrymandering law of 1872, is controlled by a decided minority. This law, by utterly subverting our system of representation, has disfranchised the majority by denying them their sacred right to control the legislation of our state and country. Such an insult to the franchise of our people should offer speedy rebuke. The history of Indiana's apportionment is, or should be, familiar to all. The laws upon this subject, passed by a Democratic legislature, were so manifestly just that the Republicans continued them on their statute books for over twelve years without change. The present iniquitous apportionment grew out of the rapid decline of the Republican party, which took this infamous step to perpetuate its power. For the past ten years the history of the Republican party has been one continued series of rings, frauds, mismanagement and corruption, in both state and national affairs. Under its control, congress has utterly failed or refused to pass a single law in the interest of the people. It has created thousands of unnecessary offices that partisan favorites might be rewarded at the expense of the people. It has continually legislated in the interests of the privileged few, acceding to all their demands. It has given away millions of acres of public domain to fraudulent scemers and speculators. It has developed within its own ranks the corrupt connection of some of its bighest officials, at home and abroad, with most gigantic and indefensible frauds and speculations. It has robbed the people by class legislation and otherwise as though robbery were essential to good government; it has taxed the people as though excessive taxation were necessary to public credit and individual prosperity. It fraudulently deprived the people of their choice for President and Vice-President, thus perpetrating the greatest political crime of the century. It has outraged and insulted the American people by placing in positions of honor and trust perjured and dishonest men as reward for their villainy in defeating the will of the majority. It has placed crime at a premium by appointing to official positions men who stand before the world professed criminals. It has, practically, denied the citizen justice in many cases by forcing him to assert his rights in the U. S. Courts, away from the cheap and convenient courts of his county, as in the case of national banks. It has impoverished the people and imposed unnecessary burden by squandering the public revenues to an amount equal to the national debt. It has prevented a Democratic house of representatives from giving relief to the people by opposing with vote and veto every act introduced in their behalf. And now, in the present campaign, as a fitting act to terminate its existence, they propose all manner of bargain, sale and co-opperation with disaffected elements, to defeat again the will of the people. Broad and open propositions of shameless bargains and sales are to be made. Men have been sent to join third party organizations for the purpose of inducing Democrats to join. Republicans have been nominated by third parties, when in truth and in fact they are pledged to Republican policy. Instructions have gone out from their committees to make such combinations as will defeat the Democracy in both legislative and executive departments. While the Democracy can point with pride to what they have accomplished for the people through one branch of congress in so short a time—especially the remonetization of silver; the reduction of public expenses eighty-five millions of dollars. Their continued fight for the people on the financial questions and against all class legislation prevented the further contraction of the currency. It must be known to all that this was accomplished against the almost united opposition of a Republican senate, and that now is the time for the people to arouse and by their votes endorse their faithful servants and condemn those who opposed legislation to the interest of the people. Nothing can be accomplished without labor, energy and vigilance against such unscrupulous and corrupt opponents as the Republican leaders. Every energy should be exercised to accomplish success. No expectation should be entertained that other counties will make up for loss in our own. No small spites or petty jealousies should come between you and your duty as a voter and freeman. Remember that only by deception can the Democracy, with its certain majority, be beaten. Be sleepless and vigilant, and see that no one remains away from the polls whose attendance might be secured by your endeavors. The success of our county ticket depends upon active work by each and every Democrat in the county, see to it that no work is left undone on election day, listen to no man's blarney concerning any individual condidate on the ticket, for such opposition is always caused by some personal spite which should never enter into the canvass to jeopardize the success of the whole ticket. DeKalb county is good for 500 Democratic majority if all hands go to work with a determined effort.

BAKER AND THE SOLDIERS.

Letter From Col. A. Poe.

To the Soldiers of Marshal County.

About the time when the Hon. J. H. Baker was around soliciting election as congressman from this district, [illegible] of us signed a petition requesting him to introduce a bill granting to each soldier of the late war, and to the heirs of our dead comrads a land warrant for 160 acres of land for each honorable discharge held from the service of the United States. This petition I forwarded to Mr. Baker, and with it a personal appeal begging for it his earnest and hearty efforts. I wrote again urging the matter upon his immediate attention. On the evening of the 23rd inst., J. H. Baker was again around begging for votes. I went to him before he made his speech and told him that a number of the soldiers who had joined me in the petition sent him, were present, that we desired to know what had been done and what our prospects were in this matter. Hon. J. H. Baker beat Hon. Artemas Ward in display of patriotism. He had sent an adopted uncle, grandfather or cousin dear to him as the apple of his eye, (a boo hoo came in here) whom he had reared and educated in his own profession, and this dear relative was entirely killed. Of course he was a friend of the soldier. He had introduced a bill carrying out our wishes, that bill had been referred to some committee on something, and in that ignominious grave of shifted responsibility it had laid these many years. The Honorable gentleman, now that he again wanted our votes, had hopes of its eventual resurrection. After all public lands are exhausted, which are worth having, after nothing is left but sage brush plantations and alkali lands to locate on, then we may have warrants. If warrants were now granted us they would have a market value. The money which we would receive if we wanted to sell our warrants would encourage extravagance among us. If we are compelled to wait until the Hon. J. H. Baker's committee is ready, our warrants when received will be worthless and incapable of nurturing extravagance among us. How nice, oh, how nice! Allow me to say that I am not satisfied with Hon. J. H. Baker as the friend and champion of soldiers, and that I shall not vote for his re-election. Other signers of our petition will exercise their own judgment in the premises, but I know that Jonny will miss many a vote which once was given him.

ANDREW POE.

Plymouth, Ind., Sept. 27, 1878.

Up and at Them.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

A few more days and the die will be cast. A few more days and the freemen of Indiana will determine at the ballot-box whether or not they will remain slaves of the radical leaders.—These leaders and some who have passed away did in 1872 bind the people of Indiana hand and foot. They passed an apportionment law which makes it impossible for the majority to rule unless the majority be overwhelming. This law—a legacy left by the dead Morton to his party—stands between the people and their rights. It must be annihilated. It must be torn up, root and branch, and cast into outer darkness. It is a blot upon the statute book, and it must be obliterated. This can and will be done.

The Democratic camp fires are burning brightly. The country is ablaze from the lakes to the Ohio and from the eastern border of the state to the Wabash river. Hendricks and Voorhees, McDonald and Landers, Manson and Gooding, with many gallant lieutenants, are on the war path, and the enemy is being driven to his last line of defense. He will capitulate on the 8th of October and surrender his colors to the victorious Democracy. Democrats, "up and at them."

Hon. John. B. Stoll, candidate for congress in this district, has made an able canvass in the interest of the people. His telling speech and the convincing argument produced in his paper (The Banner) from time to time, proves his ability to show up the treachery and mendacity of radicalism. His thorough knowledge of the issues agitating the public mind at the present time will enable him to cope with his adversaries in the halls of congress, and assist in reversing the machinery that is now grinding and pulverizing American industry to be strewed as a fertilizer of capital and monopoly. His foot will go down upon radical infamy, Sherman's hellish and ruinous financial policy will be obliterated, treason to the constitution and laws will be made odious, and confidence and prosperity will be restored if within the power of John B. Stoll, when he goes to congress, which he surely will.

GARRETT, IND., Sept. 30, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER:—We find in your COURIER of Sept. 26th, a short communication from Butler, somewhat criticizing the politics of Garrett, saying that they did not seem to be very well defined. While this may be the case, we will for the benefit of your correspondent from Butler as well as others in this county who may not be familiar with the political history of Garrett, mention a few facts in the way of explanation in reference to the said communication, which reads as follows:

BUTLER, IND., Sept. 24, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER:—Considerable difference exists here between democrats and republicans as to the probable vote of Garrett at the county election. The change in political sentiment at that place from the State election in 1876 to the township election last spring, leads many to believe that the "politics" of said town are not very well definded. Will some one in Garrett give us the probable vote through the columns of the COURIER. CITIZEN.

The writer of the above in speaking of the change in the political sentiment of this place, is evidently not aware of the fact, that the political sentiment of the citizens of this place has never changed in the least, though the vote at the Pesidential election in the fall of 1876 varied considerable from that of the county election of the same fall. When after the county election a democratic majority of 63 was sent to the Clerk's office from this township, the radical republicans were very busy in fault finding against their brethren here claiming they had not done their duty, which induced one of their leaders, at that time a prominent railroad official to make a promise, that at all hazzards he would see that majority reduced by half at the Presidential election, whereupon the said official, being an unscrupulous politician, that would in all cases make the ends justify the means, set to work at once, and by abusing the power and influence vesting in him by his official station, kept out and sent out on the road a goodly number of democratic voters, and by that and other equally dishonorable means, which could not be avoided by the democrats, effected a reduction of the democratic majority to 41 at the Presidential election. Then at the township election of last spring that same official, although having been previously relieved of his high R. R. office, and consequently having come down a limb or two, seemed to have in place of power, snake tongue enough to draw in and persuade several other R. R. officials and foremen, to so far forget themselves as to assist him and follow his example of two years ago, which, like obedient servants, they did to a disgraceful extent, handing their subordinates their tickets and ordering them out in squads like slaves to go and deposit them in the ballot box. By these means—as well as the shameful transaction of Orin C. Clark, present trustee of Keyser township, who some time previous to his election went around among the citizens of Garrett and under false pretenses and promises collected from them some seventy dollars in money, ostensibly for the purpose of getting a road opened to effect a thoroughfare due north of this town, about which the Garrett Herald man, ever ready to sanction and aid any political trickery, made a great blow before, as well as Mr. Clark himself, on the day of election, trying to show the public spirit of that gentleman, when at the same time, as we have good reason to suppose, the money so collected had been spent for electioneering purposes as the road to this day has not been opened, nor the money refunded to the doners—thus the result of the township election of last spring was effected. As to the approaching election we will refrain from any attempt at giving the probable vote, but will say, that in accordance with the time honored rule that "all is vanity" our prominent R. R. official of two years ago has since our spring election come down several more limbs, without a shadow of moral or financial gain for his trickery. So ended the career of that prominent man, who, while digging graves for others, fell into one himself: and while we do not wish to see fate serve some of the rest of the officers and foreman, who were his assistants, in a similar manner, we hope they have profited by the example, if not, they must also expect to suffer the consequences, because we intend to be wide awake here and determined that in spite of all the Clarks, Morse's, Hopkinses, Clarksons, Lores, Galloways, etc., no undue influence shall be brought to bear, but every citizen, high or low, rich or poor shall have an opportunity to cast his ballot in accordance with his own sentiment, let the result be what it will, and the party that has been in the habit of resorting to unreasonable, disgraceful means to gain their ends, will find themselves come out considerably short. NOTICE.

The grand fair of our Catholic friends is now open; no one should miss seeing the display. We call especial attention to the fine goods and fancy work donated by the ladies. The amusements will contine during the week, ending October 5th. Remember the contest for the gold-headed cane to be presented to the most popular man of Auburn. On Saturday the drawing of the gift distribution will take place. Secure your tickets. A first-class dinner and supper will be served every day during the week for the low price of 25 cents. Come one, come all, and spend your time pleasantly. COM.

Quite a number of persons, probably seventy-five, started to the State Fair last Tuesday morning, taking advantage of the excursion rates; nearly one half of whom were old settlers, those who have resided in the county since January 1st, 1846. Mr. W. H. Dills secured free passage for seven pioneers, being those over 70 years of age and 40 years in the state, who will attend the State Pioneer Convention. The following are their names: Mrs. Lucy Aldrich, A. S. Casebeer, Samuel Headly, of Butler, Jeremiah Rhodes, Samuel Wason, of Spencerville, Ezra Dickinson of Mt. Hope and Samuel Jones, of Waterloo.

DIED—On Friday, Sept. 27th, 1878, at Waterloo, Miss Disco May, daughter of J. D. and Mary A. McAnNally, aged 18 years, 2 months and 28 days.

She was in full possession of her senses at the time of her death and bade her relatives good-bye, requesting that she be buried at Auburn. Her burial took place here on Saturday, six young ladies acting as pall-bearers. The bereaved family return many thanks for the kindness shown by many warm friends.

Owing to the depressed condition of the times and the immense stock of piece goods just received at Yesbera's, he has put prices down to astonish everybody. The following are a few prices:

Business suits from	$18.00 to $25.00
English Worsted dress suits from	32.00 to 36.00
Dress pants from	5.00 to 9.00
Beaver overcoats from	20.00 to 26.00
Fine dress overcoats	25.00

He guarantees a perfect fit in every suit made by him.

At the commencement of the present campaign it was agreed by the papers of this county, that no personalities relative to any candidate should be indulged in by any of said papers, and we call our readers as witnesses that we have strictly adhered to that agreement. This is the last issue before the election, and not one personal remark has been made against any candidate, and our cotemporaries have generally maintained the same position.

The Catholic Fair commenced Tuesday night with flattering prospects, among those present were J. J. Van-Auken, surveyor, G. H. K. Moss, clerk. Rev. A. Young realized 65 cents on a cigar curiosity, and Mr. Hoff, the new grocery $1.25 on a doll baby show. It only cost Mr. C. Beugnot a Mexican dollar to see the curiosity. Mr. H. and those two young ladies were to blame for some being disappointed at the oyster table. The fair will continue during the week.

To The Citizens of DeKalb County.

EDITOR COURIER:—In reply to an article published in this week's issue of the "Waterloo Press," relative to my acts as guardian of the person and estate of one Mary Hood, and my official acts as county Treasurer for the past two years, I desire to say:

1. That my former statement in your paper regarding said guardianship is true and correct, that I am willing to furnish affidavit to each and every item refered to, and that the records in the Clerk's office will fully substantiate the same.

2. That I have not as county Treasurer protested any county orders, when there was funds in the Treasury for the payment of the same. It is well known a large per cent. of each installment is paid within a few days previous to close of tax-paying time, and as no Treasurer can ascertain the amount of county funds which will be paid in during said time, and as the Treasurer's settlement immediately follows the time of paying tax, therefore settlements sometimes show a certain amount of county funds on hand, when the facts are that the whole amount has always been immediately paid out after settlement, as the books in this office will show.

3. That at my June settlement 1878, there was a fund of $1800 to pay out on jail bonds, and that all of the interest for the year 1877 on said bonds had not been paid at that time, and that the remainder of said interest for 1877, amounting to four or five hundred dollars was paid within a few days after said settlement, and that the remainder of said fund was applied on the only bond then due as soon as I was authorized to pay the same.

In conclusion I will say that as these accusation against me have been withheld until the last issue of the republican papers of the county, before the election, time will not permit me to enter fully into the details of each charge, but I challenge a careful and candid examination of the records, facts and figures.

Respectfully yours
DANIEL GONSER.

—We shall expect our democratic friends in the several townships to bring in the returns as soon as the ballots are counted out. The COURIER office will be open all night. The township Committeemen will please remember this, and see that the result of the election is forwarded at once.

* * * "Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day."—Milton.

Shall we meet no more, my love, at the binding of the sheaves,
In the happy harvest field, as the sun sinks low,
When the orchard paths are dim with the drift of fallen leaves,
As the reapers sing together in the mellow misty eves?—
Oh, happy are the apples when the south winds blow!

Love met us in the orchard ere the corn had gathered plume—
Oh, happy are the apples when the south winds blow!
Sweet as summer days that die when the months are in their bloom;
When the [illegible] are ripe with sunset, like the tassels of the broom
In the happy harvest fields as the sun sinks low.

Sweet as summer days that die, leafing sweeter each to each—
Oh, happy are the apples when the south winds blow!
All the heart was full of feeling; Love had ripened into speech,
Like the sap that turns to nectar in the velvet of the peach,
In the happy harvest fields as the sun sinks low.

Sweet as summer days that die at the ripening of the corn—
Oh, happy are the apples when the south winds blow!
Sweet as lover's fickle oaths sworn to faithless maids foresworn,
When the rusty orchard breathes like a mellow drinking horn
Over happy harvest fields as the sun sinks low.

Love left us at the dying of the mellow autumn eves—
Oh, happy are the apples when the south winds blow!
When the skies are ripe and fading, like the colors of the leaves,
And the reapers kiss and part at the binding of the sheaves
In the happy harvest fields as the sun sinks low.

Then the reapers gathered home from the gray and misty meres—
Oh, happy are the apples when the south winds blow!—
Then the reapers gather home, and they bear upon their spears
Love whose face is like the moon's fallen pale among the spheres,
With the daylight's blight upon it as the sun sinks low.

Faint as far-off bugles blowing soft and low the reapers sung—
Oh, happy are the apples when the south winds blow!
Sweet as summer in the blood when the heart is ripe and young,
Love is sweetest in the dying, like the sheaves he lies among
In the happy harvest fields as the sun sinks low.

UNCLE DAVY'S STAFF.

"Well, Jane, have you made up your mind? I leave the matter entirely in your hands."

My husband looked across the table at me, and held a glass of wine between him and the light, screwing up his eyes as he examined the color.

We were sitting at dessert in the old dining-room at Turton, the dark-polished mahogany table reflecting the bright faces of our six children. Two by me—the eldest who was so like his father, and the youngest who could not eat tidily, and wanted mamma to cut up his orange and wipe his mouth; opposite, by Ronald, were the two little ones with curly heads and mischievous fingers, who were sailing orange-boats in the purple finger-glass, and coaxing papa to make more. The girls were one on each side; the elder one peering at me with her great blue eyes, and evidently wondering whatever it was that mamma was to make up her mind about. I was just going to answer when I caught her curious gaze, and then I stopped.

"I'll tell you all about it when the children go off to bed," I said.

Lucy dropped her head with a blank expression of disappointment, which Ronald observed with infinite amusement. There was a little nod across the table to me, and a whisper about little pitchers having long ears, which made Lucy blush. Presently we went to the drawing-room, and the children began to romp, at the conclusion of which I carried off the youngest to the nursery; and before I came down again I went for a moment into my little morning-room and sat down over the fire—I wanted to think.

People said I was a fortunate and a happy woman, and so I was. Our home was one of those fair English halls standing amid its own far-spreading grounds and rich farms. I could match my husband and children against the best and noblest in the land; and yet I had plenty to make me ofttimes thoughtful, and sometimes sad. There is a cross in every lot, and mine lay in the future—not my own, but my children's.

My father-in-law had been an extravagant man, who had drained the entailed estate as near as he could. My husband, with a moderately large income, had many claims on his purse, and, moreover, with scrupulous honor, applied every available sum to the payment of his father's debts. We had a large family; the eldest one was provided for by the entail. But, if this went on, what could we do for the other little ones? Over and over again I had tried to bring the matter seriously before Ronald, but a careless security in the future was a part of his natural disposition, and I could not persuade him to make any real effort for their benefit. Invariably he said: "Just wait till I pay Saunders and Bolton, and then we will begin to lay by." And I had to think sadly of my own poor portion of [illegible],000 invested in shares in the County Bank, and hope and trust.

I was thinking more sadly to-night because my husband, who had just returned from a business visit to London, had met me with an unexpected proposal. He had fallen in with an old uncle who had spent the greater part of his life in India, toiling for the golden fortune that never came. Now, a decrepit old man and a confirmed invalid, he had expended the little he possessed and was actually in want. Ronald described his miserable lodging, told how much he suffered, and ended with a proposal that we should ask him to come and live at Turton. The kind thought was just like him; but I looked terribly grave when the idea was suggested, and opposed it violently. My woman's brain at once embraced the obstacles, and, it may be, exaggerated them.

"Think what a tie it would be," I said; "a third person to spoil our quiet evenings and readings aloud—a somebody to interfere with our walks and drives and dinners. The poor children would be hushed for fear of disturbing the invalid; I should have to give up my time to his amusement and comfort. Besides, think of the expense! We agreed to give up the carriage-horses; but that would be out of the question if he were here and could not walk or use the pony-phaeton. And we must have an extra man-servant to wait on him; and, if we used another set of rooms, we should require a second house-maid."

I drew such a melancholy picture of the consequences that my husband said at last:

"Well, my dear, please yourself; it shall be as you like. I only wish we could have made the old man comfortable; he was very kind to me when I was a school-boy."

So I sat in my room and planned how we could manage, gradually beginning to think I had been selfish in my opposition. I thought it might be arranged. I could give up this very morning-room for him to sit in, and let him sleep in the south room next door. Walters might wait upon him if the stable-boy helped in the pantry; and if we gave up the pretty pony-phaeton we might keep the brougham. As to the disarrangement of our family enjoyments, we must put up with it. The kindness would bring its own recompense, somehow.

I went down-stairs with a lighter heart, for I was conscious of a praiseworthy resolution; and, sending off the children to bed, knelt down by my husband's side, and said:

"Shall we write the invitation, Ronald?"

He answered me with a kiss and a brightening of the eye, which were almost enough recompense for the sacrifice.

The invitation was written, accepted, and, before the end of the fortnight, old Mr. David Turton—"Uncle Davy" as we called him—made his appearance.

I went out to meet him, and tried to give him a hearty welcome; but he was, seemingly, a very unamiable old man. His manner was short and snappish; his little grey eyes looked at me suspiciously, and, when he attempted to smile, he sneered sarcastically. I led him into the drawing-room, and offered to relieve him of his great-coat and stick. But, no; he growled at me as if I had taken an unpardonable liberty, and, setting his stick across his knees, leaned forward on it, and stared me full in the face. I tried to look unconcerned, but my cheeks had flushed, and my tone was sharp when I desired Lucy to run up stairs to the school-room.

The old man's eyes twinkled, and the sneering smile came to his lips.

"You are offended with me, madam," he said. "I beg your pardon, but my staff is an old friend—the best friend I have. I never allow it to leave my side."

He never did. By day it rested on his knees; by night it lay on the bed beside him. His brain had evidently been affected by his illness, and showed its disorder by a strange attachment to that wooden staff with its round knob for a handle. It was a perfect monomania.

I remember once one of my little boys seized it when he was dozing, and, converting it into a horse, raced up and down the room with it. Uncle Davy woke, and his anger knew no bounds. I ran out of the room with the child, imagining him in positive danger, and when I returned I found the old man sobbing and crying like an infant, with his head bent down on the much-loved staff. Truly Uncle Davy's stay at Turton was a sad trial to me. Over and over again I regretted that we had invited him; and so, I am sure, did Ronald, too. He said, at last, that we must seek him a lodging elsewhere; but the plan was hardly formed when the old man fell sick and died.

He had a lingering illness, and I watched beside him day and night. Then, for the first time, I found that he had formed a sort of attachment to me and the children, and given us a little corner of the heart that I had supposed to be wholly devoted to his staff.

But he was a trying invalid, and at last I was fairly worn out with incessant watching. He protested against nurse or servant, and kept me constantly at his bedside. From no one else would he receive food or medicine, and if I left him for a moment he was miserable. But his child-like dependence and clinging affection touched my heart in spite of myself. I began to love and tend him gently, like a baby, ruling and chiding him as I should have done one of my own little ones when it was naughty. Under this treatment we got on better, and should have managed without any outburst, had it not happened that, one unlucky morning, in a pressure of occupation, I neglected to rub and polish the staff as he had desired me to do. Before his illness, this had been the one important duty of his day, about which he set in the most scientific manner, with clean towels and wash-leather. Since himself incapacitated, he had requested me, as an especial favor, to undertake the process, and, anxious to indulge him in all small matters, I had complied—holding the knobbed handle, as he directed, in a cambric handkerchief, and rubbing from right to left. This morning he had been in a singularly perverse humor; nothing pleased him, and the supposed neglect of his favorite caused the lowering storm to burst forth. He raged and stormed for an hour, threatening me with every sort of vengeance. At length, fairly exhausted, he sank back in bed, and bade me leave him—he would try and sleep.

I hovered about the next room for some time, then, finding all quiet, stole away for an hour's rest. When I returned all was silent as before, nevertheless I noiselessly turned the lock and looked in. What was my horror to find the bed empty and my patient escaped!

I called the servants, and sent everywhere to seek him. But he was not soon found; no one had seen him leave the house, and we could not imagine what was his object in doing so. At last I discovered him myself, in a retired corner of the shrubbery, trying, with feeble efforts, to dig a hole and bury his staff.

"No one is worthy of it," he said; but he would not leave it when we had discovered his secret hiding place; and, after many arguments, I prevailed upon him to return and let me polish and clean it.

That night he was very ill—the exertion and exposure brought on relapse. He bade me put the staff quite close to him, and his feeble fingers clasped it fondly and stroked it down. Just when he was dying he put it into my hand:

"Keep it—never part with it—promise me, Jane."

I promised, for I saw his heart was bent on my doing so.

"Jane—the staff is—will—children—" But his voice failed, and his head fell back. He never spoke again, and before daybreak he was dead.

We laid him in the family vault in the Turton church—for, in spite of his wanderings and wayward life, he was of the old stock—and, putting aside his favorite staff in my oak cabinet, we went back to our old ways, and almost forgot him.

Years passed, during which more little faces clustered round our board, and the elder ones were sent off to school. The clouds that had so long skirted the distance came nearer and nearer, and at last burst over our heads.

The bank in which my money was vested suddenly failed; the steward who had managed my husband's affairs proved unfaithful and absconded with all that he could convert into money; creditors pressed round and were clamorous; we were ruined.

Nothing remained for us but to leave Turton; if possible to let, and to go and live on the continent. There was to be a sale after we left, and the hand-bills were already out. I had spent long days in packing and arranging, and, unable longer to meet the children's doleful faces and sad regrets at parting with their old pets, I hurried to my little morning room—the room that had witnessed many a dreary hour of watching over Uncle Davy.

I was crying, in spite of my efforts at self-command. In the hall I had seen little Edmond, with his arms round the old rocking-horse, sobs bursting from the rosy lips that he pressed against his favorite. Lucy was taking the toys from the doll's house as I passed the school-room. Oh! my heart bled sadly, for every grief of theirs was doubly mine.

The maid had been packing, and the oak cabinet was unlocked, the door swinging to and fro on its hinges. The drawer below held my chief treasures, which I had reserved to put up at the last; fancying this a favorable opportunity, I now opened it, and began to sort the things.

A packet of copy-books—large, round, blotted text-hand—on the outside of each cover one of the children's names and date. I tied them together and put them up. A little carved ivory box, which had long ago been a present from a sailor brother, with nine neatly-folded little white paper parcels inside, and a curl of soft hair in each—the last causing a few bitter tears to fall down on my black dress, as kneeling down I unfolded it and touched the smooth tress. Poor little baby that had pined when sorrow came to me; that had died in my arms, and now lay with its little coffin resting beside Uncle Davy's. I moved the packet of baby's clothes that I had put away the day after the funeral—the little gowns and caps and things—and gulped down a very sad sob. Poor little baby, God had provided for it!

There were yet a few more things, and then the drawer was empty, save for Uncle Davy's staff. I left it laying there while I packed up the other things, and it was still there when I went down to tea.

As I came up again I heard loud tones.

"Master Edmond, I shall tell your mamma of you. Have done immediately. What a naughty boy you are! Don't you see you have knocked all the paint off the bannisters?"

Nurse was standing on the first landing, looking down into the hall, with a very red face, while the child in her arms had a very inquiring look in his brown eyes, and was mouthing and tugging at an India-rubber ring held by two fat, slippery hands.

The delinquent was Master Edmond, aged 6, who was consoling himself for the parting with the old rocking-horse by racing up and down the first flight of steps, Uncle Davy's staff in hand, rattling the round handle all the way against the bannisters.

"There!" screamed nurse. "What have you done now?" as the child missed his footing, and lay screaming on the ground. She hurried down until the lusty roars reassured her, when she commenced a nursery mode of consolation: "There! have done, will you? It's all your own fault, you naughty boy. Just see how you've dirtied your clean pinafore; and now you are making baby cry. Get up."

Edmond scrambled up by aid of her great red hand, but only to reveal a slit in his frock, and Uncle Davy's staff on the floor, broken in two. Nurse shook him. "Do you know what you have done? Where did you get that stick from?—It's only Master Edmond, always in mischief, ma'am," she added in explanation, as I joined them.

I wiped the child's eyes, and pitied him for a bad bump on his forehead, supposing him to have been sufficiently punished. He picked up the two pieces of the staff, and I took them from him and carried them up stairs to my room.

Something dropped with a slight rattle on the floor, and I stooped to look at what it was, my hand stealing to my throat to assure itself of the safety of the brooch in my collar. Something that looked like a pearl bead was on the carpet, and, I picked it up. A similar rattle, and as I again found the same thing, I looked to see where they came from.

The staff was in my hand, and I turned it over. The broken end showed a perforated hole, from which, as I shook it, came another pearl. I gave a little exclamation, and ran down to my husband in the library. A light was dawning on me. We examined the staff, and I found it was even as we expected. The old man had been more successful in his Indian enterprises than he had given us to understand; but, finding poverty a good veil for penuriousness, had pretended to extreme misfortune, diligently converting all that he was able to accumulate into pearls, which he concealed in this favorite staff, never allowing it to leave his side, and guarding it with jealous and miserly care. He had evidently intended to acquaint me with the secret when on his deathbed, as I remembered by his reference to the children, but had died in the attempt.

But even now the discovery was not too late. Ronald at once took the pearls to London, and was perfectly astonished by the large offers that were made for them. The sale realized a very large sum—sufficient to release us from our present embarrassments and lay by a handsome portion for each of the children.

"Truly," as my husband said, with a glowing face, when we again assembled in the Turton dining-room, "no good action goes unrewarded. We made an unselfish sacrifice for a poor old man, without a thought of recompense, and the blessing has returned sevenfold to our bosoms. Depend upon it, it is ever so. Where we give we shall ever be repaid—if not here, at a Higher Account."

Why the Rev. Dr. Mudge Stopped His Paper.

Some years ago, when the writer was a reporter, it devolved on him to write for the same edition an account of the presentation of a gold-headed cane to Rev. Dr. Mudge, the clergyman of the place, and the description of a new hog-killing machine that had just been put in operation at the factory. Now, what made the Rev. Mr. Mudge mad was this: The inconsiderate compositor who made up the form got the two accounts mixed in a frightful manner, and, when it went to press, something like this was the appalling result: "Some of the Rev. Mudge's friends called on him yesterday, and, after a brief consultation, the unsuspecting hog was seized by the hind legs and slid along the beam until it reached the hot-water tank. His friends explained the object of the visit, and presented him with a handsome, gold-headed butcher, who grabbed him by the tail and swung him round, and in less than a minute the carcass was in the water. Therefore, he came forward and said there were times when the feelings overpowered one, and for that reason he could not do more than attempt to thank those around him for the manner in which such an animal was cut into fragments was astonishing. The doctor concluded his remarks, the machine seized him, and, in less time than it takes to write it, the hog was cut into fragments and worked into delicious sausages. The occasion will be remembered by the doctor's friends as one of the most delightful of their lives. The best pieces can be obtained for 7 pence a pound, and we are sure those who sat under his ministry will rejoice to hear that he has been so handsomely treated."

Mad! Well, about 8 o'clock that morning the office had been abandoned by every man but the advertising clerk, and he ascended to the roof, so that he could see the clergyman tearing around down in the street with his congregation, all wearing the panoply of war, and carrying stout cudgels and other things. The next day he apologized, but the doctor stopped his paper.

A Curious Story.

A curious story about the revenge inflicted on Gen. Meade during the war by some newspaper correspondents is told by a correspondent of the Philadelphia Times. Just before one of Meade's contemplated movements the correspondent of a Philadelphia newspaper sent to it a dispatch describing the General's plan, with an injunction not to use the intelligence until he telegraphed "all right." This last dispatch failed to reach the newspaper office, and the General's plan was published before it was executed. Gen. Meade was very angry, and, refusing to accept the correspondent's excuse, ordered him to be marched back and forth within the lines, bearing a placard announcing that he was suffering punishment for giving information to the enemy. As soon as he was released he hastened to Washington, and, laying his grievances before the correspondents in Newspaper row, they met and passed a resolution as follows: "Gen Meade's name shall never be mentioned again in dispatches by any newspaper correspondent except in case of defeat. All the successes of the army he commands shall be credited to Gen. Grant."

The Land of the Vendetta.

The vendetta, according to a Frenchman who has lately visited the island, has lost none of its strength or ferocity in Corsica, owing, no doubt, to its isolated position and removal from the direct influences of civilization. The writer says Corsica is substantially what it was 200 years ago, and that the people in the interior are little less than savages, being deplorably ignorant, indifferent to law, incapable of self-restraint, and governed by traditions. The Frenchman mentions that, two or three months ago, the last member of three once large families, ten miles from Sartene, fell a victim to a vendetta that had continued near a century.

The Sparrow Controversy.

Dr. Elliot Coues, the ornithologist, denounces the English sparrow in a long article in the American Naturalist. The doctor recommends "abolishing the penalties for killing sparrows, so that they may be trapped and used for shooting matches instead of pigeons, or of even glass balls." Per contra, Dr. H. Hagen, of the museum of comparative zoology at Harvard University, extols the sparrow and would have him increase and multiply. He thus concludes his plea in the columns of the Agriculturist: "I consider the sparrow to be a valuable addition to the native birds and most certainly beneficial for both horticulturists and farmers."

THE increase in the export of live stock from the United States to England in the year ending June 30 was 30,800 head of cattle, and 4,000 head of sheep. The actual numbers exported were 80,040 cattle and 183,995 sheep. In addition thereto 54,000,000 pounds of beef went over, an increase of 5,000,000 pounds.

SOLD HIS WIFE'S CORPSE.

A Story Illustrating the Depth of Depravity to Which a Man May Descend.

(From the Chicago Times.)

In an interior county of Illinois resides a farmer whose broad acres of fertile prairie and sleek herds place him and his family above the knowledge of want. Five years ago this family circle was adorned by a daughter, fair beyond comparison with her young associates, and rarely accomplished for one whose life had been spent upon a farm. To this family appeared, about the time indicated, a young man of pleasing manners and fashionable attire, claiming to be in good circumstances in Chicago. His account of himself was not entirely satisfactory to the farmer, who noticed with alarm a growing fondness in the glances his daughter cast upon the smooth-spoken stranger. Parental opposition in this case, as in so many similar instances, only added fuel to the flame of kindled love, and the young couple found means of carrying on clandestine meetings, until one day the rash girl agreed to an elopement. When the arrangements were all complete the daughter wrote a letter to her parents telling them she could not live apart from the man she loved, and had, much as she was pained to give them sorrow, determined to cast her lot with his. This note she left in her chamber and departed with the young man at night. The father was a man of stubborn mold, and the "bless you, my children," on which the young folks had calculated, came not when a paper containing their marriage was sent to him. The old man's suspicions had been too well founded. His daughter's husband was of dissolute habits and without means, and his motive for marrying was the expectation that the old man would "give down" liberally to keep his daughter from want. This hope proved futile as the father refused to hold any communication with his wayward child and her worthless husband. The latter was soon driven to extremities to keep him in liquor and cigars, and it was not long before he more than hinted to his wife that it would be necessary for her to do sewing or what other work could be got to help out with the family expenses. The poor woman did what she could, meekly enduring the ill-usage of her brutal spouse, sewing often the greater part of the night, while he pocketed the earnings and left her to suffer hunger and cold.

Two children were born to them in the poor apartments they occupied in the northwestern portion of the city. Each of these but added to the woes instead of increasing the joys of the mother, and when, a few weeks ago, she became aware that a little one was in prospect, her courage completely failed her, and she determined upon a most hazardous course. She took a powerful emenagogue, which failed of its purpose. A few days later she repeated the dose, and brought on a miscarriage, accompanied by extremely dangerous symptoms. In the intervals of her pain she dictated to a kind neighbor a letter to her mother, stating her wrong and the act she had committed, and imploring her to take care of the two children soon to be motherless and already worse than fatherless. Through some oversight this letter was not mailed until after the death of the victim of a too confiding nature. A physician had been called in, who, for charity, did what he could to relieve her suffering, but could not save her life.

The husband showed some indications of grief, but consoled himself with drink as best he could. The corpse lay in the house for a day and a night, kindly guarded by the neighboring women. Toward the second night, they inquired of the widower what disposition he intended to make of the remains, and were told that evening that an expressman would come for the corpse for burial, as he was unable to pay for a hearse. After nightfall, the expressman came and carried away the remains. The next day the father of the dead woman arrived, having learned of her sad fate, and asked where his daughter was buried, that he might have the body removed to the country cemetery near her old home. His inquiries were answered evasively for a time by the wretched creature whose bad treatment had driven his wife to an act which brought about her death, but, being pressed and threatened with arrest if he refused to tell, he acknowledged he had disposed of the corpse to the physician who attended her in her last illness in consideration of the petty sum of $5. The father's grief and rage knew no bounds, and it was with difficulty that he could be prevented from wreaking vengeance upon the scoundrel before him. Finally he set about recovering the corpse, in which he succeeded and had it conveyed home and decently interred.

Scientific Butter-Making.

The milk stands thirty-six hours before it is skimmed, and, after that of the evening has been received, our Perdita, like an excellent clerk, fills out her return for the day. She has printed blanks which give the names of the cows as they stand in the stable. Two columns are ruled for morning's and evening's milk, and the weight of milk given by each cow is recorded as we have said. The disposition made of the whole quantity is then noted, and the dairy is charged with its proportion, when deductions have been made for the house, the families of the men and the young calves. Such a report is filed daily, and so complete is the system that it takes only a few hours at the end of the year to tabulate a full statement of the 365 days.

The cream is strained or filtered, by which a thorough homogeneousness is secured, and without which it is impossible to obtain all the butter except by a second churning. The strainer in this instance is a cylindrical can divided into two compartments by double bottoms, the upper one having two tube-like sieves with conical mouths, into which two "plungers," worked by a pump-handle, fit. The cream is poured into the upper compartment, and the "plungers" force it through the sieves into the lower compartment, in which it arrives ready for churning. The churning is done twice a week, in a Blanchard factory churn, and, the temperature being 62 deg., the butter appears in about forty minutes. The next process is known as "working," which is altogether done by a machine, in quantities of thirty pounds at a time. The machine consists of a turn-table in the form of an exceedingly flat truncated cone and a conical grooved presser. Between the revolving cone and the presser the butter passes, and is crushed and crushed again until all the butter-milk is forced out of it, and discharged into a pail at the outside edge of the turn-table. The crank that causes the revolutions is attended by an assistant, while Perdita herself supervises, dredging in the salt, and taking care that the working is not overdone.—W. H. Rideing, in Harper's Magazine for October.

How Grant is Fixed Financially.

On arrival here I found a large mail, in which was a letter from you, inclosing a paragraph about Murphy's bankruptcy and my losses in real estate. So far as I am concerned there is not one word of truth in the statement. I never owned or purchased a piece of real estate in New York city in my life. I never owned any property in New Jersey, except the two houses at Long Branch which I now own, in my life. I never held a piece of property in my life, that I remember of, on which I owed anything. What I have—not much—is paid for. I have sold nothing to pay up my debts. My farming experience in Missouri, being so far away myself, was expensive, and I sold out and gave away my stock and rented the farm. That was several years ago. Had I gone out of office at the end of four years, when my salary was $25,000 a year, I would have been compelled to sell something, quite an amount, to have carried me out of Washington; but with my private income and increased salary I came out at the end of eight years free from debt and without having incurred any loss anywhere in speculation.—Letter to a Washington friend.

DEADLY DUEL WITH KNIVES.

A Yankee's Mortal Battle With a Border Ruffian.

(From the Leavenworth Times.)

An old inhabitant has recounted the details of a famous duel fought here in September, 1858, nearly twenty years ago, the spot chosen for the slaughter being almost precisely the one selected by United States Senator James H. Lane, when he sent the bullet crashing through his brain, which put such a sudden end to his Senatorial career. The fact of the duel has, heretofore, been known as the "dark secret," and, so far as is known, has not heretofore been divulged, as the parties concerned were sworn never to reveal it until at some future time, when concealment would be no longer a necessity. The necessity for concealment no longer exists. As is well known, the period prior to the reception of Kansas into the Union of States was a time of trouble and tribulation; a time which tried men's souls; when the bowie knife and the ready revolver were the sole arbiters of quarrels. The strife for supremacy between the Free State men and the border ruffians was bitter to the last degree.

Among the Free State men who were conspicuous for their advocacy of equal rights was a youthful Massachusetts lawyer named Williams—brave, resolute and daring. He was a marked man at the time, and the opposition was determined that he should be put out of the way. Enrolled in the border ruffian ranks was a lusty Southerner named Jackson, a Tennesseean, a firm believer in the "code," a crack shot, and utterly fearless; cold-blooded, cool, a man of fine presence, and who hated a Yankee as he hated the devil. He was the one selected to put Williams out of the way; to pick a quarrel with the victim and then let the bullet finish the work. Meeting one afternoon on Delaware street, the two became engaged in conversation, and a hot dispute arose, ending by Jackson spitting in Williams' face. This was an insult too gross to be brooked, and nothing but the interference of friends prevented a tragedy then and there. The result was a challenge, the parties to meet upon the Government reserve the next morning at daylight to fight it out. Pistols were chosen, after the first two shots the parties to close with knives.

Jackson, being the challenged party, had the selection of the weapons, and, being an expert with both the revolver and knife, chose them to be used in the duel. Williams, while comparatively a good shot with the revolver, could not approach his antagonist in the use of that weapon, while with the knife he was wholly unacquainted. However, he could not back out, and knowing inevitable death to be the result, he proceeded to the spot chosen, determined to sell his life as dearly as possible.

In the gray daylight of the autumn morning the two men, accompanied by two seconds and a surgeon, met upon the reserve a short distance northwest of the head of Broadway, and prepared for the bloody work before them. Both were cool and collected—the first because of the anticipation of an easy victory, the other firm in the belief that he was in the right, and resolved to make his mark, even if he could not kill his adversary. Ten paces was the distance; both men grasped their revolvers and awaited the word; the seconds looked anxiously on, as spectators would at a public execution where a victim was to be sacrificed; the word was given; both fired simultaneously, and, when the smoke cleared away, neither had fallen, although by the nervous twitching of the muscles of Williams' face it could be seen that he had been hit, while Jackson was uninjured. At the second fire Jackson's bullet whistled over Williams' head, while the ball of the latter imbedded itself in the fleshy part of his adversary's thigh. The knives were then drawn, and the two closed in mortal strife. Maddened by his wound, Jackson fought with the desperation of despair; Williams, cooler, stood like a lion at bay, defending himself against the fierce onslaughts of the tiger. In an unguarded moment Jackson was thrown from his guard, and at that instant the keen blade of his antagonist pierced his left side, not inflicting, however, a mortal wound.

But Williams, from the effect of the bullet wound and loss of blood, was becoming exhausted, and, being a novice with the knife, he could not long stand up against so trained and practiced an adversary as Jackson, and the end soon came. Jackson, although weak from loss of blood, pressed fiercely on. He succeeded by a quick movement in parrying a side thrust by Williams, dashed forward, his bright blade glittering and flashing for a moment in the air, and then being buried deep in the throat of his enemy, the point protruding from the back of Williams' neck. The latter stood erect but a moment, his knife dropped from his nerveless hand, his eyes glazed in the semi-consciousness preceding dissolution, and then he fell—dead, without a groan.

Jackson was seized at once by his friends and hurried across the river, where, after a time sufficient to recover from his wounds, he turned his steps homeward and never again set his foot upon Kansas soil. He entered the rebel army, and died at the head of his regiment at Gettysburg. The seconds and surgeon returned to the city and said nothing about the affair. The body of Williams was hurriedly and privately interred; and, while the disappearance of both Jackson and Williams for a time excited comment and caused the institution of a thorough search by their friends, the matter was soon forgotten in the midst of the wild excitement of the events then transpiring.

Peculiarities of Yellow Fever.

Yellow fever is a most mysterious and in many respects an incomprehensible disease. The few general facts that seem to have been learned about it, after close and varied observation, are not infrequently contradicted by new experience. One of its widely-supposed peculiarities is that it cannot live at certain elevations, 2,500 feet above sea-level being sufficient, it is thought, to exclude it completely. Yet long before Cortez invaded Mexico the natives of the country suffered terribly from an epidemic which was, beyond all rational doubt, identical with what is now known as the yellow fever. This epidemic—it was called matlazahuatl—prevailed repeatedly, with virulence and mortality during the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries, on the table-lands of Mexico, from 7,200 to 7,800 feet above the sea. If it has raged at that height it may rage at an equal height again, and thus the favorite and now universally-accepted theory be overthrown. It is surprising how very little is known of the yellow fever as to its symptoms, consequences, general course, and treatment; for, while it has been recognized only about 200 years as a distinctive disease, it has been a fearful scourge at least since the beginning of the fifteenth century. It used to be called the plague, and it is little less hideous and destructive than that frightful pestilence, now happily confined to the hot and filthy East.

FASHION NOTES.

A Variety of Items Regarding the Prevailing Styles.

Swiss and linen Hamburg trimmings are at remarkably low prices.

Silver bangles at some of the jewelers' are thickly studded with diamonds.

The charming rays of prismatic effects will figure quite prominently in dress.

Metallic blue will be one of the new and popular shades the coming season.

It is said that the moire antique silk will be used in trimming hats and bonnets.

The Princesse model is no longer distinct in character. The autumn design bears a likeness to the uniform toilet.

Red, on dit, will be the ruling color in the world of dress next season. Garnet, currant and ruby are also favorite dyes.

Among the large variety of slippers worn this season, those of black velvet, perfectly plain, are the most desirable for the house.

Whole breadths formed of bright-tinted goods will set off, in a somewhat bold style, costumes arranged in somber materials.

Red has never been so popular as now, for even the poppy is confronted with a still more dazzling color, verging upon real marigold.

Satin-faced silks appear among novelties, and, though not new, black and white stripes come up as decided favorites for combining with plain black silk.

Vests, detached and simulated, are made of bright-tinted materials. This nobby form of costume presents a number of graceful curves and pleasant outlines.

Basque simulations are convenient and picturesque, and hence will become favorites with all classes of dressers. There are several basque and over-skirt models.

Ribbon bows, with long flowing ends, are fastened on the left side of the waist; in fact, bows of ribbons will form one of the chief dress garnitures of the season.

Handsome fringes for grenadines have bunches of crimped tape mingled in wide and narrow strips, in trellis style.

Bonnets have grown. The fall modes in millinery show a decided gain in the size of hats and bonnets. Straws, richly trimmed, will be among the first chapeaux for early seasonable wear.

Ladies are slowly becoming conscious that the cut-away jacket and waistcoat are not at all becoming to slender figures. As a natural consequence plaited and blouse waists are coming into favor.

Trimmings of all sorts have grown into favor, and the coming season bids fair of giving a surfeit of dress adornings; hence great care must be exercised in this direction in the proper quantity of garniture determined.

Sacques that have a center seam, with the seam under the arms brought well toward the back, are again one of the fashionable out-door garments. Sleeves to both dresses and sacques are sewed in with a small cord.

The fashion of yoke bodices, which are now largely worn for morning dresses, has once again made waistbands popular. Preference is shown to belts made of Russian leather, at the same time soft and pliable, and the colors are dark and rich.

Bows of ribbons, with flowing ends, are once more worn at the back of the neck, where frequently the collaret is cut open. Bows of wider ribbon or of double silk are also placed on basque extensions, just below the waist, or wherever the figure of the wearer may indicate the best position.

The old-time underkerchiefs will figure this fall in mode toilets. This neat bit of dress adornment consists of white linen, mull and Swiss, placed en forme of a surplice around the neck and bust. This style of dress is designed exclusively for the house, yet it may be seen on our promenades during the early autumn.

A Rare Town.

The town of St. Croix Falls, at the head of navigation on the St. Croix river, in Polk county, Wis., is over thirty-five years old. It has never had a resident minister or a church building. It has no practicing attorney, and for years it has had no resident physician. It has mechanical shops, four stores doing a large and handsome business, two flourishing mills, two hotels, but has no saloon or place where liquor has been sold in upwards of ten years. Its village district averages about eleven months' schooling per year, and the town contains six well-built school houses. It is the locality of the United States Land Office, and surrounded by the finest of farming country.

One of the Austrian batteries now occupying Bosnia had to go into action just as dinner-time came on, and the artillerymen, resolved not to lose a meal, cut their meat into small strips, placed it on the breech of their guns and cooked it by the heat of the metal. They found it delicious, and voted the bifsteck a la culasse de cannon infinitely superior to beefsteaks cooked under the pommel of the saddle, Tartar fashion.

STANLEY IN AFRICA.

The Difficulties Encountered in His March Across the Dark Continent.

[From a Paper in Harper's Magazine for October.]

Stanley's narrative gives us a vivid idea of travel in Africa under its best conditions; that is to say, through a country fairly known, which has been visited by white men, and is now traversed by frequent caravans. Sometimes they crossed "broad and bleak plains, where food was scarce and cloth vanished fast," and sometimes they came to hilly countries, where the people were civil and hospitable. Sometimes they were in troublesome districts, where there were warring tribes, where the people were treacherous or hostile, and then Stanley could only sleep with his hand on his rifle. There were furious tempests, "and some days nature and man alike warred against us, while on others both seemed combined to bless us." Other troubles came to the intrepid commander and his small army, more especially that potent and untiring enemy of all African travel—typhus. This was the enemy who menaced Stanley at Zanzibar, and never left his footsteps until he embarked at Loanda; who followed him night and day, doing his awful will upon the expedition. And so from these misfortunes—from famine and fatigue, from fever and massacre, from mutiny and death—the little army dwindled away; and it is a wonder that it did not return, or at least content itself with visiting Livingstone's country and exploring Victoria Niyanza, and return with the report which has been brought for so many centuries—that Africa continued hostile to those who came to woo her, and would not be won. Nor does it surprise us that, amid all these discouragements, the heart of Stanley should have faltered. "The expedition seemed doomed. Promises of reward, kindness, threats, punishments, had no effect." But at the same time the spirit of the leader was felt in the command. "The white men," he says, "although elected out of the ordinary class of Englishmen, did their work bravely, heroically. Though suffering from fever and dysentery, insulted by natives, marching under the heat and equatorial rain-storms, they at all times proved themselves of noble, manly natures, stout-hearted, brave, and, better than all, true Christians." These are the men by whom empires are made, but for them there was no empire but the memory of duty well done; no trophy, no reward, unless what is to come as the reward for well-doing in the final day of account. Two of them were to sleep near the banks of Victoria Niyanza, victims of disease; the other was to be whirled into eternity over the rapids of the Congo, when his journey was almost at an end.

Sometimes Stanley was in the wilderness without guides. This, however, seemed a happiness compared to his position when he did have guides who betrayed him, as happened early in his expedition in Ukimbu, near the elephant country. In Ukimbu the guides ran away, and Stanley found himself on the edge of a wilderness with but ten days' provisions. He had trusted his guides, and purchased a small quantity of food. He endeavored to pierce the wilderness, but his track was lost in a maze of elephant and rhinoceros trails. He could only depend upon his compass. The second day found a jungle of acacia and euphorbia, through which the men had to crawl and scramble along the ground, "under natural tunnels of embracing shrubbery, cutting the convolvuli and creepers, thrusting aside stout thorny bushes, and by various detours taking advantage of every slight opening the jungle afforded." There was no water. Overcome with hunger and thirst, the command began to struggle and faint. Some managed to reach camp, where medicine and restoratives brought them strength. Five never returned. One of them was found dead in the woods, and of the other four it is believed "they hopelessly wandered on until they also fell down and died." On the fifth day they came to a village, but the village comprised only four negroes, their wives and little ones, and had no food for such a large command. Stanley learned that there was another village twenty-nine miles away, named Suna, and he sent a picked band of twenty, the strongest and most enduring, to visit Suna and bring food. He scoured the woods for game, but there was no game. A lion's den was found. In this den were two young lions, which were killed and skinned. But of what avail were two lion cubs to an expedition of starved men? Surely here was death at last—death, defeat, annihilation; and this proud expedition which had set out so gloriously from Zanzibar, resolved to force the mystery of a continent and fight its way to the Atlantic, why, all that could happen to it was to perish as so many had done before, leaving only the name of Stanley to be added to the sad, dismal roll of martyrs to African discovery. "Returning to camp," says Stanley, "from the fruitless hunt"—nothing in all that wilderness but the two lion cubs—"I was so struck with the pinched faces of my poor people that I could have almost wept, if I might have done so without exciting fear of our fate in their minds. I resolved to do something toward relieving the pressing needs of fierce hunger." Stanley had medical stores, which in such an expedition are a sacred trust. He opened a sheet-iron trunk and made it serve as a pot. Into this pot he doled out five pounds of Scotch oatmeal—perhaps the most precious of all his possessions—and three tins of "revalenta arabica," and made a gruel. "It was a rare sight," he says, "to see those poor famine-stricken people hasten to that Torquay dress trunk and assist me to cook the huge pot of gruel; to watch them fan the fire to a fiercer heat, and, with their gourds full of water, stand by to cool the foaming liquid when it threatened to overflow." The porridge kept the expedition alive for forty-eight hours, when Stanley heard the musketry of his returning embassy coming in from Suna with food. "The grain was most greedily seized by the hungry people, and so animating was the report of the purveyors that the soldiers one and all clamored to be led away that afternoon." And so our leader marched on.

A Goose Story from Maine.

The following astounding story is told by the Brunswick (Me.) Telegraph: "Some years ago a part of a flock of geese owned in this town were sold, and taken on board of a vessel bound outward, to serve as cabin 'fixings' for the Captain. After the ship had sailed out of sight of land one of the geese escaped and flew overboard. Some days afterward—be the time more or less—this identical old goose appeared in its old haunts; but it did not long remain, as the owner had disposed of the remainder of the flock, which had been sent several miles away. Goose put out on a prospecting tour, and kept it up until it found, within a few hours, its old companions, and then there was such a cackling, laughing and chattering among the geese as were never heard before, to the utter astonishment of the then owner, who hadn't fully imbibed the spirit of his flock."

There is a doubtful Western story, told to the disparagement of "book-farming," of a city man lately settled on land, who was found under a large tree reading, in a voice loud enough to be heard all over the field, the report of the Beecher-Tilton scandal, to shock his wheat.

Environed with Danger.

The dweller or temporary sojourner in a malarious region of country is environed with danger. Besides inhaling at every breath an atmosphere saturated with an infectious poison, he also drinks water which is, in most instances, likewise impregnated with the fever-and-ague-breeding miasmata. If a bilious subject, deficient in stamina, or irregular in habit of body or digestion, his peril is much increased, as these abnormal conditions are extremely favorable to the contraction of malarial disease. But this danger may be safely encountered with the assistance of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which completely nullifies the atmospheric virus, and neutralizes the constituents of miasma-tainted water. This benign antidote to disease eradicates and prevents fevers of an intermittent and bilious remittent type, besides effecting a thorough and permanent reform of those enfeebled or irregular conditions of the system which invite not only malaria, but other diseases equally to be dreaded.

Two Noted Grave Robbers.

Our readers will remember the account given in these columns of the robbing of the grave of the Hon. Scott Harrison, in Ohio, last May, the body being found in the dissecting-room of the Ohio Medical College. Public indignation justly brands any man as a scoundrel who will rob the grave of the dead. But there are two noted grave robbers in this country, so far from being the subject of the people's wrath, are universally lauded for their virtues. The reason is plain. While the former class steal the dead bodies of our loved ones to submit them to the dissecting-knife, these only rob the graves to restore the living victims to our hearts and homes. Their names—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets—are household words the world over. The Golden Medical Discovery cures consumption, in its early stages, and all bronchial, throat and lung affections; Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the most valuable laxative and cathartic.

Old age does not prevent you from being cured of your Heart Disease. Mr. Thompson says:

I have had Palpitation of the Heart for ten years. Two years ago I had a paralytic shock; since then I have been troubled very much worse. I found no relief until I had used Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR. I have used it for four months; the palpitation has entirely left me. I was so bad at times that I could not breathe freely, and used to have a faint, sinking feeling; was so bad that I could not sleep, and had to get up and walk around in order to get breath. I feel entirely well of all my heart troubles, and would advise all afflicted with Heart Disease to use it. I am seventy years of age, and live in Bakersville.

JAMES THOMPSON, Manchester, N. H.

Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

Wilhoft's Fever and Ague Tonic.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. Wheelock, Finlay & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

For sale by all Druggists.

Clock-work is not more regular than the liver, the stomach, and the bowels when they are put in order with Dr. Mott's Vegetable Liver Pills, a supremely effective and safe alterative, cathartic and blood depurent, which promotes thorough bilious secretion, a regular habit of body, sound digestion and nervous tranquillity. It is the best possible substitute for that terrible drug, mercury. For sale by all druggists.

From J. M. Pettengill, of Salisbury, Mass.—I have sold more boxes of Grace's Salve during the last four months than of any other like preparation in my store; in fact it is the only salve for which there is any sale. This bespeaks the confidence of the public in its virtues, and is in my opinion a valuable recommendation of its healing properties.

TRADE MARK.

After Taking

Is especially recommended as an unfailing cure for Seminal Weakness, Spermatorrhea Impotency and all diseases that follow as a sequence on Self Abuse; as Loss of Memory, Universal Lassitude, Pain in the Back, Dimness of Vision, Premature Old Age, and many other diseases that lead to insanity, consumption and a premature grave, all of which, as a rule, are first caused by deviating from the path of nature and over indulgence. The Specific Medicine is the result of a life study and many years of experience in treating these special diseases.

Full particulars in our pamphlets, which we desire to send free by mail to every one.

The Specific Medicine is sold by all druggists at $1 per package or 6 packages for $5; will be sent by mail on receipt of the money by addressing

NOTICE TO CONSUMERS —OF— Tobacco

LORILLARD

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many immitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such immitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metalic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

The genuine Lorillard Tin Tag Tobacco can be distinguished by a Tin Tag on each lump with the word Lorillard stamped thereon.

Over 7,088 tons tobacco sold in 1877, and nearly 3,000 persons employed in factories.

Taxes paid Gov'm't in 1877 about 3,[illegible], and during past 12 years, over 20 [illegible].

These goods sold by all jobbers at manufacturers rates.

45 Years Before the Public.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

NO HARD TIMES HERE.

Employment for Ladies and Gentlemen at Home.

Our attention was recently attracted by an advertisement in another paper to the "American Housekeepers' Scale, and the extremely low price induced us to send for one to use in our own kitchen.

We find the scale the most convenient and valuable household article we have! It is worth five times it cost, in testing grocers' packages, putting up preserves making cake, etc. W. H. Thompson & Co., No. 235 Washington street, Mass., are the manufacturers, and they have the most complimentary testimonials of the scale possible to be written. They have as yet no general agent for this county; and as the scales are sold exclusively by canvassers to families, we cheerfully recommend the article for the benefit of our numerous lady readers and parties wanting honorable employment.

We would say that the "Christian Journal," N. Y., "Christian Union," N. Y., "Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper," N. Y., "Church Union," N. Y., "Boston Traveler," "Herald" and "Post" and hundreds of other papers, all speak in the highest praise of the scale, its low price and convenience to housekeepers.

Weighs up to 24 pounds, and costs $1.50 prepaid—or about one-half that of any other platform scale in the United States.

Where is the man who wants the exclusive control of our county, and thereby secure a very profitable business.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headache, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at McIntyre & Son's.

Mr. Henry Bashelier is now prepared to accommodate a few private boarders at very reasonable rates, at his residence, formerly the Auburn House. It has been re-fitted and every convenience will be furnished his guests. For further information call at the Auburn Fruit House 38-1w

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case. Try it. Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

The Question of the Day.

National finance is without doubt the most important problem of the times, and the second edition of Mr. Fawcett's Hand-book of finance, just published by S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago, appears most opportunely. This volume gives the history of paper money, from its very beginning down to its sovereign supremacy in civilized countries and particularly in the United States; it treats of suspensions of specie payments, and supplies a complete and lucid digest of the monetary laws of the United States The book presents over 80 tables and diagrams, showing precisely the facts to which reference is most frequently necessary, including very many things which one needs to know, whether he has to do with financial questions or not.

Every citizen should inform himself on this subject as thoroughly as possible, and the following extracts from leading papers about Fawcett's Handbook of Finance, show how important an aid it will be to anyone.

"This volume should be read by all who take an interest in financial matters."—London Commercial Gazette, (England).

"Of inestimable importance in the study of finance."—Courier-Journal, Louisville.

"There is no species of extract information bearing upon the financial question which cannot be quickly found between these covers."—Utica Morning Herald.

"Mr. Fawcett's statistics are of such value that we do not see how any one who pretends to discuss finance generally can afford to be without them." —Mining World, London.

"We recommend all who desire to master the subject of finance, by the argument of logic and the logic of facts carefully to read Fawcett's 'Hand-book of Finance'......As a full and very complete collection of monetary statistics this work has never been equaled or even approached. It is a storehouse of facts."—Philadelphia Press.

"It cannot fail to be of great use to students, writers and legislators, as also to bankers and merchants, who desire to inform themselves of the influences which surround and consequently affect, favorably if understood and availed of, or unfavorably if disregarded, all their financial and commercial operations ....Accept Mr. Fawcett's estimate of the steady increase of consumption of gold in the arts, the adoption of the double standard—gold and silver—as the basis of the monetary system, not only of the United States, but of all countries, will soon become an absolute necessity. Either this or the enlargement of the volume of paper money."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Fawcett's Hand-book of Finance" may be had of booksellers, or S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago, will send it prepaid on receipt of price $1.75.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

The steamer Adelphi, running between New York and Norwich, Ct., exploded one of her boilers a few days ago, just after leaving the latter port. There were 200 people on board, 12 of whom were killed, and 20 more or less seriously wounded. The boiler, although it had recently received a steamboat inspector's approval, was found, upon examination, to be a rotten affair.... While a funeral cortege was crossing the track of the Long Island railroad, in Brooklyn, N. Y., the other day, a carriage in the procession was struck by a locomotive and completely demolished. Two women and three children were in the carriage. One of the former, one of the latter, and the driver of the vehicle were killed, and the other occupants were dangerously injured. The officers of the train have been arrested.

Cashier Calder, of the Grocers' and Producers' Bank of Providence, R. I., kindly permitted some of his friends to overdraw funds, until one-third of the institution's capital was lost...Result—doors of the bank closed, and Cashier Calder in jail.

Carl J. Triacca and Anthony Degrieff, New York importers, have been arrested on warrants charging them with conspiring to destroy documentary evidence of frauds perpetrated against the Government. Other arrests are to follow, and it is said that before the end is reached many prominent men, ranking as high as Senators and Congressmen and as low as department attaches at Washington, will be seriously compromised.

THE WEST.

The regular weekly robbery of the "coach from Deadwood" occurred, the other day, at Canon Springs, forty-five miles south of the Black Hills metropolis. Two messengers, Capt. Smith and Gale Hill, were seriously wounded, and one passenger, H. O. Campbell, a telegraph operator, killed. The treasure taken amounted to between $25,000 and $30,000....Chicago has raised between $90,000 and $100,000 for the benefit of the plague-stricken communities of the South.

The troops recently sent in pursuit of the Cheyenne Indians who escaped from the Fort Reno reservation, in the Indian Territory, have had an engagement with them, and, although they whipped the savages and routed them, lost a brave and gallant officer, Lieut. Col. William H. Lewis, of the Nineteenth Infantry. The scene of the engagement was near the Kansas Pacific railroad, on the Southern border of Kansas.

The police of Akron, Ohio, attempted to arrest a tramp on the outskirts of the city. They were met by about thirty well-armed tramps, who drove them back into the city at the point of revolvers. The military was called out to assist the police. They arrested about eighteen of the tramps. Several shots were fired, but without any known effect.

THE SOUTH.

Deaths from yellow fever in New Orleans on Sept. 27, 51; at Memphis, 28; at Vicksburg, 13; at Holly Springs, 11. The general tenor of the reports from all these points was that the worst had been reached, and that there would henceforth be a decline of the epidemic. In most of the interior towns there was a decline in the mortality, as well as in the number of new cases. The steamer Kate Dickson, which was sent with provisions, doctors and nurses to the isolated town of Greenville, on the Mississippi river, returned to Vicksburg a few days ago, with a horrible story of suffering and destitution. Out of a population of 400 people 219 have died, leaving only fifteen persons in the place who have escaped the fever. One family, of eleven persons and three nurses who were in attendance upon them, all died within a few days of each other. The deaths occurred so rapidly that it was impossible to bury the bodies properly, and they had to be covered with earth in shallow holes. To prevent the citizens of the town from seeking safety in flight, the people in the country blockaded the roads and destroyed the bridges over the streams.

There were 28 deaths from yellow fever at Memphis on the 30th ult.; at New Orleans the deaths numbered 35; at Vicksburg, 7. The Howard steamer Kate Dickson, sent out from Vicksburg to relieve the sufferers along the river, reports a great deal of sickness all the way from Vicksburg to Greenville, at which place there were but about one dozen well people to be found. A Baton Rouge (La.) dispatch of the 30th ult. reports the fever extremely virulent there; 125 new cases and 6 deaths occurred the previous twenty-four hours. There was some abatement of the pestilence at nearly all the towns in the interior of the fever-infected region.

Lewis E. Meacham, sporting editor of the Chicago Tribune for several years past, is dead. He was a recognized authority in base-ball and other sporting matters....A Topeka (Kansas) dispatch states that a band of runaway Indians crossed the Kansas Pacific track sixty miles east of Hayes City, and, when eight or ten miles north of the station, came upon a lot of cattle men, when a hand-to-hand fight ensued, resulting in a loss of eighteen citizens killed and five wounded. The troops had a fight with the Indians at 4 o'clock the following morning. Lieut. Broderick, Twenty-third infantry, was wounded, and Corp. Stewart, of Company I, Twenty-third infantry, and five soldiers killed.

Advices from the yellow-fever infected points of the South, on Oct. 4, give the following reports: New Orleans, 51 deaths and 111 new cases; Memphis, 33 deaths and 133 new cases; Vicksburg, 8 death; Holly Springs, 9 deaths and 26 new cases; Hickman, Ky., 2 deaths; Brownsville, Tenn., 2 deaths and 15 new cases; Chattanooga, Tenn., 4 deaths and 10 new cases; Greenville, Miss., reports "1,250 people here when the fever broke out, 200 deaths to date (Oct. 4), 600 convalescents, and 120 down;" Baton Rouge, La., 10 deaths and a large number of new cases; Biloxi, Miss., 20 new cases, no deaths; Osyka, Miss., 3 deaths and 7 new cases; Thibodeaux, La., 16 new cases, no deaths; Jackson, Miss., fever just broke out and rapidly spreading, great panic; Bay St. Louis, Miss., 3 deaths and 18 new cases; Tangipahoa, La., 2 deaths and 6 new cases. At nearly all these points the weather was reported warm, with no near prospect of frost, the only enemy that Yellow Jack fears.

GENERAL.

The United States steamer Enterprise, commanded by Capt. Selfridge, has arrived at New York after an absence of five months, that time having been devoted to the exploration of the river Amazon and its principal tributaries. The exploration is reported to have been completely successful, and will doubtless give to the commercial world a vast amount of valuable information concerning the resources and wants of the valley of that greatest of rivers. Capt. Selfridge says the volume of the Amazon's discharge is 7,000,000 cubic feet a second, and that if the flood of our great Mississippi were added to its volume the surface of that majestic stream would not be perceptibly raised....There was a heavy snow-storm at Ottawa, Canada, on the 27th of September.

Condon and Melody, the Fenians released from prison in England on the condition that they should leave that country, have arrived in New York, where they were cordially received by the members of the Fenian Brotherhood.

A liberal gift from a [illegible] lady in New York has enabled the [illegible] of the Treasury to constitute a [illegible] eminent medical men, who will [illegible] the yellow-fever region of the South and investigate the causes and progress of the prevailing epidemic.

The contest between the six clubs composing the "League" for the base-ball championship of the United States has ended in the success of the Boston Club, which, with the exception of one year, has held the championship uninterruptedly since 1871. The following table shows the result of the season's play between the respective clubs:

Clubs.	Games Won.	Games Lost.
Boston	41	19
Cincinnati	37	23
Providence	33	27
Chicago	30	30
Indianapolis	24	36
Milwaukee	15	45
Totals	180	180

Fires: An entire business block at Easton, Md., loss $100,000; the ferry-boat Union, at Fishkill, N. Y., loss $120,000; six business blocks in Palestine, Tex., loss $115,000; a hotel and several small buildings at St. Joseph, Mo., loss $20,000.

Cyrille Dion, the celebrated billiard player, is dead.

United States Marshals Potet and Matthews have just arrested, in Wayne county, W. Va., Henry L. Maitland, P. B. Maitland, Henry McNally and Miles Elkins, who belong to a gang of counterfeiters who have been operating in that section for some time. Scales, molds, stamps and some counterfeit coin were found in their possession....Ten thousand people witnessed the boat race at Lachine, Canada, between Hanlan, the Canadian, and Courtney, the American oarsman. The former won by two boat-lengths.

WASHINGTON.

A curious offer has been made by Gov. Hampton, of South Carolina, to the Revenue Bureau in Washington. It was that the State authorities would undertake the collection of the internal revenue in that State, in order to avoid the great difficulties experienced by the Federal officers in the performance of that duty. Commissioner Raum declines the proposition....Senor Zamacona, the Mexican Minister, says the purpose of the Mexican Government in sending 5,000 troops to the frontier was to suppress raiding, and aid the United States troops in putting down lawlessness.

The Chinese Minister was formally received by the President the other day. The ceremony was private, there being no deviation from the usages as to other foreign representatives.

The Attorney General of the United States has decided that the subsidiary coins are not legal tender as payment of any part of any debt exceeding in amount $5, either as between individuals or in the payment of duties on imports....Following is a statement of the United States currency outstanding on the 1st inst.:

Of demand notes	$62,090
Legal-tender notes of all issues	346,681,016
One-year notes of 1863	51,125
Two-year notes of 1863	14,750
Two-year coupon notes of 1863	23,800
Compound-interest notes	272,010
Fractional currency of all issues	16,297,429
Total	$363,402,220

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has information of a movement against the illicit distillers in Western North Carolina and along the South Carolina line. The raid was very successful. The raiding party were fired on at different points, but none were wounded.

Col. O. H. Irish has been appointed Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the Treasury Department in place of Hon. Edward McPherson, resigned.

POLITICAL.

The Democrats of Nebraska met in State Convention at Omaha, last week, and nominated the following ticket: For Supreme Judge, John D. Howe; for Congress, short term, Alex. C. Bear; for Congress, long term, J. W. Davis; for Governor, J. R. Webster; for Lieutenant Governor, F. J. Mead; for Secretary of State, Benjamin Parmerton; for Auditor, E. H. Benton; for Treasurer, F. H. Cummings; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, S. L. Barrett; for Attorney General, S. H. Calhoun; for Superintendent of Lands and Buildings, James McCready. Howe, Davis and Calhoun had been previously nominated by the Greenbackers.

The Democrats and Greenbackers of Iowa have joined hands, and agreed upon the following fusion ticket: Secretary of State, E. M. Farnsworth, Greenbacker; Auditor, Joseph Eiboeck, Democrat; Treasurer, M. L. Devin, Greenbacker; Register of Land Office, Mr. Farington, Greenbacker; Supreme Judge, J. C. Knapp, Democrat; Attorney General, John Gibbons, Democrat; Supreme Clerk, Alex. Ranyou, Greenbacker; Supreme Court Reporter, John B. Elliott, Democrat.

The Republican constituents of Gen. Butler in the Seventh Congressional district of Massachusetts held a convention, the other day, and, after nominating William A. Russell for Congress, adopted resolutions condemnatory of Butler and demanding his instant resignation of the seat he holds in Congress....The Republicans of Texas assembled in convention at Dallas, last week, and nominated a full ticket for State officers, headed by A. B. Morton for Governor.

The Republican State Convention of Nebraska, after a two days and night session at Lincoln, nominated the following ticket: E. K. Valentine, Congressman; T. J. Majors, Congressman to fill the unexpired term of the late Frank C. Welch; Albinus Nance, Governor; E. C. Carnes, Lieutenant Governor; S. J. Alexander, Secretary of State; F. M. Davis, Land Commissioner; F. W. Liedtke, Auditor; G. M. Bartlett, Treasurer; R. Thompson, Superintendent of Public Instruction; J. C. Dilworth, Attorney General; F. M. Davis, Commissioner of Public Lands.

FOREIGN.

The Golos, of St. Petersburg, reports that Lord Salisbury has asked what is the object of the Russian mission to the Ameer of Cabul, and what position Russia intends to assume regarding Afghanistan. It thinks Russia will reply that she does not feel bound to explain the object of the mission, and that in the event of a war between England and Afghanistan she will observe the same degree of neutrality that was observed by England during the late war between Russia and Turkey....Dr. Petermann, the well-known German geographer, died in London last week, from a stroke of apoplexy....The Bosnian insurrection is scotched, not killed. Vienna dispatches admit that organized bodies of insurgents are retiring toward Novi-Bazar, in the southern part of the province, from which they may undertake a winter campaign. They are well supplied with artillery.

A terrible famine prevails in Morocco, and thousands of people are dying of starvation....The Russians are making a general northward movement from the neighborhood of Constantinople. As fast as the Russian troops retire the Turks advance, the lines being kept fifteen miles apart, and the intervening space is patrolled by cavalry for the purpose of repressing disorders....There was a serious disturbance lately among the Japanese Imperial Guard at Tokio, Japan. The officers of the artillery revolted, killed the officers of the guard, and marched toward the imperial palace, but were met by the infantry and police, and either killed or captured. The emeute resulted in the loss of about fifty lives.

Calcutta dispatches say that unless Shere Ali gives prompt satisfaction for his insulting refusal to receive the English embassy, the Indian Government will take the opportunity to seize all the passes piercing the mountain ranges that form the frontier of Hindoostan....A Constantinople dispatch says the alarmingly rapid depreciation of paper money continues in Turkey, and causes the most serious apprehension.

It is announced from Vienna that the Hungarian Ministry has resigned, and that other ministerial complications are likely to follow. The hostility of the Magyars to the Bosnian occupation, and the difficulty of providing funds for the maintenance of the army, are, apparently, at the bottom of the ministerial embarrassments. As a means of relieving the pressure, Count Andrassy has suggested the withdrawal of most of the forces from Bosnia for the present....The Turkish Prime Minister, Safvet Pasha, has issued a circular complaining to the European powers of the belligerent policy pursued by the Greeks.

News from Bosnia through Servian channels shows that the insurgents and the Turkish forces have become convinced that the Porte will not assist or countenance the rebellion, and that therefore no further armed resistance will be made to the Austrians. Large numbers of the rebels have taken refuge in Servia, where they were disarmed....The International Peace Congress ended at Paris on the 2d inst., after a sitting that was not altogether peaceful. On the contrary, it was somewhat confused and occasionally stormy. M. Bratiano defended Roumania energetically against the reflections of one of the speakers regarding alleged religious persecutions in that province, but the majority disapproved his defense. Later in the session M. Dupree attacked the Vatican in offensive terms, and was stopped by the President....Foreign dispatches announce that the City of Glasgow Bank had closed its doors. The liabilities reach the enormous amount of $50,000,000. The bank was established in 1839, and had fifty or sixty branches. This is the heaviest bank failure in Scotland since 1857, when this concern also suspended. The failure has caused great excitement throughout Scotland and in the London Stock Exchange, where there was a heavy fall in Scotch railway securities in consequence of the pressure of Scotch holders to sell.

It is announced from Rome that "the negotiations between Germany and the Vatican have failed. Prince Bismarck's ultimatum of obedience to the May laws was refused by the deposed Bishops in the letter addressed to the Pope. The Bavarian and Austrian Nuncios have been intrusted with a confidential mission to Prince Bismarck, but no hopes are entertained of their success. Germany will concede nothing, and the Vatican cannot yield all without alienating its most faithful partisans. ....A London dispatch says the British movement against Afghanistan will begin immediately....Since the beginning of the occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Austrians have lost 4,000 men in engagements with the rebels....According to a Berlin newspaper, Prof. Petermann, the geographer, committed suicide in consequence of domestic troubles. His father and brother died in the same manner.

It Was Muggins.

I witnessed a scene a few evenings ago which could be worked into a negro farce. A young man, well dressed and wearing a large diamond, was seated on a bench, his arm enclasping the supple waist of a beautiful female. The pair conversed in whispers, and I took it for granted that they were lovers, perhaps engaged to be married.

While the pair were whispering some sweet nothings to each other, a couple of middle-aged gentlemen approached, talking together in this style:

No. 1—"You say you want a wife, Smith, old boy. I suppose it must be a young one." (Digs his companion in the ribs.)

No. 2 (who is a wealthy Boston pork-packer)—"Of course I do. I wish you had a daughter, Earl."

No. 1—"I have, old boy, and if you can win her she is yours, with my blessing. Evelyn seems to be in love with Percy Marchmont, son of a Fifth avenue banker, but I will cure her of that if you want her, Smith. Ah! there she is now (points to pair seated on a bench); as I live that rogue Marchmont is kissing her."

No. 2—"Marchmont. What do you mean?"

No. 1—"Why, this is Percy Marchmont, a very wealthy young gentleman, who is sitting beside Evelyn."

No. 2—(Shouts) "Muggins!"

The lover jumps to his feet, and upon seeing the pork-packer beats a retreat. As the young man sails away No. 2 says: "He is an employe of mine, John Muggins. He has charge of the pickled pigs' feet department." Lady faints. Tableau.—Saratoga letter.

A single factory in Redditch, England, turns out between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 needles each week, or about 350,000,000 a year, which is equal to one-fourth of the population of the globe.

National-Bank Securities.

The Comptroller of the Currency has prepared the following table showing the kind and amount of United States bonds held on the 1st of October, 1878, to secure the redemption of the circulating notes of the national banks:

Authorizing Account.	Class of Bonds.	Rate of Interest.	Amount.
Feb. 8, 1861	1881s	6 per cent.	$ 2,319,000
July 17 and Aug. 5, 1861	1881s	6 per cent.	34,698,050
March 3, 1863	1881s	6 per cent.	19,834,900
March 3, 1865	5-20s	6 per cent.	11,787,350
July 1, '62, and July 2, '64	Pacific R. R.	6 per cent.	5,584,000
March 3, 1864	10-40s	5 per cent.	71,338,650
July 14, '70, and Jan. 20, '71	Funded 1881s	5 per cent.	125,273,750
July 14, '70, and Jan. 20, '71	Funded 1891s	4½ per ct.	44,069,050
July 14, '70, and Jan. 20, '71	Consols 1907	4 per cent.	29,826,800
Total			$349,580,050

All of these bonds are payable in coin by the terms of the acts under which they are issued, with the exception of $54,312,300 of the 6 per cent. bonds. Of this latter amount, $36,941,050 consist of 6s of 1881, which were issued prior to the passage of the Legal-Tender act, $11,797,650 of 5-20s, which were issued under the act of March 3, 1865, which law does not specify the kind of money in which such bonds shall be paid, although interest is made payable in coin, and $5,584,000 Pacific railroad currency 6s. On Oct. 1, 1870, the banks held $342,833,850 6 per cent. bonds, and $95,942,550 5 per cents. Since that time there has been a decrease of $172,744,100 in 6 per cent. bonds, and an increase of $100,575,050 in 5 per cent. bonds. During the last three years there has been a decrease of $54,356,012 in 6 per cent. bonds, and of $42,528,600 in 5 per cent. bonds, while in the same period $49,069,050 of 4½s and within the last eighteen months $29,826,800 of 4 per cents. have been deposited.

The Forgetfulness of Pain.

It is wonderfully easy to forget pain. We often thought there was a sort of witness to immortality in the strange fact that while emotion remembered is, to some extent, emotion experienced, sensation is never really remembered at all. Whatever belongs to the body seems to bear the stamp of mortality—it passes at once into the region of oblivion when we are delivered from its pressure. How different is the relation of memory to the maladies of the soul! Place the unkindness of long years ago side by side in your recollection of the toothache of last week, and you feel at once you are comparing a living thing and a dead thing. The unkindness, whether remembered by him who felt or inflicted it, is a living reality, potent to reopen and envenom the wound it had made. The toothache is gone, as if it had never been. To this fact, we are convinced, must be traced the common assumption that any degree of bodily suffering would be chosen rather than severe pain of mind. What people mean in saying this is, no doubt, that they would rather remember physical than mental pain, and, of course, a short experience of the pain which leaves no trace is to be preferred to an equally short experience of the pain which leaves a profound trace. But we are considering the case of one who knows that this fierce companion will not quit his side till the clay which gives it its power is laid in the grave, and no sufferer, we think, is to be set by his side. The deadliest mental anguish allows some respite, when the body claims its due; an undying grief does not prevent some faint gleams of pleasure when sleep comes on after fatigue or hunger and thirst are relieved. But there is no converse to the picture. An unintermittent pain of body, when very severe, leaves room for nothing but itself.—Spectator.

AFGHANISTAN.

Probability of War Between England and Russia.

[From the Chicago Times.]

The telegraph news from London relative to the English mission to Afghanistan is to the effect that it has been a complete failure. According to these accounts, the British mission, upon reaching Khyber pass, was confronted by an Afghan officer who refused to let the company pass through the mountains. Entreaties were of no avail. The officer manned the pass with his forces, and gave evidence that, if necessary, he would resist by force the passage of the English. He was notified that the Ameer would be held responsible; but the notification made no difference. He still refused the desired permission, and the English mission was compelled to retrace its steps to Calcutta. The English telegrams add that the matter will henceforth be regarded as something directly concerning English politics, and that it will be treated from this, instead of an Indian standpoint.

These facts reaching the American public, will not be apt to excite any especial interest except among those few who may have given some attention to affairs in that part of the world where this event has just occurred. In reality, the occurrence is one of great significance, because it has a most important bearing on the future relations of England and Russia. From this refusal of the representative of the Afghan Ameer to allow the English embassy to enter the country there may come events of world-wide importance.

Afghanistan is a country containing some 200,000 square miles and a population of nearly 10,000,000. It lies to the northwest of India, being adjacent to Scinde and the Punjaub. To the north of it lies Bokhara, in Turkistan, a country wholly under Russian influence. The great bugbear of England is an overland invasion of her rich Indian possessions by Russia, and the only feasible route for such an invasion is by way of Bokhara through Afghanistan. A Russian army gathered in Bokhara could cross the Hindoo Koosh mountains which separate Turkistan from Afghanistan, and then, moving east, could cross the Solyman mountains, through the famous Khyber pass, and find themselves in India. Well aware of the strategical value of Afghanistan as a barrier to a Russian advance, England, since 1838, has labored assiduously to secure a standing in that country, either as a conqueror, a protector or an ally.

Thus far these efforts have been, in the main, a most costly and bloody failure. There are many living who will not have forgotten the long and useless war which raged between the English and Afghans. In 1839 the English army entered the country through the Bolan pass—which lies south of the Khyber pass—with a heavy force which, at first, gained some temporary advantages. The principal cities were captured, the greater part of the country was overrun, and a ruler friendly to the British interests was installed. This was in 1840; but during that year and the following one insurrections broke out in every direction, which were only held in check by an expenditure of nearly $10,000,000 per annum. In the early part of 1842 the British garrisons were attacked by the insurrectionists, and in every instance they were either captured by storm or forced to capitulate. Thousands of the Indian and English troops were massacred as they were marching out of the country. In one case an army of some 5,000 men and some 10,000 camp followers, who had capitulated and were marching out of the country under a safe-conduct, were waylaid in the defiles of the Solyman mountains and massacred, with the exception of a single man. Another army some months after succeeded in entering the country and gaining a few small successes, but the forces soon after recrossed into India. Thus ended the attempt of England, whose failure, in its disgrace, has no parallel in modern English history.

Since that time the English have never invaded Afghanistan, although upon one or two occasions the Afghans have carried the war into Africa by crossing the mountains and making a descent upon India. Latterly the English have confined themselves to intrigues whose purpose has been the securing of a friendly ruler upon the Afghan throne. Up to the last year the British have had much to do, in a moral way, with a war which raged between Yacub Beg and his father; and they have also labored to secure such a separation between Afghanistan and Bokhara as would have the effect to impede the advance of Russia. For the last eight years the relations of England and Afghanistan have been of a quiet and rather friendly nature.

The telegrams now coming from London relative to the fate of the mission which started for Afghanistan, and the further fact that the affair is no longer a matter to be handled from India, but from Great Britain, shows two things. One is that Afghanistan, and by consequence the Russian road to the Indies, has fallen into the hands of Russia. The second is that the English people, by installing the Afghan question in English politics, show that they regard the event as one of the greatest importance. It would be a little strange if, at this very moment, when the salvos of the guns which announced Beaconsfield's diplomatic "victory" over Russia have hardly died away, the "check" which England gave Russia at Berlin should now, so soon, be returned by a "checkmate" on that distant portion of the political chess-board at Cabul. It is a fact that, while the English mission was vainly knocking at Khyber pass for admission to Afghanistan, a Russian mission was already installed at Cabul. Already is Berlin avenged. Russia has possession of the only available route to India, and has friendly nations guarding every inch of its extent from Bokhara to the Indies.

Sad Scene at a Memphis Cemetery.

The sorrows of the epidemic were never pictured in more distressing scenes than were witnessed at Elmwood Cemetery. Six friends of the late Ed Worsham had followed his remains to the "city of the dead," for the purpose of paying the last sad tribute to their dearly-beloved companion. On arriving at the cemetery they found the Rev. Dr. White, of Calvary Church, who, with his aged wife and faithful colored servant, were the only mourners at the funeral of the minister's son, Eugene D. White, who had died the day previous. On learning that the remains of "poor Ned" were about to be consigned to the grave, Dr. White, who is also a Mason, asked the privilege of reading his burial service. The request was readily granted, and the reverend minister, in words most feelingly rendered, amid tears and sobs that almost choked their utterance, eulogized the character of the deceased. As the sod was falling upon the coffin of the deceased, Dr. White was approached by a gentleman well known in this community, who asked him to read the service over his dead wife. He was the only mourner, and was heart-broken over his loss. The kind old man willingly consented, but first asked that he might consign to the grave his son. The mourners of Ed Worsham acted as pall-bearers to Eugene D. White, and, with uncovered heads, listened with aching hearts to the father as he read the service over his dead son. This painful scene had hardly ended when Mr. Ed Beasley approached and said he would take it as an especial favor if Dr. White would read the funeral service over the late William Willis, whom a few friends had just brought to consign to their last resting-place. Thus it was that the good old man, whose venerable appearance is in keeping with his age, performed the duties of his calling, within the short period of half an hour, to four departed souls that are now at rest.—Memphis Avalanche.

How to Get Rid of Ants.

During a recent visit to Mr. Humann, in Ostheim, I had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with a very successful method of speedily getting rid of ants which are so troublesome in the apiary.

One takes small bottles, fills them half full of sirup or sweetened water, and puts them in the places where the ants have their passage-ways, in such a manner as the necks of the bottles lean against a wall or board, in order that the ants may easily fall into the trap and drown.

By means of camphor, ants can be driven from rooms where honey is stored.

In gardens, lime-dust operates very destructively upon them. Their hills, after being scatched open, are sprinkled with lime dust, and then hot water is poured on them.

To render jars of honey or preserved fruit inaccessible to these insects, place the jars in chests whose bottoms have been previously covered with ashes or pulverized chalk.—Elsaessische Bienenzuechter.

The editor of a religious paper in Iowa gives the following reasons for his love for the circus: "As we gaze at the lions, tigers and monkeys, and think that nature made all of them, we are not so sure. And when we look at the beautiful young lady, with nothing on but a blue ribbon round her waist, with one leg pointing to 6 o'clock, and the other to high noon, and think that nature made her, too, just as she was, except the ribbon, we begin to lean up to the circus. But, when the brass band begins to play and the elephants go round, we rush in for a front seat to get in ahead of the ministers, who always wear stove-pipe hats, and won't sit down in front."

Senator Giles, of Virginia, and Judge Duval, of Maryland, boarded in Washington during Washington's administration at the house of a Mrs. Gibbon, whose daughters were talkative and were not young. Some years after they met at the capital, and, while chatting over old times, the Senator asked the Judge, then Comptroller of the Treasury, if he knew what had become of "that cackling old maid, Jenny Gibbon?" "She is Mrs. Duval, sir," was the reply.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEODORE REED, Editor.

BENJ. F. BUTLER.

His Great Speech at Terre Haute, Ind.

The Vital Questions of Finance and Currency Reviewed in a Masterly Manner.

Facts, Figures, Reason and Argument for the Millions.

Fellow-Citizens: Why are we assembled here in many, many thousands? What brings the people of Indiana here to-night? It is to deliberate upon the exercise of that right known to freemen—the right to elect their own rulers and enact their own laws. The frequent recurrence of elections has robbed this and like occasions of much of the importance which they would otherwise have. Think a moment, fellow-citizens! You are about to do that duty which is given to no other people under heaven. In other countries the making of the laws is only committed to nobles, Emperors, Princes and Kings; but here, thank God, the fiat of the people is in all political matters, like the will of God, final and conclusive upon all men.

On such occasions as this, when we are about high and important business, it becomes us coolly, carefully and calmly to reason upon the subject which is before us, to have the conscience enlightened, the judgment satisfied, and the mind pleased, that we may do as we do in other great and important concerns of life.

The occasion which brings us together suggests topics which interest all. There is no difference of opinion about what is necessary to be done, but how it is to be done is a matter for our deliberation. We know that there are in the East warehouses filled to overflowing with all the necessaries of life, save food. We know, on the other hand, that the goodness of God, in the course of three most abundant harvests, has filled the granaries of the West with food for all the country; and not only that, but we have been exporting it by millions—aye, by hundreds of millions to other countries where they can pay for it. What is the reason, then, why there are starving men in the East, and barefooted men, women and children in the West? Why is it, I ask again, that with all this abundance we cannot be supplied here, and that there are starving men in America, while millions upon millions of dollars' worth of goods go abroad, and millions upon millions of dollars' worth of corn, wheat and pork are sent to other countries? Why do the workmen of other countries get our corn and beef? It is simply because they have the money to pay for it, and we have not. That is the answer to the whole question. Why have we not got the money to pay for it? It is because of the legislation of the country for the past fifteen years, and it is upon that legislation that we are now here to pass.

When in 1861 the war broke out, we were upon what is called a specie basis in our finances; that is, there was about 25 per cent. of gold in the banks to redeem some $220,000,000 of bank circulation. The Republican party had come into power in the country, but their accession to power had brought with them a war. That war required men and those men required money for their support and their clothing. The Government called upon the banks to furnish that money as a loan. They loaned in all less than $50,000,000, although it was told to us then by all the statistics that there were over $250,000,000 of gold in the country. But gold took to its hole, for it is the most cowardly of all things, if it is the most valuable of all things, and from that hole it has not yet appeared. That left the Government without any resource, and on the 13th of July, 1861, we issued the kind of money which had been recommended by Jefferson, which had been traced out by Franklin, and which had been pronounced constitutional by Calhoun, the strictest of all constructionists of the Democratic politicians of the country, and that money was issued in the form of treasury notes, or, as we now almost affectionately call them, "greenbacks." And those greenbacks were at par with gold because they were made by the United States receivable for all debts, public and private—customs revenue and every other form of taxes—and they remained the same as gold until by the disaster of Bull Run we were obliged to raise a very large army. During the coming fall and winter $150,000,000 more of greenbacks had to be temporarily issued—in December and the following winter. Up to the 25th of February, 1862, it was debated in Congress what sort of money should be issued by the Government, and, at last, the House passed a bill making this issue of greenbacks as the first had been issued, legal tender for all purposes. That alarmed the banks. They chose a committee from Wall street whom they sent to the Senate, and the Senate of the United States under the lead of that committee of bankers said "no, these notes must not be made in the form of ordinary bank notes, but fundable in a United States bond at 6 per cent., made payable at the option of the Government within twenty years." Thaddeus Stevens, the great man of that day, the true-hearted patriot of that day, who stood at the head of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, opposed that issue, and said, "No, stand by the House bill. We will not issue any money that should be funded, in any form, until after the war." And that contest raged between the House and Senate for days and weeks, until the great pressure of the necessity of paying the soldiers required some action, and then Stevens, and his coadjutors of the House, reluctantly yielded to the issue of greenbacks, fundable in a 6 per cent. bond, and in the form of a bank note, promising to pay something apparently on demand. But it was required that on the back of that note should be this contract: "This note is receivable for all dues, public and private, as a legal tender, except interest on the public debt and for customs duties."

There was the great mistake. The bankers said that if this note could be made fundable it would never go below par. They said if the customs duties were paid in gold, and that gold was pledged to pay the interest on the bonds, the greenback would remain at par, and that view of the question induced the Senate of the United States to stand upon that proposition, and insist upon a note being issued like that. How much they were mistaken; or, if not mistaken, how much they deceived the people, all now know. It happened immediately that the greenback began to go down. It was not subscribed for by the banks; it was not subscribed for by capitalists, but it was paid to the soldier for his services; paid to his widow for her pension; paid to his orphan children for their support. It was paid to the farmer for his corn and beef; to the manufacturer for his cloth; to the gunmaker for his guns, the powdermaker for his powder, and it was taken by the people; but the bankers of Europe—and the bankers of America always follow the bankers of Europe—would have nothing to do with it, and as the war went on and more greenbacks had to be issued they went down, down, down, as regards gold, until they stood in November, 1864, at $2.85, gold being $1.

Soon after that the war ended, and at that time, when a thousand-dollar bond could be bought for $400 in gold, the capitalists subscribed—that is, they bought up the greenbacks. The national-bank system had been inaugurated. The greenbacks were paid in as legal tenders to them, and they funded them into these bonds when they were only 40 per cent. What happened? A man at that day, in 1864, could take $400 in gold and buy $1,000; receive interest on that bond, at 6 per cent., from that day to this, which would be $840 for his $400 in interest alone; and then by the act, which I will speak of by and by, that bond was made equal to gold; so that every one of the capitalists that subscribed in that time has been able to realize at this day $1,840 in gold for a single outlay of $400. That is the contract—a pretty hard one—pretty severe upon the people; and I call your attention to it because now, whenever we speak of that contract, we are told, "Oh, no; don't do that. Don't say a word about that contract. It was patriotism that led to the taking of these bonds. It was to aid the country. It was high patriotism, and why seek to disturb these patriotic bondholders who in the day of the country's peril came forward and subscribed their money to save it."

I am willing to stand by the contract, but I don't want any cheating, any hypocrisy, any pretense about patriotism, when it was simply greediness and avarice that made them take the bonds and fully has that avarice been fed; and now we are to be taxed, and our children and children's children are to be taxed for generations to pay that interest. But let us pass on:

After the war was over, in three years we lived up in this country our greenback currency from 185 discount to 25 only; and the proposition of the people was that we should live on in the same way until the greenback should go to par in gold. For we, fellow-citizens, want for the people a currency as good as gold, so that there shall be but one currency for the bondholder and one currency for the people—equal and alike in value.

Now I call to witness that from 1866, 1867, 1868, were there ever such days of prosperity known in this land? The farmer could sell his produce for a price that would pay him, and he could afford to pay his workmen. The manufacturer could sell his work for a price that would pay, so that he could afford to pay his workmen. Old mortgages were paid off and no new ones incurred. Old houses were repaired and fixed up, and in many houses of the farmer and the mechanic came the carpet and piano, and every comfort of life. Was anybody dissatisfied with the times of 1866, 1867 and 1868? Were not the people entirely satisfied? Did any of you send a petition to Congress like this: "Whereas, there are now very good times, everybody is employed, everybody is making money, everybody is prosperous and everybody happy, too happy and comfortable, and, therefore we humbly pray Congress to do something to alter this." Did anybody send such a petition to Congress? I was there and I never heard of such a one. But in the midst of that prosperity it was thought by the bankers that it was necessary to contract the currency for the purpose of making the greenback equal to gold. There was no occasion to have been in a hurry about that. The greenback had grown up, I say from 185 below par to 25 between three and four years. Why not have let us go on in that prosperity, in that fullness of enterprise and industry that the country was then enjoying, and we could have reached it? But no; there must be contraction. It emanated first from Germany and England. It was followed by our financiers; the race of contraction begun, and the currency has been contracted from that day to this. What has been the result—the condition of things that I just described to you. Starving men and women all over the country, and especially in the West. What, then, is the cause of this? Was it so in 1866, 1867 and 1868? No. Why not? Because there was plenty of money in circulation among the people. What is the cause of the present condition? Simply because there is not plenty of money in circulation among the people. We are told, "But the purchasing power of the dollar is greater now than it was in 1867 and 1868." Granted; but how do you get the dollar? That is the question, I agree. It is like the story of the Scotchman who came over here from Scotland many years ago, and was boasting a little about old Scotland, and he says: "Why, in Scotland a saxpence will buy more than a half-dollar here." "Well," said the Yankee who was talking with him, "Why didn't you stay in Scotland, then?" "Why," replied the Scotchman, "because I couldn't get the saxpence." How do you get the dollar? It is no use to say to me a thing is cheap if I have nothing to buy it with? It makes no difference whether it is cheap or dear. Go anywhere without money and try to get a breakfast or a dinner, and you will find you cannot do it. Men must have money in order to reap the value of their labor, and men must have money in order to employ labor.

Now let us go back a little and see what has happened. I did not state to you the strength of my case. I said to you that the banker who gave $400 for a $1,000 bond got $1,840 for his $400. What else has he got? For fourteen years he has escaped taxes upon that, for that bond is not taxable; but the farmer's farm, the manufacturer's mill, the mechanic's tools—everything is taxed, but the bond is not taxed. It is the contract, they say. Be it so. I agree that we can't tax the bonds, but I will tell you what you can do—and I have examined the question as a lawyer with some care, and I have no doubt of the correctness of my opinion—I find nothing in the law by which we have agreed not to tax the fellow who has got the bonds. We can tax the income, and I think that taxation should be as equal as possible. That the taxation should not, as it does now, fall only on that visible property which lays out of doors, where the tax-gatherer may always see it. I hold that the men that have their money invested in anything shall pay equal, fair and just taxes with all other men, for it stands in this way: I may own, any man may own, half a million or a million of United States bonds, on which he receives an income of $60,000 a year. He may come into the city of Terre Haute, and live here with you, be protected by your police and watchmen, be guarded in all his rights by your laws, have the advantage of your fire department, send his children to your schools, and not be liable to be taxed a dollar, excepting poll tax, if you are unfortunate enough in this State to have such a tax as that. That is the condition of things. Now, I say that is unfair, unjust, unequal, un-American. And that ought to be changed. I don't know but that you and I, if we had the bonds, would want to keep it just as it is. I rather think we would; for these men who hold the bonds are no better or worse than we. I don't blame them for holding on to it. I don't blame them for hiring newspapers and brass bands and everything to persuade the people to let them hold on to it in that way. You and I would do it if we were in their place, because, I say, we are no better or worse than they. But I do blame you, the people, for allowing yourselves to be fooled with all manner of delusions upon politics, and letting them do it. You are to blame, and you have been to blame for some years, because this matter has not been fairly brought to your attention. But now, when it is brought to your attention, come together as one man, and have these and other matters, that we shall discuss by and by, righted.

Now, then, as I am upon it, suppose I finish this question of taxation. You are to-day the worst taxed people upon this continent. There is no people taxed to the extent to which you are. We used to hear of the taxation of England, and we were glad that our forefathers had rebelled against England, and that we had been enabled to have a free country and a light taxation. But I state to you, with full knowledge of the responsibility I take as a man versed in public affairs, in speaking to you on the subject, that to-day, the American citizen is taxed almost double what the inhabitants of Great Britain are, for the same amount of property, or the same amount of protection. Why, think of it a moment. What is the matter that your farms are being sold for taxes, and you cannot get money enough to pay them? What is the matter that houses all over this town are being put up for taxes and bid off by some Eastern friend of mine, I have no doubt, on a speculation, to get 50 per cent. penalty? It is because, first, only a part of the property is taxed, and secondly, because of the extravagant expenditures in the United States and State Governments. It is because we have been paying for the last few years the national debt, as it is called. For whose benefit? For the benefit of the bankers and bondholders alone, not for the benefit of the people. What does this taxation amount to, do you suppose? Why, you are taxed, I suppose, here for State purposes an average, say, of 2 per cent. At least we are nearly that in Massachusetts; and I suppose it is quite as much here. It may be more. Now, my friends, think of it a moment. The United States census, year by year, for the last thirty years, shows that the total increase of property is only 3 per cent. a year. What are your taxes? Two per cent. I will admit, for the sake of argument, that the whole property of Indiana, in this good year, is so managed that you could get 6 per cent. a year out of it. Very well. What is your 2 per cent.? That 2 per cent. is one-third of all your labor. The increase of all your labor is taken for taxation for State and county purposes alone.

When we were boys we used to hear and read about tithes, and we were glad we did not live in a country where they levied tithes, that is, took one-tenth. We now take one-third. We used to think it was hard that the tithe-man should come around and take every tenth pig. Now the tax-gatherer comes around and takes every third pig, and casts a longing glance at the old sow besides. This, my friends, is no laughing matter. Every man who receives his tax bill, and looks around for money to pay it, feels it deeply. When we used to have good times, in 1866, 1867 and 1868, we didn't mind taxes. Why? Because we had the money to pay them. True, the purchasing power of a dollar has greatly increased in the purchase of some things, but it won't purchase any more taxes than it did in 1867. Mark that. Taxes are not any lighter because the purchasing power of the dollar is greater. You say to me, "Why, Gen. Butler, this is a pretty hard indictment that you are bringing against the Government of the country. Why is this contraction made? How could Congress go into it? There must have been men who saw it. Who got any of the advantage of this contraction that brought down the value of property so much?" The people didn't ask it. Who did ask it? I told you that the foreign financiers, the German bankers, and others. "Why?" Because property would rise. "Why?" you ask, "how is that? I thought you just said that all property was contracted." No, I did not. I said that property was contracted. One-third of all the property in the United States went up by contraction; two-thirds of it went down. One-third of all the property in the United States is invested in some form of debt, such as bonds, notes, mortgages, etc., and that went up. Everybody else's property went down. Let me make it plain by illustration, because I want everybody to understand it, for the moment they understand it I know how they will vote in the coming election. Suppose, sir, you build a house, we will say for $6,000, and that you borrowed $3,000 from somebody to build it with in 1868, in "flush times" (that is the phrase, I believe), with inflated money—the money you gave a mortgage for, the same money you built the house with. Now, they say the house came down in value because it was built with inflated currency—built on too high a level. Ought not the mortgage that was built out of that same inflated currency come down at the same time? Perhaps your house has sunk 50 per cent., because, as they say, it was built on inflated currency. But the mortgage on that house has not come down a dollar. It is the same old $3,000 mortgage, and now sweeps away your house. Is this not an exact condition of things? How many are there before me who know about this practically? You know how it is yourselves, exactly. Think of it a moment, my friends. One-third of all the wealth of the United States is in the form of notes, bonds and mortgages, and that kind of wealth, which have not gone down a dollar, but have gone up 10 per cent. All the rest of the property of the United States has gone down 50 per cent. at least since 1868. Now you see why the men that hold this one-third of the property sent their lobby agents and others to Washington to have Congress and have the Secretary of the Treasury agree to a contraction of the currency; to bring down all the rest of the property and bring theirs up. This is not fair. I am willing, if it is necessary, to have all the property go down, provided it all goes down together; but it is not fair to have one-third go up and the other two-thirds go down. I am against that kind of a law. I am not here to call men hard names, or to say anything harsh against any man, but I am here to speak against, and argue against, the condition of law which allows this to be done, and this has been done, and is being done, here within your knowledge.

I see many thinking business men here before me who are acquainted with affairs.

Now, let us go a little further: I have shown you these troubles, and they have all come from endeavors to reach specie payment, as it is called. Now, I want to say there never was such a thing as specie payments, and there never will be any such a thing. There may be a pretense of specie payments, as there was in 1857. What specie payment means is this: That there shall be deposited in the banks, or elsewhere, $1 in gold to redeem $4 in paper; 25 per cent. you put in the bank and allow the bank to issue on that $25 $100, and charge interest for it to their neighbors, as you know. That has been the specie payment that this country has seen, and must always see, because it would simply be preposterous if we had $1 specie in the vault for every dollar in circulation—$750,000,000. Why, there would be the loss on that specie alone of the interest of nearly one-half the national debt. Therefore, they never lock up money in that way. Now, that system has always failed us. It failed us in 1819. How did it fail us? Why, there was a call in Europe for gold more than we had. They had use for more than we had. The moment it was exported it brought down this one dollar for four, and that contracted the currency four times. It failed us the same way in 1828; it failed us the same way in 1837—brought ruin upon all merchants, mechanics, manufacturers and farm industries for the time being. It failed us again in 1857—ruined again. And what did it? The bankers of Europe, in 1857, took away from this country between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. That made a contraction. That brought down values to a very low figure, and bankrupted all our merchants and men of enterprise. What was the remedy? The remedy was that the banks suspended specie payments and issued irredeemable paper. What was the remedy for the mischief? If irredeemable paper was a good remedy for the mischief, why not let us have the remedy all the time, and not have the mischief? What's the use once in ten years having a fever for the sake of being cured? It broke down in 1857. It failed in that way because it was based upon a supposed amount of gold. We are a gold and silver-producing country just as we are a wheat and corn-producing country. Why not let the produce of the labor of man go abroad and pay our debts and settle our balances against us? Why lock it up here as currency? "Oh, because," they say, "because we must have gold currency; we must have the gold dollar of the world!" I have heard that iterated and reiterated until I am sick and tired of it. Fellow-citizens, I can say, upon the responsibility of my position, and I will demonstrate it to you, there was never any such a thing as "the gold dollar of the world." I am aware that Mr. Hayes said, the other day, at Milwaukee, I think, or in Iowa, that we had sent our produce abroad and been paid in the dollar of the world. I beg his pardon, there was never any such thing as the "gold dollar of the world," and I will show you that there can not be. Take our dollar to begin with. Our dollar is made of metal; one part in ten is alloy, nine parts fine gold. The English and French gold has one part alloy and ten parts fine gold—ten in eleven; ours is nine in ten. Now do you suppose there is any Englishman fool enough to take our gold, only nine parts fine, in exchange for his gold, which is ten parts fine? By no means. Therefore when our gold goes abroad it goes abroad as so much merchandise—by weight—and the stamp of the Government is only used as a guarantee of its fineness—nothing more and nothing less. And the moment it goes abroad it is put into the melting-pot, because it is too much alloyed to pass in Europe. The moment any gold from Europe comes here it is put into the melting-pot, because it is too fine to pass here. You can get more for it by coining it. And nobody ever pays money from one country to another in the coin of the country. What do you do? You go to England and buy English iron in pounds, shillings and pence. We do not buy it there in dollars and cents. The Englishman comes here and buys your corn in dollars and cents. He does not buy it in his calculation of money. And he manages to sell your corn, when he gets over there, and you manage to sell the iron; and yet you buy the one in pounds and he buys the other in dollars. There never was anything like a "gold dollar of the world." There have been many attempts to make one. We tried to make a silver dollar of the world, and this summer sent a commission, headed by Mr. Groesbeck, of Ohio, over to Europe, and we have been laughed at for our pains. Our silver is 15½ parts fine to one of alloy. English sterling silver is 16 parts fine to one of alloy. Our silver varies little with the silver of France. There might be a silver dollar of the world, perhaps much more easily than a gold dollar; but there is neither the one nor the other. Now, then, why do we want to have gold? Oh, we must have gold, they say, because the currency of the country will go down; it won't retain its value. The only trouble with the currency has always been that it was made redeemable in something or other. Our Continental money, which did not deserve the hard words that have been said about it, paid our soldiers in the Revolution, fought our battles, and without it we should never have had our liberties, for we could have neither gold nor silver; we could not get it; our Continental money failed because it was made redeemable in gold and silver—Spanish milled dollars; and everybody knew there was not a Spanish milled dollar, or gold or silver dollar to redeem it. Therefore, as compared with gold or silver money, it went down. But what it did do was, it distributed all the expenses of the war among all the people, and relieved them of the burden of a war debt. The soldier took it. It went down in the Revolution 10 per cent. in his hands. The merchant took it; it went down 10 more. And so on, and so on, until it went out; thereby distributing the whole burden among the people. Everybody lost some, precisely as our greenback, that was made redeemable, went down and down until it got to be 30 cents only, and then we passed a law putting it into a bond at 6 per cent. interest, and making it a burden upon ourselves and our children forever. Our Revolutionary fathers were too shrewd to do that. When the Continental money got down to 30 cents they let it go and go forever. We picked ours up, in the interest of the banker, and we put it into a bond, the interest of which was payable in gold, but the principal in greenbacks.

Now, my friends, we were dealing with the question of gold—what do we want gold for? "Oh, to give the greenback a value." Pardon me, for that greenback is issued by the Government of the United States, and has it not the credit of the United States behind it? Has it not the pledge of all the property, real, personal and mixed, including all the gold and silver of the United States behind it? It is said again, "Oh, we must have it based on gold, because it is unconstitutional to have anything legal tender except gold and silver." I have been a student of the constitution for the last forty years—it was forty years ago last Monday night since I made my first political speech—I find no such thing in the constitution. Who had to do with the making of the constitution? Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson. Benjamin Franklin said, in so many words, "Gold and silver have no intrinsic value; paper based on taxation, and receivable for taxes, issued by the Government, is the best means of currency for the people." Thomas Jefferson said, "Treasury notes based on taxation, and receivable for all debts, are far preferable to gold and silver as currency, and they will crowd out gold and silver, where they are wanted, and leave a non-exportable currency in the hands of the people." He was the first statesman of whom I have any record who used that express phrase in regard to paper money and non-exportable currency.

Let us see what they said in the constitution. They said they made a form of government for the general welfare of the people. They gave to the Government of the United States certain powers, and they reserved to the people of the several States the powers they did not give to the Government. Now, they gave to Congress the right to "coin money and regulate the value thereof." They said then that they took away the power from the States to coin money or issue bills of credit. It was the intention of the framers of the constitution to make a uniform currency; and I pause here to ask if that intention was ever better carried out than it is by the greenback, which is as good in Maine, in Texas, in Alaska, in Florida, as in Indiana. It is uniform all over the country. Now, having the power, Congress proceeded to exercise it. But it is said that it was exercised in war. True; but if it had not been in the constitution it could not have been exercised in war any more than in peace. Congress had no war powers except such powers as were given to it by the constitution. The war was the necessity for its exercise, but it didn't give the power. It was a method of borrowing money in one view of it, and the reason why money was borrowed was because it was wanted. But the fact a man or a nation wants money by no means gives them the power to borrow it. The power was inherent in the constitution—inherent in Congress—was taken away from the States, and the very fact that it was taken away from the States shows that the people reserved it for Congress alone to regulate commerce among the States.

It has been decided by the Supreme Court to have been constitutional, and that argument needn't scare anybody. I never have seen anybody myself, up to this time, that has ever refused to take his pay for a debt in greenbacks because they are unconstitutional. When anybody comes and tells you that the greenback is unconstitutional, just say to him, "Well, I owe you a little bill. I suppose you don't want to take unconstitutional money?" You will find you won't keep your money.

Now, I will tell you what we want—what I want for one, and everybody who wants to have this thing changed; who wants to have the good times of '66, '67 and '68 brought back again, wants this: We want absolute money—money not redeemable in anything.

What is money? Money is the measure of value between man and man. You work for me, say for what I call a dollar, and what the Government has made a dollar. That measures the value of your day's work. You buy a hat of another for a dollar—for what he calls a dollar; that same dollar measures the value of his hat and your day's work, and makes a fair exchange. Precisely as if you should agree with me to swap a bushel of corn for a bushel of oats. We measure your corn and my oats in the same bushel—we exchange corn and oats. The dollar is the measure of value as the bushel is the measure of quantity. So, all through other business transactions.

Now, what do you want your measure of value redeemed for? It is a measure of value the same as a yard-stick is the measure of length; the pound weight the measure of weight; a quart pot the measure of liquids. What do you want with a redeemable yard-stick, with a redeemable quart pot, or a redeemable pound weight? Why, your yard stick redeems itself every time it measures a yard of calico; your dollar redeems itself every time it measures a day's work. It is redeemed all the time. I pass it to you for your day's work, and it is redeemed so far as I am concerned; you pass it to him for a hat, and it is redeemed as far as you are concerned; he passes it to the butcher, and it is redeemed so far as he is concerned; the butcher passes it to the farmer, and it is redeemed so far as he is concerned; the farmer is glad to get it to pay his taxes, and it is redeemed so far as he is concerned. What more redemption do you want than that?

"But, oh!" you say, "we must have a gold currency!" What do you want with a gold currency any more than you want with a gold yard-stick, or a gold quart pot, or a gold pound weight? You say, "We must have something that is represented by something for a unit of value, and that a great commercial nation cannot get along without it." Stop a moment! The great commercial nation of England reckons in pounds, shillings and pence. Has anybody ever seen an English pound? There has not been one for 400 years—not one. What was it originally? A pound sterling was a pound of sterling silver, fifteen parts fine in sixteen. It was a pound troy. It was divided into twenty shillings, twelve pence making a shilling; as twenty pennyweights make one ounce, and twelve ounces a pound. But some of the old English Kings, away back in the reign of the Edwards, thought it best to debase it. Now in a pound weight of silver there are 47 shillings. Yet England reckons all her great commercial transactions in pounds, shillings and pence, whereas a pound is but an ideal unit of value. England has got along very well in a money point of view. I want to call your attention to the fact that the money value was, at first, exactly like the weight value; and so it was in other nations of the world. You remember when Abraham bought the Cave of Machpelah for a burying place. He weighed out 400 shekels of silver, "current among merchants." It was all weighed in those days precisely as our money goes abroad by weight.

How Peter Resisted Temptation.

A colored brother whose eyes were watery, and who had evidently been imbibing experience whisky, was telling his young friend George that he ought to gine too. Said George, "I would, but de temptation to do wrong is too strong for me." "Whar's yer back bone dat ye can't rose up and stand temptation!" exclaimed Brother Peter. "I was dat way myself once. Right in dis yere town I had a chance to steal a pa'r of boots—mighty fine ones, too. Nobody was dar to see me, and I reached out my hand and de debbil said take 'em. Den a good spirit whispered for me to let dem boots alone." "An' you didn't take 'em?" "No, sah—not much. I took a pa'r o' cheap shoes off de shelf, an' I let dem boots alone!"—Richmond (Va.) Whig.

THE SPECIAL CASES.

Nearly $200,000 a Year to the People Who Assisted Hayes to the Presidency.

[From the Baltimore Gazette.]

The following full list of the patronage given to those who helped to manipulate the theft of Louisiana and Florida has been prepared with great care. It includes not only the visiting statesmen and the attorneys before the Electoral Commission, but the Returning Boards and the army of understrappers who did the dirty work in the parishes in the capacity of Supervisors, to say nothing of the mob of retainers around the New Orleans Custom House. It will be seen that the country is paying the actors in that piece of business, great and small, an aggregate of nearly $200,000 a year; and many of the appointments, indeed all of the important ones, were directed by Hayes. The only corrections in the list are in the names of Denis, the little giant of Florida, who is not now in Government employ, and Maxwell, of the same State, who was recently cashiered and court-martialed from the army in disgrace. HAYES' ILLUSIVE FIGURES.

Square Refutations of His Assertions in Minnesota—Economy Enforced by the Resolute Action of a Democratic House.

[Washington Cor. New York Sun.]

The figures which Hayes paraded before the farmers of Minnesota have already been roughly handled. The returns, contemporary and recently published by the Treasury Department, show that his statement of the currency in circulation in 1866 was over $200,000,000 out of the way. A small blunder, but of different sort, appears when he puts forward the sums raised by customs and internal revenue as the measure of Federal taxation, when Federal taxation really includes additional taxes to the amount of from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000. Aside from positive misstatements, Hayes' speech put forward the taxation in 1873, the year of the panic, and the expenses then, and, comparing them with the taxation and expenses now, reduced in the first case by $61,000,000, and in the other by $53,000,000, the tacit conclusion is drawn that the party in whose hands the administration of the Government still rests, in spite of its failure to elect its candidate at the last Presidential election, has been for five years reducing the expenditures as the receipts from taxation shrank. This is not true. The Republican party has not done this. Had the policy of the Republican party continued without a break, the Federal Government would to-day be bankrupt, no surplus would exist to meet its demand notes when due next January, and payments upon the sinking fund would have long since been suspended.

The country had just come to the edge of a great commercial panic in 1873, when the Republican party cut off some $29,000,000 of revenue by placing tea and coffee on the free list without the slightest possible benefit to a single consumer. That and other reductions, and the panic together, swept off $44,000,000 of revenue. In two years, from 1872 to 1874, the revenue fell off $85,000,000. It might have been expected that the party in power would have reduced expenditures. It did not. Instead, the expenditures were increased during the first year of this sudden loss in revenue, and only reduced the next year, 1874, as compared with 1872, about $10,000,000.

This Congress did, both branches Republican. The departments did no better. Forecasting expenditures in the autumn of 1873, with a reduction in revenue of $40,000,000 in the fiscal year just past, and so rapid a reduction in the current fiscal year that a deficiency of $13,000,000 was predicted, the departments added to past estimates in years of plenty $34,000,000 in their demands for the fiscal year 1875, or $14,000,000 more than the estimated revenue of that fiscal year, and $21,000,000 more than was finally collected. And yet for three years past, while the House has attempted to make reductions, Republican papers have rung with the declaration that the departments must of necessity know what money is needed for the public service. This went on. The revenue from "taxation," as Mr. Hayes terms the customs and internal-revenue receipts, fell, year by year, forty-one, thirty-six, twenty-one, and thirteen millions below the estimates of a Republican Treasury Department. Its guesses proved worse than useless. Nothing but the broad, liberal margin squeezed out of the people over and above the usual lavish expenditures prevented bankruptcy. To its bonded debt and current expenses the Government, two years after the panic, added the obligation contained in its promise to redeem its demand notes Jan. 1, 1879. Till the coming of a Democratic House Congress did nothing. From the time when a Republican Congress made up the appropriation for the year 1874 to the year when a Republican Congress made up the appropriations for 1876 the revenue fell off $55,000,000, but the appropriations were reduced less than $1,000,000. Neither to Congress nor to the departments did steadily diminishing taxes bring the consciousness that expenditures should also diminish. That pleasing correspondence between reduction in "the burden of taxation" and expenditure since the panic, which Mr. Hayes displays, is not due to the party which tried to elect him. A Democratic House came in. A Republican Secretary of the Treasury and Republican departments presented estimates for 1877, $10,000,000 larger than the estimated receipts for 1877, and $65,000,000 larger than those receipts proved to be when that fiscal year was over. Reduction was begun. The House cut off $28,000,000 from the expenses of the Government. It refused to accede to demands for extraordinary expenses. A deficit was avoided. The accumulation of coin became possible. Through both sessions the Forty-fourth Congress persisted in this policy. When the Forty-fifth Congress met it was to be told by a Republican Secretary of the Treasury that a reduction of $5,000,000 below the point fixed by the Forty-fourth, at its first session, could be made "without crippling any branch of the public service." The economy of a Democratic House, continued through two years, has kept the expenditures of the Government within its lessened and lessening income. A Republican ex-candidate for the Presidency parades the fact to-day.

FAREWELL OLD GERREYMANDER, YOUR DAYS ARE NUMBERED.

300 DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY FOR THE STATE TICKET IN THIS COUNTY.

DeKALB ELECTS A DEMOCRATIC REPRESENTATIVE BY 350 MAJORITY.

The Entire County Ticket Elected Except Clerk and Sheriff, and Probably Auditor,

Of which the People will be Duly Advised by the Republican Papers of the County.

The latest advices indicate the election of the Democratic State ticket by from 7,000 to 10,000 majority, with a gain of three Congressmen.

We have no news as to the result of the Congressional election in this district.

The Republican party in this county, with the assistance of a few disaffected Democrats, succeeded in electing a Clerk, Auditor and Sheriff. The "root of all evil"—money, was brought to bear in every conceivable way, not less than $3000 was applied "where it would do the most good" by the Republican candidates for these three offices alone, which resulted in Mays, Walter and Work being "scooped."

It so happens that about all the county printing is controlled in these three offices, which we presume will be very satisfactory to our Republican brethren, but it occurs to us that our erring Democratic friends who took such an active part in the defeat of the Democratic candidates will realize their error in thus indirectly striking a blow at the paper which they expect to advocate the interests of the party in the future. We have undertaken the publication of the COURIER and we intend to stick to it, teat or no teat, we came to stay and have not changed our mind.

With a little organization, and the least bit of harmony, the Democrats of Auburn precinct could have changed the result on Auditor and Sheriff last Tuesday. It is not encouraging to see a dozen or two prominent Democrats standing around the polls with their hands in their pockets.

Concerning Campbell's great show, which will exhibit at Waterloo, Tuesday, Oct. 15th, an exchange says: "The menagerie is of itself well worthy of a visit. Amongst the many animals are to be found a very fine buffalo, a sea-horse, a blessbok, an African wart hog, panthers, hyenas, leopards, a magnificent tiger and two of the finest African lions. The equestrian and acrobatic performances are of a very high order of merit, and there is nothing in them that could offend the most fastidious. The performers are handsomely costumed, and all of them have been engaged on account of their well established reputation, gained not only in this country, but also in Europe. The bare-back riding of Miss Rosa Lee, a pretty and graceful brunette of fourteen years, is in itself astonishing, combining dexterity and grace, and she adds to it a juggling act which makes the performance still more remarkable, when it is considered what a careful balance must necessarily be preserved to accomplish the feat successfully. She also, in company with her brothers, gives an acrobatic performance which is much admired. Mr. James Ward, in his flying act on the cord volante, gives what seems to be a very perilous and daring exhibition, although the skill and coolness which he displays lessen all fear of any mishap. Miss Alta Hallett's performance on the aerial rings is a feature of the entertainment, as also is the performance of Victorelli and Caldello on the bar and mid-air trapeze. Miss Linda Jeal's English hurdle act shows that lady to be an accomplished rider. The exhibition by the trained elephant, "Empress," shows intelligence and thorough training, and the quips and jokes of the two clowns help to fill up the intervals between the acts, very pleasantly. Taken altogether, the performance is eminently deserving of patronage, for, although retaining some of the traditional features of the old-fashioned circus, it also furnishes novelties which make it more attractive than the ordinary traveling organizations.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE BIBLE IN DEKALB COUNTY, IND., GREETING.—This is to certify that Rev. J. E. Ervin is hereby duly appointed agent of the DeKalb county Bible Society, auxiliary to the American Bible society, to canvass the county and solicit funds for the bible cause, and to settle with the several branch societies, and to attend to such other business as may be for the interest of the society. We hope all the friends will respond liberally and thus aid in the circulation of the scriptures "without note or comment" in the home and foreign fields.

Auburn, Ind., Oct. 5th, 1878.

Mr. J. C. Loveland, for some time past carrying on a job printing office in Clyde, has moved his office to Garrett, Indiana, where he intends to resume that business. He left with his family on Tuesday of this week. Garrett is the Division headquarters of the Chicago Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and has grown into a flourishing village since 1874. Mr. Loveland is a first-class workman as a printer.—Clyde, (O.,) Enterprise.

We welcome Mr. Loveland back to DeKalb, and hope he will receive his share of work in his line. He is well acquainted and needs no introduction in this community. His job office at Garrett is now open to the public and his work will recommend itself.

Reasons Why.

The reasons why Dr. Price's flavoring extracts, lemon, vanilla, etc., are superior to all others is because they are prepared from choice selected fruits and aromatics without coloring or poisonous oils, all the flavoring principles are retained unchanged by chemical action, highly concentrated, requiring less to flavor.

TILLIE MCTIGH, Teacher.

The following from the Ft. Wayne Sentinel is our idea exactly as to early conventions and long campaigns, "The campaign is over at last, and most people will be heartily glad of it. Elections are entirely too frequent in this country, and the unfortunate voters are kept stirred up by politicians and office seekers the greater part of the time. The campaign just closed was long and tedious. Not more than six or eight weeks should be devoted to any state canvass. That affords time to organize forces, and present all the issues to the voters. The people can stand the strain that long, but a campaign of half a year's length is preposterous. It is wearing upon the candidates and others directly interested, and becomes almost insufferable to the people. So the Sentinel said last winter when it urged a late convention, and so it says now. Hereafter let short and spirited campaigns be the rule.

"THEM YANKEE BLANKETS."

Where Suffering and Brotherly Kindness Brought Hearts Together in Love.

Yes, John, I was down thar at Memphis
A-workin' around at the boats,
A-heavin' o' cotton with emph'sis,
An' a-loadin' her onto the floats.
I was comin' away from Ole Texas,
Whar I went, you know, arter the wah—
'Bout it now I'll make no [illegible],
But wait till I git ter long taw.

Well, while I was down thar the fever,
As yaller an' pizen as sin,
Broke out; an', ef you'll beleeve her,
Wharever she hit she struck in!
It didn't take long in the hatchin',
It jes' fa'rly bred in the air,
Till a hospital camp warn't a patchin',
An' we'd plenty o' corpses to spare.

I volunteer'd then with the Howards—
I thought that my duty was clear—
An' I din't look back'ards, but for'ards,
An' went fer my work 'thout fear.
One day, howsomever, she got me
As quick as the shot of a gun,
An' they toted me off fer allot me
A bunk till my life-race was run.

The doctors and nusses they wrestled,
But it didn't do me any good;
An' the drugger he poundid and pestl'd,
But he didn't git up the right food.
"No blankits ner ice in the city!"—
I heard him say that from bed—
An' some cried: "Oh, God! who'll take pity
On the dyin' that soon'll be dead!

Next day, howsomever, the doctor
Come in with a smile on his brow;
"Old boy, jest as yit we hain't knocked her,"
Said he, "but we'll do fer her now!"
Fer, yer see, John, them folks ter the nor'ward
Had hear'd us afore we called twice,
An' they'd sent us a full cargo forward
Of them much-needed blankits an' ice!

Well, brother, I've been mighty solid
Agin' Yankees, yer know, since the wah,
An' agin' reconstrucktin' was solid,
Not kearin' for kongress ner law;
But, John, I got onder that kiver,
That God-blessed gift o' the Yanks,
An' it saved me from fordin' "the river,"
An' I'm prayin' 'em oceans o' thanks!

I tell yer, old boy, thare's er streak in us
Old rebels an' Yanks that is warm—
It's er brotherly love thet'll speak in us,
An' fetch us together in storm;
We may snarl about niggers an' francheese,"
But, whenever thar's sufferin' afoot—
The two trees'll unite in the branches
The same as they do at the root!

"THE MULTITUDINOUS SEAS."

[From Appletons' Journal for October.]

How few there are who realize that the ocean is aught else than a raging mass of weltering waves lashed by storms, to be regarded only with dread, and avoided with aversion! How many gain from it but one or two one-sided impressions! To one the sea is always blue; somehow that idea early fixed itself in his mind, and he has never cared to observe further, and revise a first partial impression. To another it always looks green. Nothing more fairly indicates the exceedingly limited habits of observation of the average mind in matters out of its beat than the excessively meager notions which many have of the sea, even after repeated familiarity with it, as in the case of those who cannot plead the excuse of seasickness for their ignorance. How few there are who fully appreciate the matchless suggestiveness of that Homeric passage—"The innumerable smiles of the many-voiced sea!" That line only touches on the countless aspects of ocean, and yet it is the finest definition of the sea in the whole range of literature.

About Madeira the sea when over ten fathoms is like molton turquois, lovely beyond description, not only in the sea-caves, as in the famous Blue Grotto of Capri, but outside. The fish swimming in it seem to be of transparent blue, and the keel of a ship, seen with perfect distinctness, is like a solid mass of translucent cobalt.

The color of the water in the tropics seems to be shared also by the fish of those regions. The blue-fish, quite different from the fish of that name on the New England coast, looks as if carved out of ultramarine touched with burned sienna in parts, and the mouth fringed with carnation-tinted coral. The parrot-fish is of a scarlet as vivid as that of the birds in the forests of the neighboring shores; the mullet is brilliant brown and gold. In northern waters, on the contrary, we have the cod clad in quaker-gray, and the haddock, which still bears on its head the mark of St. Peter's holy thumb when he squeezed a piece of silver out of its mouth, wears a livery the color of the roaring surges which overwhelm our fishermen on the Georges and the Grand Banks.

The Red sea is so called for a certain tawny tinge of its waters as well as for the red coral on its coast, but why the Black sea should have that epithet it is difficult to say, unless on account of the scowling, thunderous appearance it presents in winter, when it is swept by disastrous storms. The sea on the southern coast of England is a peculiar light gray-green caused by the chalk-cliffs which are being constantly eroded and washed away by the ocean-billows. A very striking instance of water colored in this way is seen in Northumberland strait, Gulf of St. Lawrence, especially after a storm. The soft, reddish shores of Prince Edward's island are eaten away and absorbed by the sea, which thus assumes a rich coffee-color, very vivid, and, when glistening in the sun, and tinged here and there with reflections of the blue overhead, extraordinarily rich in tone, and strongly resembling polished syenite. It is well known that the Amazon dyes the sea for hundred of miles beyond the land with the ochre-tinted silt it washes down from the pampas and the far-off mountains of Peru.

The warmth of the water in tropical latitudes seems to have the same effect on the monsters of the deep that the climate has on the temperament of man. The barracuda is savage and aggressive as a tiger, and the cruel voracity of the King of the Cannibal islands is quite eclipsed by the horrible, treacherous, stealthy nature of that sea-pirate, the man-eating shark. It is stated, and from what I have heard I am inclined to think it is true, that the shark prefers white men to negroes, and will only attack and eat the latter on rare occasions. An English frigate's crew on the edge of the Bahama bank killed sixty of these monsters in one day's sport a few days ago, so numerous are they in those waters. This might have been a means taken by the British Government to revenge itself, as on some savage tribe, regardless of diplomatic remonstrances and the courtesy of nations, for the liberty taken by the sharks with the crew of an English ship-of-war some years earlier.

The Magpie schooner was cruising off Cuba for pirates when she was struck by an "ox-eye" squall—a wind coming without other warning than a small round cloud in a clear sky, rushing with the rapidity of a cannon-ball. She was over in an instant, and, to make a long story short, the whole crew but two were devoured by a school of sharks which were lying in wait. Gliding in among the horror-stricken crowd of seamen, they played with them for a while as a cat does with her prey. But the first taste of blood was like alcohol to a drunkard, and in a few moments only two of the crew survived in a boat which had floated off from the vessel as she went down. After they had been in the boat several days, parched, starved, and roasted by the tropic sun, a brig hove in sight, slowly passing two miles away with a very light-meaning air just filling the sails. As she did not seem to see the boat, one of the men jumped into the water and swam off to her. He was followed by two sharks, which kept him company the whole of that long, awful swim. But he scared them off by flapping his jacket—the shark is a great coward. Just as he was about to give up the race in despair, the man at the wheel looked over the rail and saw him. A boat was lowered, and he and his shipmate were saved. Nothing one sees at sea so sends an involuntary shudder through him as to see the edge of the dorsal fin of a shark floating like an upright spar on the surface of the water. You know at once that mischief is lurking there.

Another terror of the deep is the many-armed prodigy called octopus, devil-fish, cuttle-fish, sepia, or squid, but the last name is generally applied to the smaller species, common in the Mediterranean, where it is dried and eaten. In the China seas sepia for painting is extracted from it; but the larger kind, called by old writers the kraken, has only recently come into prominence as a credible reality. Hakluyt's "Voyages" contain thrilling illustrations of the kraken reaching up its long arms into the rigging of ships, pulling them over or quietly helping itself to the terror-stricken crew; but these have been considered fabulous representations, and Victor Hugo's description of the wonderful devil-fish in "The Toilers of the Sea" has been accepted chiefly as an example of the exhaustless fecundity of that writer's imagination rather than an actual creature. But within three or four years too many specimens of the cuttle-fish have been encountered, with a spread of thirty to sixty feet to the arms, to make this creature any longer the subject of legitimate laughter, especially as it has been found to have a spider-like way of creeping on its victim and drawing it down to its den at the bottom of the sea, as in the case of the poor Indian girl recently caught in the deadly embrace of an octopus near Vancouver's island.

I doubt not similar certainty will be reached regarding the vexed question about sea-serpents. There is nothing more absurd than the incredulous levity of the popular mind concerning this mysterious serpent. What is there more impossible about a large water-snake than a large fish? There are small fishes and large fishes, small water-snakes, and why not large ones? What is an eel but a sea-serpent? and are there not water-snakes in every brook? Perhaps the large sea-serpent is a comparatively new creation, evolved on the Darwinian theory; perhaps, like the whale, it changes its habitat, and has but recently become common in northern waters; or, as has been suggested, perhaps it is a deep-sea creature frightened to the surface by some great submarine convulsion. The witnesses to this monster have been so many and of so good a character for credibility that the laugh should really be against those who do not believe in the existence of the sea-serpent.

There is a kind of sea-snake seen sometimes which is not revealed to those who voyage in steamers; many are the ocean-phenomena which they lose, seen only by those who go in sailing-ships, for the steamer frightens away many sea wonders. There are days in mid-ocean—and one need not go to the doldrums or horse-latitudes to find them—when day after day, week after week, the breezes are asleep, and the spirits of the storm have gone below to sport with the nereids, and Neptune and Amphitrite holding festal times in the sea-green caves of ocean, it seems as if there was nothing left but sea and sky, and, insphered between them, one solitary ship gazing at its own shadow, and held motionless, as if paralyzed there forever on an enchanted sea, while the sun rises and sets in a cloudless sky, reflected on the oily surface of the sea as on a mirror of burnished gold. At night the moon, yellow and full, rises in the west, like an image of the sun, but throws no reflection from the horizon on the water, so absolutely smooth and glassy is the sea. Only, as one looks over the side of the ship in that appalling and seemingly-eternal silence of the illimitable ocean, he sees three or four round balls of silver eerily quivering by the ship, when the moon is at its zenith, which look as if they were magic balls tossed up from the depths below by unseen tricksy sprites of the sea. Perchance there is another ship floating in company miles away, and gradually, by an agency that seems supernatural, she draws gradually nearer, although there is never a breath of air stirring. But this is explained from the simple fact that there are always unseen currents moving, and one ship will be more or less affected than another by them, according to its draught or weight. It is at such a time that objects float by which one would never have suspected to exist in the sea—not only nautili and lovely Portuguese men-of-war, and jelly-fish, fringed with long crimson-and-purple hair, but algæ of a fairy-like grace that almost exceeds belief, and serpents six to eight feet long, transparent as if made of elastic glass, of a delicately-modulated pearly gray, striped and spotted, with gem-like points of green, scarlet and blue. It is like a revelation of an unseen world; and so it is, for the sea, much as it has been explored, is yet, like the human brain, full of wonders and mysteries yet unrevealed, hidden far, far down where no human eye has yet penetrated. From time to time a fresh discovery is made, as in the case of the fish brought up by the Challenger exploring expedition off the coast of Portugal—a fish at the bottom of the sea, and kept together by the pressure of the water; when brought to the surface, it exploded to atoms.

One of the finest effects at sea is mirage, which is confined to no part of the ocean, although the conditions which produce it do not always seem thoroughly explained by saying that it is due to refraction. To see the shore raised above the water, and hovering mysteriously in the air, reflected in another sea of its own, is a sight that the most threadbare familiarity can never make less wonderful. The Mediterranean abounds in the effects of mirage; it is an every-day sight to see the Sierra Nevada mountains on the coast of Spain suspended several degrees above the blue waters of the sea. But mirage is also common on our coast, and especially in Long Island sound in moist, foggy weather. The most singular form of this phenomenon is when ships are seen floating in the air. A remarkable instance of this is related of a ship that, during the colonial days, was expected from England. On a Sunday afternoon, after a violent storm, she was seen floating in the air, every spar represented so clearly that there was no question of the identity of the vessel thus painted in the clouds; but that was the last that was ever seen of the ill-fated ship.

One of the surest indications of a storm is what sailors call Cape Flyaway; that is, a cloud or clouds which look so like land as to deceive "the very elect" themselves. More or less common in all parts of the sea, we again find that this phenomenon is especially common in the Azores; and this has probably been one reason why the old navigators, who cruised about these waters in olden times, were continually discovering land, from which they were blown away by a storm, and were afterward unable to find it again, for the very good reason that "he needs must have optics keen who sees what is not to be seen."

Another forerunner of a storm is the water-spout, which is one of the most impressive and awe-inspiring sights at sea. The explanation of its being is simple enough. A whirlwind or gyrating current of air seizes the water as on land it snatches up sand and dust, and whirls it up to the clouds, which thus receive some of the moisture of which they are composed. I saw a curious illustration of this once when sailing in a boat near the shore, the wind being nor'-northwest, and the weather being very dry. I observed a thread-like column of dust on the land skurrying toward the water—it was a small whirlwind; no sooner did it touch the water that the column turned as if by magic into water, coming with great rapidity toward the boat. I at once luffed and let go the sheet, and the water-spout passed within two or three yards off, and was perhaps three to four inches in diameter. But a real, live water-spout, that means mischief, is a sublime object, to be regarded with just apprehension by all sailors, for they are sometimes sufficiently large and violent to founder a ship. A cannon-ball brought to bear on one will, however, sometimes cause it to break. When there are several in a row, as I have repeatedly seen them in the Black sea, where they are especially common, they look like a colonnade of majestic pillars supporting the sky. I never shall forget a magnificent water-spout that nearly overwhelmed us one gloomy twilight in the Gulf stream. It was blowing very fresh about dusk, when the Captain came out to take another look before supper. The man at the wheel was looking into the binnacle, and no one else had seen a huge water-spout, which the Captain perceived as soon as he put his head above the companionway. It was advancing with great velocity directly on a line with the ship and was alarmingly near. The Captain sprung to the wheel, and, pushing the helmsman aside, put the helm down and kept away several points, and the water-spout passed just astern; another minute of delay and the brave little bark would have carried her crew to Davy Jones.

The Gulf stream, whether off Hatteras or in the Roaring Forties, is probably the most capricious, treacherous, and phenomenal part of the Atlantic, the most trying to encounter, excepting possibly some of the regions in the vicinity of dangerous coasts. Nowhere else are the phosphorescent effects of the sea so distinct and beautiful, so full of the colors red, blue and green. It is not infrequent, especially near the Florida banks, to see the phosphorus rushing past the ship in a band of light so brilliant that one can easily read the time on his watch on the darkest nights, while the rudder is bathed in masses of prismatic flame, as the sparks meet and dash together in the ship's wake. In the North Atlantic, when the wave-crests flash like torches and emit an electric vapor that kindles the vast expanse of ocean with mysterious light, heavy weather may be expected within twenty-four hours. It is very remarkable how many of the glories and attractive effects of the sea are like barometric forecasts of the weather. The different tints of green in the sky at sunset, for example, indicate unerringly calms or storms, according to the tint.

The Gulf stream is noted for its electrical phenomena. These are always far more common as a rule at sea than on land, and nothing can be more appalling than the periodical electrical storms of the tropics, especially in the Indian ocean with the change of the monsoons, or equinoctial hurricanes of those latitudes. But for a continuous, chronic, inexhaustible supply of fire-works, the Gulf stream has no rival. It brings them forth on the slightest occasion, and it is doubtful if ever a ship crossed the fierce-tempered current without seeing lightning. This is easily accounted for: the prevailing winds of the North Atlantic are southwest and northwest, except certain local winds near the English channel, and the northeast trades blowing from Cape Finisterre to the Cape de Verds. When the southwest wind has been blowing a while it has a strong inclination to shift into the northwest, and the longer it blows the more it wants to get around, and the more sudden and violent is the change when it comes. Now, the meeting of the warm current of southwest air with the cooler air from the northwest results in a discharge of electricity; and, although sometimes lightning is seen in the southwest for many hours before the wind changes, yet, when it does shift, it always does so with a tremendous rain and vivid lightning, often attended by what are called corpos santos, or St. Elmo's candles, electric lights which without any warning are seen suddenly perched on the end of every spar, producing a most mysterious and beautiful effect. They do not always come in heavy weather, although generally seen at such a time, and many seamen consider it a bad omen to have one shine on a man's face when he is aloft; but this superstition is wearing away. Another electric phenomenon at sea is a round ball the size of a full moon, but brighter and redder, passing slowly from one cloud to another, sometimes succeeded by a terrific explosion of thunder. One is surprised that ships are not oftener sunk by lightning, but, although the bolts sometimes fall in quick succession directly around the vessel, they are generally attracted by the water.

The icebergs which come down from the North pole and lie in wait for vessels crossing their path also find their grave in the Gulf stream. Northward and eastward runs this fierce current, yet below it is a stealthy polar current gliding ever southward, and the mighty berg, whose bottom reaches many fathoms down, is seized by the lower current and borne against the Gulf stream, until the heat of the upper current melts and disintegrates it, and allows it no longer to be a menace to the mariner—a siren indeed, the very embodiment of poetry and splendor, but treacherous and remorseless as a fiend. Several times have I seen icebergs at sea, generally looming suddenly, startling and ghost-like, out of a dank fog, but once robed in imperial magnificence. It was the 4th of July, and the sky was without a cloud, but the air was cold and keen as winter, and we knew what it meant. As the sun arose the horizon was studded with glittering points like the serried spears of a great host; here and there a loftier mass flashed back the rays of the sun from some berg towering above the field-ice. There was nothing to be done but to keep on our course, for we were nearly surrounded by the ice; but we had a leading wind, a good top-gallant breeze, and felt our way without much difficulty through the broad channels. What lovely pale greens and blues were revealed in the caverns of the immense, cathedral-like icebergs into which the waves broke with a far-off, eerie boom, and how exquisite was the roseate blush which the icy pinnacles assumed when kissed by the setting sun! The full moon arose soon after and shone on the silvery bastions and towers of an iceberg scarcely half a mile from us, which was not less than 400 feet above the sea and nearly four times the height of our masts. Next morning the polar fleet had disappeared in the southern board, and, on the whole, we were not sorry to part company with it.

Fashion Notes.

Waistcoats for the ladies will be sold separate from the suit.

Square trains bid fair to be more fashionable than round ones.

Striped moires are coming into vogue, under the name of moire Francais.

The taste for black silk toilets and black millinery prevails as much as ever.

Short costumes take only eighteen yards of medium-width stuff for a full dress.

The new hosiery is hair-lined horizontally in bright colors on neutral and cream white grounds.

Fancy buttons and flat gilt buttons are used profusely on the clan tartan and fancy plaid suits so fashionable at the moment.

Many red velvet bonnets edged with garnet beads and gold cords, and trimmed with shaded red plumes and red roses, are seen among the novelties in millinery.

If the present fashion of waistcoat, jacket, skirt and tunic or overskirt continue to find favor, it will produce the much-desired result of rendering it as easy for women to purchase their clothing ready-made as men.

Corduroy velvet will be largely used for the underskirts of winter costumes.

A new freak of fashion shows the dolman with a double skirt. It is not nearly as pretty as the graceful single-skirted dolman.

The panier has resolved itself into very small dimensions, and consists in the slight looping or draping of the back breadths of the overdress.

The tight-fitting coat-sleeve remains in favor, and is now made with a slight gathering at the elbow, which makes it much more comfortable to wear.—Condensed from New York papers.

A Few Words About Lilies.

Most people plant lilies in the spring, at the time when they put out their verbenas, geraniums, and other similar bedding stuff; and for this reason the lilies no not usually give so much satisfaction as is expected from them. To produce the best results, these bulbs should be planted in the autumn, and the sooner after the stalk dies down the better. With this treatment they are enabled to make a good root-growth preparatory to sending up their shoots in the early spring, whereas the bulbs kept out of ground during the winter are not only fatigued, as the French express it, by this unnatural condition of existence, but, having scarcely time enough to make any roots at all before the flower-stalks appear, almost the entire support of the growth must be derived from the already much-weakened bulbs. It is another important point in the growing of lilies, that the use of rank manure should be most particularly avoided, for no doubt that thousands of lilies—especially of the lilium auratum—are killed every year in this country by being planted in ground too much enriched. And many more are killed by being too much protected during the winter. In a very cold climate it is unquestionably an advantage to throw over the ground where lilies are planted a light covering of straw, or something of that sort, but this is best done after the soil has been frozen an inch or two deep. If the soil is heavily mulched in early winter, before having been frozen, chilling rains are apt to rot the bulbs that a dry, although severe, cold would have left entirely unharmed.

Old School Discipline.

There were two curious bits of discipline at that school; one, that whenever a boy committed a grave offense every boy of the school was made a party to it, and a penitential letter was written home by every boy precisely in the same terms. Here is an instance: One night, as we followed the usher, two-and-two, down a passage from the school-room to our bed-room, William said to me, "George, I hate that usher fellow." "So do I," I said. "I shall spit on his back," said he. "Please, don't," said I; "we shall both be strapped." Strapping was administered with a piece of carriage-trace, with the buckle-holes in it, through which the air rushed as the strap descended on the hand. "I shall spit on his back," said he, and, as I expected, the usher having, I suppose, heard whispering, turned round, and William was caught in the act. The next morning, after due personal treatment of the leading culprit by a process more painful than strapping, we were all drawn up in single file in the school-room, and every boy, older and younger, had to write from dictation, and then to copy from his slate on a sheet of letter-paper, the letter following (letters then cost 8d each): "My Dear Parents—We have committed a great sin. For William Denison spat on the usher's back as we went to bed. I remain, your affectionate son, Arthur Shirt." There were four Shirt brothers in the school—Arthur, Lionel, Frederick and Augustus Shirt. I draw a veil over the feelings and expressions of the Shirt parents upon opening the four letters, price 2s 8d. The like thing happened again while I was there, upon the occasion of buying apple-tarts from an old woman over the playground-wall. In this case the sin was of a more general character, but, as in the other case, was made universal: "My Dear Parents—We have committed a great sin. For we have bought apple-tarts without the leave of the master, when we have plenty to eat, and that of the best quality. I remain," etc. The other point of discipline was that every boy who had not conducted himself well during the week had no mutton-pie on Saturday. Now, this gave the mutton-pie a moral elevation which, in its own nature, it did not deserve, being composed of what was left on the plates the preceding days of the week. William had been at school at Esher, with our elder brothers Evelyn and Edward, before Sunbury. There, one Sunday morning, having lost his hat, he was made to walk to school in a straw coal-scuttle bonnet of one of the daughters of the house. The ways of discipline are various.—Arch Deacon Denison's "Notes of My Life."

A Woman With New Shoes.

When a woman has a new pair of shoes sent home she performs altogether different from a man. She never shoves her toes into them and yanks and hauls until she is red in the face and all out of breath and then goes stamping around, but pulls them on part way carefully, twitches them off again to take a last look and see if she has got the right one, pulls them on again, looks at them dreamily, says they are just right, then takes another look, stops suddenly to smooth out a wrinkle, twists around and surveys them sideways, exclaims, "Mercy, how loose they are," looks at them again square in front, works her foot around so they won't hurt her quite so much, takes them off, looks at the heel, the toe, the bottom and inside, puts them on again, walks up and down the room once or twice, remarks to her better half that she won't have them at any price, tilts down the mirror so that she can see how they look, turns in every possible direction and nearly dislocates her neck trying to see how they look from that way, backs off, steps up again, takes thirty or forty farewell looks, says they make her feet look awful big and never will do in the world, puts them off and on three or four times more, asks her husband what he thinks about it, and then pays no attention to what he says, goes through it all again, and finally says she will take them. It's a very simple matter, indeed. —Albany Argus.

One of the Seven Wonders.

Pharos is the ancient name of a small island off the coast of Egypt, less than a mile from the ancient Alexandria, connected with the mainland by a mole, and famous for its lighthouse, which was numbered among the seven wonders of the world, and gave the name of Pharos to all structures of a similar kind. This building was the frustrum of a square pyramid, surrounded by a large base, the precise dimensions of which are not known. It was commenced by the first Ptolemy, and was finished about 280 B. C. The style and workmanship are represented to have been superb, and the material was a white stone. The height was about 400 feet, and it is stated by Josephus that the light, which was always kept burning on its top at night, was visible about forty-one miles. It was, probably, destroyed by an earthquake, but the date of its destruction is not known. Enough is known, however, to make it certain that this tower existed for 1,600 years. To this day the French word for lighthouse is phare, and the Italian and Spanish faro. The island became, at length, a suburb of Alexandria by means of a street running along the mole, and retained some importance even till the time of Julius Cæsar, but subsequently sank into its original condition of a fishing station.

WHAT THE RIVER SAITH.

BY MINNIE PETE.

I ran toward the north,
O river running south—
Running south forever—
[illegible] of
[illegible] sweet [illegible]
And ran toward the north.

I ran toward the north,
Where the [illegible] stiff and stark,
And the gloomy ice-fields whiten,
And days and nights are dark;
And only stars and meteor gleams delighten
My course toward the north.

I ran toward the north,
Yet O river running south
Through wood and rich farms;
Warm seas to meet your mouth,
Shall I repine while still my great Auroras
Shine on me from the north?

I ran toward the north,
[illegible] and sweet and bright
Summers come to me
With song and bloom and light;
And who knows but I may reach at last the open sea
As I run toward the north!

The Valet's Prescription.

The story is told out West of an English surgeon rnd his Irish valet coming across an injured herder, requiring the amputation of a limb, in the earlier days of railroading on the plains.

"Pity, pity," remarked the physician to his servant, "but I 'ave no chloroform with me to hease the poor fellow."

This information seemed to affect the sympathetic valet deeply for a time, but after a little he suddenly brightened up and confidingly whispered into his master's ear:

"Egad, docthur, couldn't we knock him sinseless wid a club?"

The injured ranchman, who had overheard all, settled the question of anæstheties by pulling out a revolver and ordering the "chopping" to go on, without any more dashed nonsense.—Chicago Journal.

HOW EDGAR A. POE DIED.

The Remarkable Story of a Bohemian Veteran—The Poet Poisoned With Laudanum.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

"You say that Edgar Allan Poe did not die from the effects of deliberate dissipation?" asked a Chronicle reporter.

"That is just what I mean; and I say further that he died from the effects of deliberate murder."

This was a strange assertion—strange in being a flat contradiction of a fact or otherwise a theory, recorded in detail in the history of American literature. The author of the assertion was a well-known member of this city's advanced and inveterate Bohemia; a gentleman who has long since retired from the active pursuits of his profession, and spends his days in dreamy meditation—frequenting one of the popular resorts of the craft, but mingling little in the idle babble of the throng. When drawn into conversation, it is generally to correct some error from his inexhaustible mine of reminiscence, and on such occasions his words are few and precise.

"Then you know something of the poet and his history, doctor?"

"With a few others, I was one of his intimate associates for years. Much that has been written of him and regarding his death is false. Poe was not what is called a periodical drunkard, holding himself to spells of total sobriety, giving way to violent bouts of intemperance; but he was a steady drinker, and, when his means permitted, he would drink to excess. His habitual resort in Baltimore was the Widow Meagher's place. This was an oyster stand and liquor bar on the city front, corresponding, in some respects, with the coffee shops in San Francisco. It was frequented much by the printers and men engaged in the shipping offices, and ranked as a respectable place, where parties could read the paper, enjoy a game of cards, or engage in social conversation. Poe was a great favorite with the old woman. You would always see him sitting just behind the oyster stand, and about as quiet and sociable as an oyster himself. He went by the name of the Bard, and, when parties came into the shop, it was 'Bard, come up and take a nip,' or 'Bard, take a hand in this game.' He was a sort of pensioner on his acquaintances, as far as drinks were concerned. Whenever the old woman met with any incident or idea that tickled her fancy she would ask Bard to versify it. Poe always complied, writing many a witty couplet, and, at times, poems of considerable length. Much of his poetical work, quite as meritorious as some by which his name was immortalized, was thus frittered into obscurity. It was in this little shop that Poe's attention was called to an advertisement in a Philadelphia paper of a prize for a meritorious story, and it was here that he composed his famous 'Gold Bug,' which took the prize. I heard him read it before he sent it to Philadelphia, and, when it was announced that this story was successful, the Widow Meagher gave him the money to go on and obtain the prize."

"But how about his death?"

"Poe had been shifting between Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York for several years. He had been away from Baltimore about three months, and turned up one evening at the widow's. I was there when he came in. Bard had been making a little raise North, and it was drinks all around, with repeat, until the crowd were down jolly. It was the night before an election, and the party started up town. There were four of us, and we had not gone over a dozen squares before we were nabbed by policemen, who were looking up voters to 'coop.' It was the practice in those days to seize people, whether drunk or sober, lock them up until the polls were opened, and then march them to every precinct in control of the party having the 'coop.' This coop was in the rear of an engine-house on Calvert street. It was part of the game to stupefy the prisoners with drugged liquor. The next day we were voted at thirty different places and over and over, it being as much as a man's life was worth to rebel. Poe was so badly drugged that he was carried on two or three rounds and then the gang said that it was no use trying to vote a dead man any longer, so they shoved him into a cab and sent him to the hospital to get him out of the way."

"Well, he died from dissipation."

"Nothing of the kind. He died from laudanum or some other poison that was forced on him in the coop. He was in a dying condition while he was being voted twenty or thirty times in Baltimore. The story told by Griswold of his having been on a week's spree and being picked up on the streets is all a lie. I saw him shoved into the cab myself."

Tramways.

As early as the year 1676 rails of oak or other hard wood are shown by Mr. Clark to have been in use in the colliery districts of England. Not long after this time it became a common practice to nail down bars of wrought-iron on the top of the timber sleepers. It was found that, whereas a horse upon the common road could draw 8 bolls, or 1,700 pounds of coal, his power of draught upon the tramway amounted to 19 bolls, or 4,200 pounds. The wrought-iron bars, not being rigid enough to prevent bending or breaking at the ends under the weight of the trucks, the use of cast-iron was introduced by the Coalbrook Dale Iron Company in 1767. The rails were cast in lengths of five feet, four inches wide and one and one-fourth inch thick, with three holes whereby they were nailed down to the longitudinal wooden sleepers, the whole being kept true to gauge by cross-sleepers of wood of about the length of the ordinary carriage or wagon axle. Here was the germ of the development of the modern locomotive system. On the introduction of steam it became needful that the traffic should be kept apart from that of the common roads, and that the new tracks should be subject to gradients and curves suited to the locomotive. The main lines of communication were thus rapidly occupied by a net-work of railways. A reaction, however, set in on its being found that railways, besides their vast expense, were lacking in adaptability to the subordinate lines of traffic which followed roads and streets. The convenient and unpretentious tramway began to be again thought of, worked as of old by horse power upon common roads. It was in the United States that the modern tramroad was earliest employed, the first section of the New York and Harlem line being laid down in 1852 to a gauge of four feet eight and a half inches. It proved, however, unpopular, and was soon taken up. Twenty years later M. Loubat, a French engineer, obtained leave to lay down a line of street tramways in New York, which rapidly expanded and became the distinguishing feature of traffic in most American cities and towns, in which the streets are laid out in a way better adapted to this mode of locomotion than are the narrow and winding streets of our older country, while the number of other vehicles is comparatively far less.—Saturday Review.

Artemus Ward as a Practical Joker.

Browne, and Griswold, the "Fat Contributor," were on newspaper work at the same time in Cleveland, and were very intimate friends. One day there came to the city a dramatic reader, a man of some note, but of a very timid disposition. These two worthies in some manner discovered that he was a person easily to be imposed upon, and shortly after his arrival they paid him a visit. It was an early hour in the morning—long after the man had retired—and they found it difficult to arouse him. They told him they were editors, and wanted to hear him read before writing him up. They invited him to step into the hall adjoining the hotel and give them a specimen of his powers. At first the man refused to go with them, but when they told him sternly that they were editors, and would crush him if he did not comply, he felt compelled to go. Nor would they allow him to put on his clothes, but forced him to go in night-dress to a cold and dreary hall, where they complacently smoked their cigars while they listened to him declaim, with chattering teeth and trembling voice, for several hours. When they finally permitted him to go, they told him, by way of consolation, that they had always thirsted to hear a dramatic reader in night-dress, and they were very much gratified with his performance.

Browne was a great lover of a practical joke. One of his maddest pranks was in New York city, in 1863. He had been at some benefit performance with Dan Bryant and Nelse Seymour, and at its conclusion he induced these two to join him on a lark. Accordingly, they went to Bryant's property-room, and each donned a complete suit of armor. Then they armed themselves with broadswords, and, in the still hours of the night, went forth in search of defenseless citizens. Up and down the street in grim array they marched, and whenever they found a man alone and unarmed they would make him get down on his knees and pray for mercy. Then, after having frightened him almost out of his senses, they would permit him to go on his way. The fun, however, after a while was brought to an abrupt termination by the police, who marched them off to the Tombs. They entered fictitious names; but the Judge next morning recognized the culprits, and discharged them with an admonition. On the same night they visited the house of Tom Jackson, who had just brought to this country the famous Swiss bell-ringers. In response to their violent ringing of the bell, Jackson came to an upper window, and, not knowing who his visitors were, asked them in tones of thunder what they wanted.

"We want an engagement," said Browne. "We are the original bell-ringers."

Jackson then recognized them, and, appreciating the joke, invited them in.—C. C. Ruthrauff, in October Scribner.

A Colony of Baboons.

One of the most curious facts we have heard for a long time (says a Calcutta paper) was a complaint brought us from Angurpara, a little village on the Barrackpore road, about three miles north of Cossipore. A colony of 200 or 300 baboons took up their quarters in the village some six or eight months ago, and have made it almost uninhabitable. They are great brutes, we are told, four feet high, and as savage as wild beasts. They attack children, and even full-grown women, without fear, and have set up a reign of terror over the people, going in and out of their houses as they please, and "vittling free" upon the plantains, guavas, mangoes and other fruit grown in their gardens. The people are afraid to shoot them, as the whole colony would attack them instantly. The police will not interfere, and the village is not merely ridden to death by these apes, but is in such a state of insecurity from budmashes that the miserable villagers have sent a deputation to us imploring us to represent their condition to the Government. The village is but eight miles from Calcutta, upon the river, and, if the statement about the "baboons" is true, we should turn out a company of the volunteers upon them. The strength and daring of the animals are declared to terrify the people, the brutes selecting girls and women as the especial objects of their attacks.

A Barren Field.

The correspondence of the London Daily News shows that the British statesmen were considerably fooled in regarding Cyprus as a good field for British enterprise. Archibald Forbes writes that there is absolutely no money to be made in the island now. The Daily News says: "One has only to look at the Consular reports to see how uncertain harvests are. A good year is followed by a dearth, and that by a famine. Till Cyprus is well watered—which it cannot be in our generation—it will merely be an excellent place for throwing capital into. We may cast money and mountains into the sea and get a breakwater, but that is a national work. To replant the whole island is also a thing from which private capitalists will perhaps abstain."

Elephants in a Quicksand.

On the river Ganges (says an English military journal) there are many quicksands, and, during our expedition, a somewhat disastrous scene happened. An elephant incautiously came within the vortex of one; first one foot sank, then another; and, in endeavoring to extricate himself, matters became worse; no portion of either of his legs were at last visible, and the bystanders had given up the poor animal as lost. Being, fortunately, unusually powerful, he, three times, with what appeared to all supernatural strength, drew a foot from the closely-clinging earth, placed it where, by sounding with his trunk, he found the most solidity; not until the third time did the ground bear his pressure, when he gradually released himself. During the whole period of his troubles his cries were exceedingly dolorous, and might have been heard a couple of miles; his grunt, when they were at an end, was equally indicative of satisfaction. The internal application of a bottle of strong spirits soon dissipated his trembling and restored his equanimity.

Many unfortunate elephants are lost in these treacherous sands, when large quantities of grass or branches of trees are not at hand to form an available support for them. After a certain time the poor beast becomes powerless, and the owner can only look with sorrow at the gradual disappearance of his noble animal, and lament the pecuniary loss he thereby suffers, for all human aid is futile. They have been known to be twelve hours before entirely sinking.

A Word of Warning to Counterfeiters.

The wide-spread fame of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters causes a necessity on our part to remind, from time to time, whom it may concern of the fact that imitating said article is a punishable offense, and we now give this word of caution, that we will most assuredly have all those persons engaged in refilling our second-hand bottles, selling by the gallon or barrel, or in any manner whatsoever palming off on the public a spurious article purporting to be our preparation, punished to the full extent of the law. Penalty for counterfeiting, or dealing in counterfeit trade-mark goods, as set forth in a law recently passed by Congress: "Fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not more than two years, or both such fine and imprisonment." We never fail to convict.

NOTICE TO DEALERS AND PURCHASERS.—Hostetter's Bitters are never, under any circumstances, sold in bulk, BUT ALWAYS IN BOTTLES, with a finely-engraved U. S. Internal Revenue (special proprietary) Stamp covering the cork of each bottle, fastened to both sides of the neck of same. All Bitters purporting to be Hostetter's, without this stamp, are counterfeit.

HOSTETTER & SMITH.

THE Heart is a delicate organ and must be kept in perfect health that the blood may circulate properly and promote the growth of every organ of the body; therefore, if you have any symptoms of Heart Disease, do not delay, but procure a suitable remedy, such as we offer you in Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, and arrest the disease—delay is always dangerous.

Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

The HEART REGULATOR is guaranteed to cure all symptoms of Heart Disease, organic or sympathetic, and can be procured of your druggist at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

WILHOFT'S TONIC is not a panacea—is not a cure for everything, but is a catholicon for malarious diseases, and day by day adds fresh laurels to its crown of glorious success. Engorged Livers and Spleens, along the shady banks of our lakes and rivers, are restored to their healthy and normal secretions. Health and vigor follow its use, and Chills have taken their departure from every household where Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic is kept and taken. Don't fail to try it. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & CO., Proprietors, New Orleans.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

EXPERIENCE has conclusively shown that for cutaneous eruptions, open sores, leprous exfoliations and rheumatic complaints, HENRY'S CARBOLIC SALVE is more efficacious than any ointment, lotion or embrocation that has ever been devised. Physicians admit this, and the popular verdict confirms and ratifies the professional dictum, and assigns this salve the foremost place among remedies of its class. Sold by all druggists.

Pompeii.

Excavations at Pompeii prove the city to have been one of the most fashionable and beautiful of Roman summer resorts, and but for the eruption it might have remained so to this day. As with Pompeii, so with thousands of people who have beauty of form and feature. They might always be admired but for the eruption, that makes the face unsightly, and betrays the presence of scrofula, virulent blood poisons or general debility. There is but one remedy that positively cures these affections, and that remedy is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the best known tonic, alterative and resolvent. It speedily cures pimples, blotches, liver spots, and all diseases arising from impoverished or impure blood. It also cures dyspepsia, and regulates the liver and bowels. Sold by druggists.

THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND.—Doctor's bills are too long for the poor man's pocket, but many of them may be avoided by keeping GRACE'S SALVE in the cupboard. It is the "precious pot of ointment," curing Burns, Cuts, Scalds, Sprains, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, etc. Prudent housewives will save their husbands' hard-earned money by purchasing a box of this Salve.

RHEUMATISM is the most painful and most troublesome disease that afflicts humanity. It comes when we least expect it and when we have no time to be interviewed by it. The only reliable remedy that we ever found is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

NEARLY all diseases that afflict humanity originate in the stomach, liver or bowels, and might be prevented if people would use a little common sense; but they will not. They rather take Parsons' Purgative Pills, because one is a dose.

FOR upward of 30 years Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children with never-failing success. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, cures dysentery and diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. An old and well-tried remedy. 25 cts. a bottle.

Abolish the Army.

First, For its Uselessness.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: In the army reduction controversy the Sun does not go far enough. The history of the past shows us that there is only one remedy for a state of affairs such as that in which we now find ourselves, an extirpation of the evil. Ever since the Mexican war a strife has been going on between the people of America and their so-called regular army and every year the latter has been extorting more money from the pockets of the taxpayers on false pretenses.

Let us examine, in the light of recorded facts, taken from army histories, written by army officers, the question of abolishing the present regular army and see where it brings us. No taxpayer doubts that we should save $25,000,000 a year by abolishing the regulars, but many worthy citizens, hoodwinked by the organs of the Military Ring at Washington, doubt the possibility of such abolition. They urge, in favor of the present regular force, its supposed services, the dangers to society of its absence, and the supposed costliness of volunteers.

Let us briefly examine these pretensions. First, has our regular army ever done its duty well; does it now, and is it ever likely to perform sufficient service to warrant the expenditure of twenty or thirty millions per annum to sustain it?

Our regular army has suffered just one severe test, in 1861, when, if ever, this hired corps of "professional soldiers" had the opportunity to prove whether they were worth their salt. It must be fresh in the minds of all those people now beyond youth how signally the regular army failed of its duty in that crisis, the first in its long and lazy life. It is sufficient here to recall the fact that no one single member of the regular army died at his post in defense of the property of the Government, that post after post was given up in pusillanimous security to the raw militia of the South, and that the only case of conflict before the rising of "volunteers (the bombardment of Fort Sumter) terminated in the surrender of an unbreached fortress, before a single man of its defenders had ever been wounded.

It may be urged that this is a harsh view of the case: that the regular army of that day was too small in numbers to have effected anything against the forces at the command of the South; that Fort Sumter was not provisioned; that its barracks was on fire, and its ultimate fall inevitable when it surrendered. Conceding all that can be urged in favor of the regulars, it still remains a fact that they were paid and supported in ease and idleness for just one purpose—to fight when the time came, and that they did not fight to the death, nor set one solitary example of heroism to the peaceful citizens on whom they affected, and still affect to look with contempt. Who can calculate on the moral effect that would have been produced on the Union had the four thousand troops of the regular army cantoned in Texas fought hard and died like heroes, instead of surrendering like sheep (as they did), to be carted into Washington a few months later, a demoralized crowd? The odium that would have been cast on their assailants and the glory of martyrdom that would have surrounded their own massacre, would in all likelihood have averted the civil war by the revulsion in public feeling in the South caused by such a spectacle of heroism. But this was not to be, and the contempt created in the South by the pusillanimity of the regular army ended in Bull Run and a four years' war. True, the green militia and raw volunteers stampeded at Bull Run, while the regulars stood their ground and fought, but this was to be expected. Men cannot be made into soldiers in a month, and the Bull Run panic was natural to green troops; but be it also remembered that the regulars did not win the battle of Bull Run, that it was a regular officer who commanded the beaten army, that their opponents were green troops, and that the superiority of the regulars was by no means great enough to justify the two hundred millions of dollars that had been spent on them since the Mexican war.

Passing on through the history of the civil war, do we find a single instance in which the regular amy, or any portion thereof, distinguished itself by any superiority over the volunteers sufficient to justify the advantages enjoyed by them at the expense of their taxpaying brethren? The great and heroic actions of the war were performed by volunteers in all cases, and if the regulars maintained an equality with their comrads it was all. In the Army of the Potomac there was one divison of regulars (so called and eked out with volunteers), but no instance is on record in which these [illegible] their volunteer [illegible] of regular cavalry (also [illegible] teers) was all that could be mustered in the same army in [illegible], and its distinction in the corps was that it was "very cautious." In the Western armies the regulars were equally undeserving of the exclusive privileges granted to them, equally undistinguished except for caution. It was not till the war closed that they asserted themselves once more, and this time we must submit that they proved the superiors of the volunteers in every respect for the work assigned to them.

What was this work?

It became necessary to hold the South under martial law, to dragoon elections, to garrison peaceful towns, to spend much energy on dress parades, and in fine to settle down to the daily life that used to be led by the Austrian army in Lombardy before Magenta. Here, indeed, the volunteers were found wanting. They grumbled, they deserted, they mutinied, they came on dress parades with coats turned inside out, and comported themselves so badly that it became necessary to disband them. But inasmuch as it was necessary to the life of the Republican party to continue martial law in the South, the act was passed that enlarged the regular army to forty regiments of infantry, ten of cavalry and five of artillery—a force of 50,000 men. Let it not be forgotten by all American citizens that our present regular army was raised for the sole purpose of keeping down a part of the American people, and because it was found that the volunteers who saved the Union, after the regular army had betrayed it to the enemy, would not permit themselves to be used for the purpose of oppressing their fellow citizens. Let this be remembered when the talk of "Southern outrages" is reiterated by John Sherman and his brother Tecumseh. The volunteers who put down the rebellion could not see these "outrages," and could not be hired to invent them; while the increase of the regular army into a mercenary force to oppress the South only provoked the spirit of the inhabitants into revolt in the form of Ku-klux Klans. Be it also remembered that since 1870, and under the successive reductions of the regular army to its present force, peace and quiet have gradually and partially returned to the Union, and it will be seen that all the facts so far patent in history point to one conclusion, which is this:

The present regular army of the United States is dangerous to the safety of the people and popular government, and should be at once abolished, root and branch.

It may be objected to this view that the army is necessary to the safety of the frontier, and the public property in the forts and arsenals, which require protection. It will be found, on examination, that this difficulty, like others suggested by the Military Ring at Washington, is a mere hobgoblin to frighten children. The only use of nine-tenths of our forts on the American seacoasts is to consume money, and if they were dismantled, the country would be so much the richer by the sale of their now obsolete and useless armaments. The few serviceable ones could be garrisoned by militia in case of necessity, and at all other times left in charge of the watchmen who are already employed to do the real work.

The prime necessity for the present day is to abolish our insolent, lazy, overpaid standing army, and to compel its members to earn their living as other men do, instead of eating the bread of idleness. That once done, and every officer thrown on his own resources, we should be able to find exactly how much real necessity we have for an army, and to provide for that necessity and no more. Even if we had to raise a new army from time to time, as the volunteers were raised during the rebellion, we should have gained a most important advantage by abolishing a threatening and dangerous class in the community, that of "professional soldiers." At present the officers of our regular army consider themselves to be entitled to be supported in idleness for life, because they joined the regular instead of the volunteer army. A captain of volunteers, crippled for life, gets $8 a month on pension; a captain who joined the regulars at the same time, did the same or less service, and lost an arm, retires with seventy-five per cent. of his full pay. This is not just to the taxpayers, who are compelled to support the regular nor to the crippled volunteer who has no "retired list." The great prevalence in the army list of names of the sons and grandsons of former officers of the army is another evidence of the slow development of a regular feudal nobility, quietly, but none the less surely, springing up. All these dangers to our republic can be avoided by the abolition of the present standing army and the dismissal of all its officers. This would of course, include the shutting up of West Point, and there is no doubt that this would be an unmixed benefit to the country, for West Point is the nursery of shoddy nobility of the shoulder strap.

Abolish the army and shut up West Point, and these gentlemen will be awakened to the fact that they belong to the same class as the bricklayer who carries his hod up the ladder, and cannot expect, any more than he, competition from the common lot. No doubt there would be a marvellous outcry from the poor beings thus forced to earn an honest living, and we should be reminded of the talent and education we were throwing away, which we might some day need. But this is certain: Whenever we need professional soldiers twenty years to come it will only be necessary to advertise "pay and rations" and we shall have shoals of such fish darting from every barroom in the land, hungry for the bait. If they leave the country for foreign wars, so much the better for the United States; but the experience of the West Point element in Egypt has put a stop to the golden visions in which such gentry used to indulge. When they found that the Khedive expected them to work for their pay there ensued a great stampede of American officers from his service.

[illegible] frank and honest truth here, and [illegible] who dares deny it. The United States has no enemies, and is likely to have none for many years requiring a standing army. We have but two neighbors, Canada and Mexico. Canada has no regular army. Mexico has none that the Texan militia could not exterminate. Professional soldiers in peace times are unmitigated nuisances, lazy, haughty, insolent, and overbearing to citizens. Let us get rid of them. As for the Indians, if every Western fort were evacuated to-morrow there would be no more Indian wars, or they would be settled once for all as they were settled in our early history before we ever thought of having a regular army.

The People Want Proof.

There is no medicine perscribed by physicians, or sold by druggists, that carries such evidence of its success and superior virtue as Boschee's German Syrup for severe coughs, colds settled on the breast, consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs. A proof of that fact is that any person afflicted, can get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try its superior effect before buying the regular size at 75 cents. It has lately been introduced in this country from Germany, and its wonderful cures are astonishing everyone that use it. Three doses will relieve any case Try it. Sold by W. McIntyre & Son.

A Remarkable Result.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of lung disease. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to throat and lung affections, consumption, hemorrhages, asthma, severe colds settled on the breast, pneumonia, whooping cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. To such we would say that 50,000 dozen were sold last year without one complaint. Consumptives, try just one bottle. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by Wm. McIntyre & Son.

A Masonic Incident,

[New Orleans Times.]

One of the interesting incidents of the yellow fever epidemics is told below:

Several years ago, a gentleman from Chicago was traveling in Florida. At Jacksonville, he was taken sick, and for a time his life was despaired of. All this time he was tenderly nursed by a young widow, a Mrs. Wilcox, and to her he felt he owed his restoration to life and friends. Upon his return to his home in Chicago, he communicated the facts to the Garden City lodge of masons, of which he was a member.

The lodge made an appropriation to purchase for its faithful nurse a neat gold watch and chain, which, suitably inscribed, was forwarded to her by the master of the lodge.

Years passed on and the young widow remarried, this time to a seafaring man. The couple moved to New Orleans, and lived in a happy, cheerful home, the pleasures of which were enhanced by the presence of a bright young lad, the fruit of the wife's former marriage.

On the breaking out of the epidemic, misfortunes accumulated over the heads of the little household.

The husband was thrown out of employment and soon the wife sickened and died. The little gold watch was thought of as a means of producing aid. Instead of the pawnbroker, however, its inscription lead the husband to seek masonic aid. The little trinket was the talisman that showed the case worthy and well deserving of masonic aid. All that was asked by the houseless man was that the boy be sent to relatives of the mother in California. With the responsibility for his care removed for a time, and the wide seas before him, he could fight his way through to better times, when he might hope to be reunited to the little boy he had learned to love as a father loves.

The request was attended to, and yesterday the little fellow started on his travels toward the golden west. There was placed around his neck as he entered the train of the Jackson road, a card, to which was fastened a tag, having the following inscription:

"NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 3, 1878.—The bearer of this is Walter Wilcox, who has been orphaned by the epidemic which has prevailed in this city He is five or six years old, and is en route to San Francisco, via Louisville and Chicago.

He has been forwarded from this point, New Orleans, by the masonic relief lodge, and is the holder of a through ticket, No. 251, New Orleans and Chicago, via Louisville, from No. 356, and funds have been placed in the hands of conductors to defray the necessary expenses which may be incurred on his account.

He will be received at Chicago by parties representing the masonic relief lodge of that city. I bespeak for him on the part of railroad men between New Orleans and Chicago every possible attention looking to his comfort and protection.

THE FARMER GIRL'S CHOICE.

I am only a farmer's girl;
  John is only a farmer's lad,
But somehow, when we chance to meet,
The very sound of his coming feet
  Can make my heart so glad
That up to my cheeks the warm blush flies,
And he reads his welcome in my eyes.

I am only a farmer's girl;
  Master Tom is the Squire's son;
But, strange to tell, his feet this way
Turn often toward the close of day,
  After the chores are done,
When John (he passes the meadow gate)
Gives such a scowl, and—will not wait.

I am only a farmer's girl,
  So what can the Squire want of me!
My heart is John's; John knows it well;
But it isn't for me the truth to tell—
  So bashful a lad is he!
So the Squire may come and the Squire may go,
But all the answer he'll get is "No!"

The Squire praises my hair and eyes;
  The Squire says I'm a lady born.
What care I for his foolish speech?
'Tis John's voice only my heart can teach
  To sing like the birds at morn.
But John is jealous, the foolish boy,
And my days are shorn of half their joy.

Oh, I am only a farmer's girl,
  And John is only a farmer's lad,
But I'd rather be his in his humble life
Than be a "lady" as Squire's wife,
  With a restless heart and sad!
But John—so bashful a boy is he!
Is a long while asking my heart of me.

THE FRETTING WIFE.

"Why don't you ever clean your boots on the scraper, William?" said Jane Lovett to her husband. "I had just made everything nice and comfortable when you came in; and now see the dirt wherever you've been, from one side of the room to the other; and it must just be the same in the entries and on every stair. I'm completely tired out with brushing and dusting——"

"Fret! fret! just so every time I come into the house!" was William's soothing response. "I should think your tongue would get tired."

"I do get tired of speaking to you about things which make me so much trouble; and yet you do not seem to mind them at all."

"No; and so much speaking only makes me mind the less."

"That's just as amiable as you are. You never care how much I have to go through, nor how much I suffer. Such a continual effort for me to get along! My life seems a continual struggle, just for the sake of life," and here Jane began to cry.

"What a fuss about a little dust on the carpet," snapped the husband.

"No, it's not merely that," retorted the wife, in crying tone, "but you never seem to care how hard and trying things may be for me. You care nothing for my pleasure or ease. You know very well I wouldn't mind the carpet once, but it's just so all the time and about everything. The man who shook the carpets last week said he never should have thought that they had been taken up every year if he hadn't been told so, for he hadn't shaken such dirty ones for four years. Now, why should our house be so much dirtier than other people's? You know it's not my fault, for I'm as particular as anybody."

"You've got a new saddle for your hobby, and there'll be no end to your riding it, just because that old fellow wanted to make a fool of you, and get the job of shaking your carpets twice a year."

"But, William," said Jane, putting down the handkerchief from her eyes, "why don't you be more careful? When I try so hard to get along and keep things nice you needn't make so much work. Dear me, to have to live with such a person! It would have been better for us both if we never had met."

Hereupon the husband, William, departed, leaving Jane to cry it out alone. She sobbed awhile quite heartily, and made herself believe she was the most unappreciated, unfortunate and miserable of beings; then, like a good housewife, she began to think.

"What good does all this do? I am making myself sick for nothing—my eyes will feel so badly that I can't sew." So she wisely rose and bathed them, brushed up her carpet and sat down to her needlework. But she was not in a good mood, not repentant, nor forgiving, nor cheerful, not even pacific.

She was in little better feeling when she met her husband at dinner, but was quite in the humor to make demands and let her grievances be manifest. The carving was hardly over when she began:

"William, did you see about having the stove cleaned and lined this morning? Bridget says she cannot cook with it any longer as it is, and it makes her so cross I can hardly manage her."

"No; I hadn't time," was the laconic answer.

"Hadn't time! I guess you could have found time if you'd tried—I've no idea you ever thought of it. If you cared anything for other people, you'd think of them and find time to see to things. You find time for your own matters."

"You seem to know so much, why do you ask me? Perhaps you'd better see to your affairs yourself."

"What hadn't I better do? I do almost everything now, yet you never seem satisfied. I suppose I can go to the stove store, since you don't seem to be able to do anything—I don't know but I shall have to go to the tailor's yet, to order your clothes for you. Well, I want to know if you saw Walker about those drawers, as I have so often asked you to? I am in such need of them I don't know what to do. Everything is in confusion in the closets."

"No; I didn't see Walker."

"Well, when will you?"

"I don't know."

"Will you ever?"

"That I don't know. Anything further?"

"Yes. Did you get a latch for Bridget's door?"

"No."

"I asked you to be sure and remember it when you went out from breakfast. That door is slam, slam the whole time. I never saw anybody like you. I cannot get anything done, and it's just so always."

Mr. Lovett ate away unmoved, and his wife, not thinking of any other subject of complaint at that moment, finished her dinner in silence.

Just as Mr. Lovett was leaving the dining-room, she called out, "William, Alboni sings to-night; can't you take me to hear her?"

"I have an engagement this evening," he answered, with his hand upon the door.

"It's the last night she sings, and I haven't heard her," said Jane.

"I can't help it," said William.

"You don't try to help it. Mr. Linton took his wife twice to hear her, and they're going again to-night. Mrs. Linton thinks she sings as well as Jenny Lind."

"I suppose she has a right to her opinion."

"Well, why can't you take me?" persisted Jane.

"Take you to a concert, after all you've said!"

"Anything for an excuse! You know I've said nothing but the truth, and you never take me anywhere, and never did!"

"No, never!" said Lovett, in a tone of irony, as he closed the door.

Jane was not disappointed, for she had no expectation of going to the concert. She only asked her husband to take her in order to try him, and to show him what other husbands did, and what he didn't do.

She had now so far relieved herself that she was in a mood for wholesome thought and reflection, and she soon began to have some misgivings as to the right of the course she had been pursuing, and also as to its wisdom. Right and wisdom are, in fact, the same thing.

Jane Lovett was at heart a woman of good motives and kind feelings, though, as we have seen, she had an irritable, uncomfortable temper. Her temperament was nervous as that of too many women in these days—our grandmothers would have called them cross, ugly, or, most likely, scolds and vixens; but, in the light of our philanthropy, we know better—dear hearts! they are nervous!

Jane Lovett was nervous—she had too much regard for trifles, a too-lively conception of evils, and little facility in adapting herself to circumstances. She was also affectionate and imaginative, and in her girlhood had formed a high ideal for her lover.

Her opportunities of acquaintance with her husband before marriage were limited, and so she loved, and hoped, and trusted he was all she would desire in a life-long companion and lord. Yes, lord, for she had an idea that she would like to look up to somebody, lean upon him, cling to him, reverence him, and all that sort of thing.

How was she disappointed! What a change a few weeks of married life does sometimes make in a woman's future!

William Lovett was a man of very good natural feelings and endowments, and could make himself very agreeable when he tried, else he never would have won his wife—but he had few of the qualifications that make domestic life a paradise for woman. He had been reared alone, without any home discipline and education, and was often thoughtless and inconsiderate of others, and sometimes selfish. He lacked all the useful and convenient, though unappreciated habits of order, tidiness and promptness; and, what was worse for a man, he even lacked industry and energy. He could rouse himself for an emergency, but it was only for that, and then he sank back into his former indifferent, careless ease.

Such a character was least of all in accordance with that of Jane, who was possessed of great energy, and had been trained to carefulness and industry.

At first she was greatly distressed in her disappointment, and recently lamented her fate in bitterness of spirit, but keen feelings do not last long. She gradually grew accustomed to her lot, and endeavored to perform its duties faithfully, though she was not happy, and was very often annoyed by the delinquencies and deficiencies of her husband. They irritated her temper, and she would complain and fret. This course had no effect to improve things. It seldom has.

Matters grew worse year by year. The husband's affection waned by degrees, and he became more and more inattentive and selfish, while the cares and anxieties of the wife kept increasing, and with them increased her complaining and fretting. An unenviable state of things, most surely. I wonder if it's rare?

After the dinner colloquy we have given, Jane returned to her room, thoughtful and repentant. She discoursed with herself somewhat in this wise:

"I am sorry I was so cross at dinner. William might have been pleasant if I had given him a chance. What a miserable life we are leading! I am so unhappy, and things are growing worse and worse—what may they come to? To be sure, William is not what I once thought he was, but that cannot be helped now—he is my husband; we are vowed unto each other till death, and why not make the best, instead of the worst, of my lot? And it is not so bad as it might be, after all. William might be dissipated or dishonest, which he is not now. But who knows what he may become, if I any longer render his home unhappy. Oh, I am wrong! I know I am! Let me try to do better! God help me! Finding fault with William does not improve him; I have tried it long enough; I will try what gentleness, meekness and endurance may do. I shall make him happier in that way, and it is easier to be virtuous when we are happy than when we are wretched. It will require a strong effort and unremitting watchfulness to overcome my faults of temper, but is not the happiness and well-being of life a sufficient motive? I will make the effort. I cannot change character and circumstances, but I will suit myself to them."

Jane thus came to a wise resolution, which she ought to have made early in her married life; but it was in this case according to the old maxim, "better late than never." And, what was wiser than the resolution, she began to act upon it. Plenty of good resolutions are made—a few remembered—fewer kept.

When her husband came home to tea, Jane was dressed neatly, and, though there was a cloud on his brow, she looked and spoke pleasantly. It was an effort for her to appear in the same way in the morning, for he was still moody and silent, and disobliging, but she remembered her resolution, and did not break it.

In the middle of the forenoon he entered her room on some errand, as on the day previous, with boots unscraped; she seemed to take no notice of them.

"I think I must have made a light breakfast," he said, carelessly.

Jane soon disappeared, and returning, offered him a plate of tempting sandwiches.

He looked up at her in surprise.

"What does this mean, Jane?"

"I thought you were hungry, and I wanted to please you," was her ingenuous reply.

He took the sandwiches with one hand, and, drawing her toward him with the other, kissed her tenderly.

"Why, Jane, we're growing young again."

"I wish we might grow good and loving," was her answer, as she returned the kiss.

When he was gone, Jane brushed up her carpet quickly and cheerfully; and it did not seem half so dirty as the day before, though the mud was much deeper in the streets. The boot-scraper was not forgotten again that day, and, before night, a man appeared to put the stove in order, and Walker called to say he was sorry he had disappointed Mrs. L. about the drawers; he would have them done very soon.

Jane kept herself good-natured and cheerful the next day, and several other days, although William often forgot that his boots were muddy when he came home, and several times turned all the drawers inside out to find what he had left at his office; woke up the baby with his loud sneezes; forgot half her commissions, important as they were to her, and even delayed to order coal till one day there was none with which to cook the dinner.

She schooled herself to patience. Sometimes, when a murmuring word was coming, she bit her lips and kept it back. Sometimes she left the room to gather strength and self-control, but oftenest spoke of something beside the subject of vexation as quickly as possible.

At the end of a week, Alboni's "last concert" was again announced.

"Now, Jane, we'll hear Alboni tonight," said William at breakfast. "She's going to sing again—perhaps on your account. You'll go, I suppose?"

"Yes, thank you, but I don't care much about hearing her. I'd almost as lief stay at home with you."

"Why, don't you think she sings as well as Jenny Lind?"

"No, I don't—do you?"

"Hardly; but you say Mrs. Linton does. We'll hear her, though, and see."

When they were returning from the concert that night, Mr. Lovett said to his wife:

"Well, Jane, what did you think of Alboni?"

"O, I was charmed."

"Well, did you think she sang as well as the nightingale?"

"Indeed, I enjoyed her singing more—she somehow made me feel so happy—so full of delight. Weren't you delighted?"

"Yes, I must own I was; but I cannot give Alboni credit for all. You've been such a dear good girl lately, Jane"—and he bent his face very near to hers, I know, though one couldn't see distinctly for the darkness. "I really think we're growing young again."

Jefferson's Grave.

And then we drive on to the base of Carter's mountain, and as the horses pull us up the stony, winding road we get glimpses of scenery of extreme beauty. The corn stands stacked in fields where lichen-covered stone walls and hedges, after the English fashion, mark the boundaries. Then the view is shut in by banks of drooping ferns and tangled vines and underbrush, with here and there a wild daisy or cardinal flower. And again, a vista through the trees reveals the dome of the university glistening in the sun, and away off to the west the misty outlines of the Blue Ridge mountains. The country round about is rolling. Small streams wind in behind and out from rounded hills, and the railroad, also taking a serpentine course, causes the train of cars to look like a graceful snake as it curves first this way and then that, in its endeavor to avoid the hills. Near the top of "Monticello" (Little mountain) we come upon the family graveyard, where Jefferson is buried. A high brick wall, with iron gratings, extends around a clearing in the woods. A rude, low pillar of rough granite, with simply his name, birth and death cut in the base, marks the spot. "Died July 4, 1826," just fifty years after the signing of that famous Declaration! The monument first erected was carried off piece by piece by those vandals, the relic hunters, and now another is to be put up at the expense of Congress. The spot is singularly solitary, no view is visible, tall trees surround it and sigh solemn requiems at every breath of air that stirs. The carriage-way that leads to the mansion goes close by, but it only adds to the effect of isolation.—Cor. Troy Times.

The First White Man on American Soil.

A writer in the Jewish Messenger cites Alexander von Humboldt's "Cosmos" as an authority for a claim that a Jew was the first white man who set foot on American soil.

The Jew, however, had been baptized. In a note in volume 11, chapter vi., Humboldt relates that, on his first expedition, Columbus, when approaching the island of Cuba, believed himself to be between two Chinese ports. Desiring to hand the letters which he possessed from the European monarchs to the "great Chan of the Moguls" in China, and then return to Spain, he "sends a baptized Jew, Louis de Torres by name, to the shore, because he understands the Hebrew, the Chaldac, and some Arabic, those languages being used in all the mercantile places of Asia."

THE CAPITALIST AND THE LABORER.

[Dr. J. G. Holland, in October Scribner.]

We had occasion, some months ago, to allude to the examples of immorality furnished by men of money to men of labor, in endeavoring to account, in some measure, for the brutal excesses of the latter. It was a plain case, that hardly needed arguing. The notorious facts, in connection with the moneyed classes for the last ten years, are those which relate to the betrayal of trusts, the watering of stocks, gambling in grain and other necessaries of life, the wrecking of insurance companies, the bursting of savings banks through stealing and reckless management, the running of railroads in the interest of directors rather than in that of stockholders and the public, etc., etc. Poor people have looked on, and felt all the power of this degrading example. The way in which capital has been managed and mismanaged in this country has been utterly demoralizing. The poor have seen capitalists stealing from one another in a thousand ways, and even stealing their own hard-earned savings. The gambling in stocks, the gambling in grain, the defalcations among men who have been universally trusted, the malversation of persons high in the church, the great "game of grab," played so generally among those supposed to have money, and among the great corporations—all these have tended to break down the public morality; and, if the poor have been apt to learn the lessons of life from "the superior classes," they have simply learned to steal. What wonder that trades-unions thrive? What wonder that we have a "commune?" What wonder that we have unreasonable mobs? If stealing is to be the order of the day, the poor want their chance with the rest!

The old saying is that corporations have no souls; and we suspect that, added to the influences we have recounted, tending to fill the poor with discontent and to array them against capital, is the soulless character of corporation life. A corporation combines the capital of a certain number, or an uncertain number, of persons. It is a combination for the simple purpose of making money. It does not take along with it the moralities, the amenities, the sympathies, the benevolences, of the stockholders. As a rule, any individual stockholder has very little influence. He is simply concerned, therefore, to get his regular dividends; and the directors who manage everything are mainly interested in so directing their affairs as to be able to fulfill his expectation. It is not for them to take the morality, the health, the comfort, the competent wages of their employes into account. It is not for them to provide church and school privileges for their operatives, to look after them in sickness, to pension them in old age, to furnish them with reading-rooms and amusements. To a corporation, a workman is a machine, running by vital power, to be supported at the lowest cost, that he may help to pay a dividend. So there never can be, until the policy of the world changes, any affectionate relations between a corporation and its operatives. It is not recognized by its operatives as having a soul. It is nothing toward which they can exercise the sentiment of gratitude, or love, or loyalty. It is simply their task-master and the agency through which they receive their just or unjust wages.

Few people are aware of the overshadowing power of corporations in this country. They have grown with the country's growth, until they control, directly or indirectly, all our industries. The railroad corporations represent enormous capital and enormous power. Mining and manufacturing corporations employ an immense amount of labor. Literally, millions of men are the servants of corporations, and wherever a mob starts up it will be found to have some sort of connection with a corporation. These servants, or operatives, never regard the property of a corporation as they regard the property of a man. To them there seems to be no owner for it who has a better right to it than themselves. They entertain the same feeling toward it that richer men feel toward the Government. If they watch Congress they will find that body voting appropriations for objects which are entirely illegitimate. Every Congress steals from the Government in one way or another, and suffers no compunctions of conscience. The Government has no soul. Congress would not vote away an individual's money, but it will vote away the nation's money, and laugh over it as a good joke. Rich and good people are caught smuggling without a thought that they are doing wrong. The wrong consists entirely in being found out. So we say that a great company of ignorant work-people who never see anything in a corporation but its power—a power without a heart—a power without a conscience—a power of money only—will not, when excited by real or fancied wrong, respect its property.

It is gravely prophesied in high newspaper quarters that before the time in which this article will see the light shall arrive there will be an uprising of the "commune," or violence and rioting among workmen in different parts of the country. We trust that the foreboding is groundless, but we may be sure that we shall always be liable to these uprisings until the rich shall set a better example in the management of their trusts and in the conduct of their business, and until something more human and more Christian shall enter into the relations between corporations and the men and women in their employ. There are private manufactories in this country in which an uprising or a strike would be simply impossible—in which the relations between the employers and the employed are so respectful and affectionate, and in which the interests of the latter are so carefully and conscientiously regarded, that no misunderstanding can occur. The work-people feel that their employers are their friends, and in this friendship their self-respect and their integrity are nourished. There must come, sooner or later, in this country, a change in the principles or policy of corporation management. Corporations must recognize the fact that workmen have souls—that their self-respect must be strengthened, that their minds must be fed, and that they have a moral right to a part of the wealth which their labor, combined with the brains and the money invested, produces. In short, corporations must have souls, and recognize the souls, and the wants of the souls, in their employ. The time is gone by when men can be treated simply as brutes without dangerously arousing the brutal element in them. Men want a chance for their wives and children. They want a chance for better homes, or for privileges which will make their lives more significant. They are short-sighted, and cannot reason it all out. They have worked hard, and they have had nothing but bread and poor shelter. They feel as if they ought to have more; so they take the suicidal short-cut, yield to their brutal impulses, and work mischief to themselves and to all society. We speak of them as ignorant, but, after all, they are no more ignorant than the managers of corporations who have not yet learned that a man is a man, and that he cannot be treated simply as an animal or a machine, either economically to themselves or with safety to the country. And the rich everywhere are ignorant if they suppose that they can harmlessly set the poor an example of treachery to trust, of greed without conscience, and of a policy that constantly subverts the golden rule.

Whimsicalities of Insanity.

A literary gentleman of some celebrity, who, in consequence of a slight affection of the brain, was for several months the inmate of an insane asylum in Scotland, has recently published his "impressions" of life therein. He says that one of the most singular of his fellow sufferers was a gentleman who was a very beautiful billiard-player, an old inmate of the house, and quite a psychological study. He seemed like a man in a waking dream, and historical events and personages, from the dreamland of his memory, were perpetually mirrored on his brain. He complimented the writer by supposing him 4,000 years old, and considered the events and persons of the present generation unworthy of notice. The following is a specimen of his extraordinary reminiscences: "Oh, yes, Mr. ——, I knew very well. There were two Noahs whom I knew, but old Mr. Noah lived some thousand years before the Noah you refer to, who built the ark. I had a good deal to do with the construction of the ark, and furnished some very useful hints in regard to the admission of air and light and so forth. He was a very respectable man, Noah, with a decent family, but, unfortunately, he got into very dissipated habits in his old age, and, in spite of all I could say to him, he indulged in wine to a very hurtful excess. Julius Cæsar was a very clever man, with a bald forehead; but I was more intimate with Alexander the Great, of Macedonia, as I was long in the military profession myself. I one time commanded three battalions of men about three-quarters of an inch tall. No; they were not Lilliputians. I knew Capt. Gulliver very well. And they were smart enough little fellows; but my men were excellent marksmen—they always aimed at the eyes and never missed. I'll tell you, Mr. ——, the most extraordinary thing you ever heard, which beats railroads. I was once transported from the farthest shores of India to the center of Africa in three minutes! By what means?" he repeated, in reply to a question respecting his method of transit—"By a bomb!" In reply to my remark on the danger of being wafted so rapidly over vast oceans, he continued: "Yes, it was attended with considerable danger. I once came down souse into the ocean; but fortunately I hailed a vessel, which came to my relief, and I pursued my journey to the wilds of Africa with the loss of only two minutes." Sometimes, however, the poor gentleman would seem doubtful of his own veracity, or the strength of his memory, and remark: "My memory is not so good as it was, and my health, for the last 100 years, has rather failed me, which makes my head a little confused." And thus he moves about in his waking dream, wearing out his existence between his pipe and at a game of billiards, diversified, occasionally, by a short excursion in the neighborhood, in charge of an attendant.

"Your professor has given you some elementary instructions as to bodies?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very well. What is a transparent body?"

(Silence that would reflect no discredit upon a Trappist or a deaf mute.)

"Well, what is a transparent body? Don't you know?"

"Of course I do; I recollect the words in the book. A transparent—body—is—is—"

"It's a body through which you can see light. Now give me an example of a transparent body?"

"A lock."

"A lock?"

"Yes, sir; you can see light through the key-hole."

How They Do in China.

In the case of a Chinaman convicted of a petty crime in the City Criminal Court, an affidavit was yesterday presented by a gentleman, who avers, among other things, that he has for fifteen years been a student of the Chinese language and customs, and that he had discovered that in China, when a Chinaman escapes after arrest for crime and cannot be produced for trial, the authorities seize every person bearing the same family name as the original prisoner; and, in the event of the latter not being recaptured within a certain time, his nearest kinsmen is selected from those arrested in his place and tried as the culprit.—San Francisco Bulletin.

THE earnings of the Central Pacific railroad for the first eight months of the present year aggregate $11,106,363; for the first eight months of 1877 they were $10,592,644.

MY LITTLE COUNTRY COUSIN.

My little country cousin
Is really worth a dozen
Of the city girls you meet as you stroll along Broadway!
She's ever so much neater,
She's ever so much sweeter,
Just a modest little flower, not intended for display.

Pure as the sky above her,
None knew her but to love her;
The very birds for her repeat their most delicious songs;
So bright she is and merry,
You will not think it very
Strange that the troubled heart for such a cheery spirit longs.

So pretty and so youthful,
So roguish, yet so truthful,
My little country cousin, with her sweet, attractive ways,
My favorite is, clearly;
Indeed, I love her dearly,
And find that language is too poor in which to speak her praise.

My love I need not stifle;
With me she does not trifle,
Or bid me in the Lethean wave my aspirations drown.
Ah, no, my precious jewel
Would never be so cruel,
For my little country cousin is the sweetest wife in town.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Cure for Neuralgia.—A correspondent recommends applications of electricity as a positive remedy for the complaint.

Remedy for Canker Worms.—It will be well for those whose orchards are troubled with canker worms to try the following remedy of Rev. Dr. Cummings, of Concord, which he confidently recommends: He placed pine boughs around the roots of his apple and elm trees, which has effectively driven away the insects that were in large numbers ascending the trees in the neighborhood. The canker worm troubles chiefly apple and elm trees, and the theory upon which the pine-bough remedy rests is that the worms, finding them at the foot of the tree, naturally conclude that the tree is a pine one, and pass it by. The remedy is easily and cheaply applied, and, if surely and reliably efficacious, should be generally known and resorted to by those troubled with these insects.

Winter Clothes.—With regard to the use of clothes many erroneous opinions are entertained, and even among the better-educated classes the mode by which clothes act in protecting us from cold is little if at all understood. A very common idea is that they keep us warm by preventing air from reaching our bodies, whereas the fact is that just those materials which are most permeable to air keep us warmest. Their action is simple enough, and consists in rendering the air still around us, and in regulating its temperature by the heat which leaves our bodies. Extreme degrees of cold can, it is well known, be better borne when the air is still than when with the same degree of cold the air is in motion. Everyone knows from experience how much warmer woolen gloves are, even when loosely knitted, than the tight-fitting kid; yet, if the prevention of air from reaching the surface of the body were the source of warmth, kid should be warmer than woolen gloves. The corollary from the foregoing remarks is, therefore, at once evident. Our clothes should be worn loose, so as to allow a stratum of warm air between them and our bodies; they should be of not too close a texture, for it is found that cotton or wool loses its power of protecting us from cold by being compressed. They should also be light, to permit an active exercise in the open air without producing exhaustion by their weight.

Mothers as Doctors.—Practical mothers learn much by their experience with the little bodies entrusted to their care. Some of the most common-sense facts in the physical culture of these little ones, known to the more experienced mothers, may not come amiss to those who have had but little care of children. The foundation must be well laid to insure healthy and happy children. The child must be well slept, well aired, well fed and well bathed. By a thorough understanding and practice of these four simple rules, much of the physical, mental and moral suffering in life would be avoided by parent as well as child. If a healthy child (and a delicate one proportionately) is regularly put to bed about dark, in a quiet, well-ventilated, or even cold room, after a supper of plain food, it will naturally awake at daybreak, good natured, with keen appetite for a wholesome breakfast. Nutritious, plain food, at regular hours, with no candy or stimulants, and free bathing, help the system to ward off many prevalent children's ailments, and to bear, with much less danger, the few that must necessarily come to the majority of little ones. The child that is just given a little confectionery, or any unsuitable food, and then rocked to sleep, should cause no surprise at waking peevish and feverish. It is simply the result of imaginary affection and want of knowledge on the part of the one in charge. It will certainly pay, in the end, to search diligently for the cause when a child is proverbially cross. —Golden Rule.

He "Greased the Buggy."

The Irishman who obeyed directions to "trim the orchard," by first cutting down all the trees, has found a kindred spirit as thorough as himself. The Vallejo (Cal.) Chronicle says:

J. W. Farmer hired an old sailor to work around his place the other day. The man is a willing soul, but his knowledge of farm matters is fearfully limited. This morning Mr. Farmer told him to go out and grease the buggy. The man went, and when Mr. Farmer, not long after, stepped to get into the vehicle to come to town, he drew his hands back in wonder to find them greased. Examination showed that the whole buggy, from top to bottom, running-gear, body, shafts and all, were covered with a slick coating of grease; everything was greased except the axles. The man had also greased a carriage in the same careful and thorough manner, even to its whole top, and stood by admiring his handiwork with all the satisfaction of a person who thinks he has done a job exceedingly well.

Mr. Farmer got into the carriage and sadly drove to town. When he got there it was probably one of the most horrible-looking sights in the shape of a vehicle ever seen. The road was, of course, dusty, and the dust had gathered to somewhere near the depth of an inch on every square inch of its surface. The carriage looked as if it had been built dusty, and then driven across the plains, and on a trip through the Yosemite, and had tipped over numberless times on the route. It is now at Henderson's being cleaned. We have not learned whether the man's wages have been raised or not.

It is stated that 2,380 children were turned away from the doors of the New York city public schools because there is no room inside for them. They are thus thrust back to the schooling of the tenement-houses and the streets because the Board of Education has spent so much money in giving older pupils a smattering of ornamental studies that it has not enough left to provide school-room and teachers for these little ones.

On the north side of St. Gothard tunnel 1,000 men are employed underground, and 400 in the open air. Three hundred wagon-loads of earth are excavated every day, and in the daily blastings 600 pounds of dynamite are used. The energy shown on the Italian side is said to be equally great.

Natural History for Small People.

The whale is generally spoken of by poets as "the monster of the deep." Do you see how lively he is? The whale is the most sportive fish under water. The shark can take a joke and crack one, but for broad, riffling humor the whale knocks all the funny almanacs into slivers.

"How long is a whale?"

"Some whales are eighty feet long, but, if you ever see one, and rush into a printing office to have an item built on the fact, it would be better for your children if you said that the whale was forty feet long. The world can forgive a man for exaggerating the facts of a tornado, freshet or steamboat disaster, but the man who lies about fish is gone up from that moment. That's the reason why no true, good man ever goes a-fishing."

"Can a whale crack a hickory-nut with his teeth?"

"He can, but he doesn't fool around with such trifles. When he opens his mouth to bite he prefers to crack a whale-boat or a bald-headed sea Captain from Nantucket—one of those tough old fellows who come back from the Arctic seas and tell about seeing four moons in the sky at once."

"Is a whale's mouth as large as the Capitol building at Washington?"

"That's according to whose book on whaling you have confidence in. Some writers can open a whale's mouth wide enough to chuck in most any building, while others who want to go to heaven state that no whale could gulp down a street car without losing some of his teeth. The trouble is that no newspaper man ever finds time to go off on a cruise after whales, and therefore the public can secure no reliable figures and statistics."

"How old do whales live to be?"

"You have got us now. We never saw the same whale over three or four times, or, whether they died of grief over that fact, or swam away to make new acquaintances, we could never find out When a man tells you that a whale lives to be 7, 70 or 700 years old, ask him to submit the proofs."

"Where are whales mostly found?"

"In the water. They never come to land until tired of life and ready for a change."

"How fast can they swim?"

"That is another disputed point. A Nantucket Captain says he saw one speeding at the rate of thirty miles an hour, while a New Bedford Captain saw one going at the rate of a mile a minute. Horace Greeley could have settled the dispute in his 'Recollections of a Busy Life,' but he seems to have avoided doing so. However, if you are ever chased by a whale, it will be prudent for you to make 100 miles an hour if you can."

"Do whales prefer shelled corn to corn on the cob?"

"No. No well-regulated whale would be in the least put out after swallowing a wagon load of cobs."

"Do whales fight with each other?"

"Not often. If a whale comes fooling around, blustering what he can do and putting on airs, he is generally rolled in the mud to take the conceit out of him; but, as a rule, the whale prefers to rest his nose on a coral reef and give himself up to planning the social elevation of the walrus and the squid."

"Is it cruel to harpoon a whale?"

"It is. There should be a law obliging the whalers to catch their victims with a noosed rope and then stupefy them with chloroform. Continue to be a good boy, and to be glad that you are not a whale."—Detroit Free Press.

A Hint to the Consumptive.

A correspondent of Les Mondes calls attention to the fact that butchers, though they may be pale and thin when they enter on the business, quickly gain freshness of color, stoutness, and a generally comfortable look. It is a pure fiction, of course, that they put aside the best portions of the meat for themselves, and it is a known fact that most of them lose appetite. The correspondent attributes the general well-being to assimilation, through the respiratory passages, of nutritive juices of the meat volatilized in the air—a kind of nutrition by effusion. If this be really a fact, it is argued that young people, suffering from deficient or impure blood, and especially children of a weak or lymphatic constitution, might be subjected with advantage to hygienic treatment based upon it. A well-known French physician commends the idea, and offers the following plan for the treatment of consumptive persons, in place of sending them off to distant places with reputedly mild climates. In a well-ventilated, sun-lit and sheltered room, with southern exposure, he would, by means of a Mousseron brazier, the high, moist heat of which is salutary and favorable to respiration, form for the patient an artificial climate, like that of Nice or Florida, having all the advantages, without the inconveniences, of the real climate. To aid the antiseptic action of the warm, moist air, rich in vapors, charged with dissolved carbonic acid, he would place in one or more corners of the room an open bottle of water saturated with sulphurous acid. By this arrangement he thinks the progress of the tuburculation would be arrested.

Ostrich Feathers.

The ostrich-feather business increases, but the supply is getting sadly short. Twenty pairs of ostriches were recently sold in South Africa for breeding purposes, and fetched an average of nearly $1,000 per pair. As much as $1,425 was paid for one pair, while the lowest price obtained was $650. It was only a few years ago that ostriches could be procured in South Africa for catching, and for exhibition purposes in London they sold at a mere trifle. Even the Zoological Society in London, remarkable for its collection of foreign birds, does not possess a single specimen of the African ostrich. At a recent sale of feathers a choice parcel realized $310 per pound, or about $4 for each separate feather. In 1860 the exports from the Cape of Good Hope were about 2,297 pounds, valued at $96,800. Ten years later the quantity had increased twelvefold, and the value five-fold. In 1873, 31,581 pounds were exported, at a value of $798,395, and last year the exports had reached in value the sum of $1,967,936.

Facts for Kerosene Burners.

Every lamp filled with the fluid is liable to explode after burning several hours. But no explosion will ever happen when the lamp is full. The danger comes from the constant generation of an invisible vapor in the confined space above the oil. The vapor, which is inflammable, is caused by the heat of the burner communicated to the oil; but it will not explode unless exposed to flame. The metal attachments on lamps often become forty degrees warmer than the oil, which is itself sometimes as high as 200 degrees. Hence, kerosene, to be entirely safe, should be near 150 degrees proof.

In the United States alone, last year, over 100 deaths per week were reported from accidents by kerosene.

A simple test is to place a tablespoonful of the oil in a saucer and apply a lighted match; if the oil ignites it is unsafe; never use it. If it does not take fire it is not necessarily safe, because the temperature of the oil in open air is not so great as that in a burning lamp.

Keep the metallic parts of lamps clean and the air passages open. After a lamp has been burning three or four hours at one time, never relight again till filled.

In extinguishing the light, turn the wick down quite low and allow a few seconds to intervene before blowing out the flickering flame, or, better still, do not blow it out, but let it flicker out. —Prairie Farmer.

Fruit-Eating.—When fruit does harm it is because it is eaten at improper times, in improper quantities, or before it is ripened and fit for the human stomach. A distinguished physician has said that if his patients would make a practice of eating a couple of good oranges before breakfast, from February to June, his practice would be gone. The principal evil is that we do not eat enough of fruit; that we injure its finer qualities with sugar, that we drown them in cream. We need the medical action of the pure fruit acids in our system, and their cooling, corrective influence. —Medical Journal.

From Acute to Chronic

Is an easy stage in cases of dyspepsia. A slight attack of indigestion, especially when there is a predisposition to digestive weakness of the stomach, must speedily culminate in the more obstinate form of the disease. It is well, therefore, to adopt preventive measures early. Although Hostetter's Stomach Bitters overcomes, if persisted in, cases of dyspepsia of long standing, it is obviously the part of wisdom to use it ere the malady assumes a chronic phase. This is particularly true, because as dyspepsia advances it engenders other bodily evils, such as disorders of the liver, constipation or undue looseness of the bowels, nervous disorders, hypochondria, sleeplessness. These maladies are both prevented and remedied by the Bitters, but how much better to check them in their outset with the great alterative than to wait until they establish a firmer foothold in the system. Surely the advisability of this must be apparent.

Physicians recommend Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a cure for Heart Disease, showing they have confidence in it. A lady says:

"From a child I have been subject to Palpitation of the Heart, and for the past few years have continued to grow worse, palpitation being followed by dizziness and suffocation, so much so that if I attempted to lie down my heart would seem to cease beating entirely, causing great prostration. I was obliged to have a physician in attendance for nearly a year. At last he advised me to try Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, which I did, and have not taken any other medicine since. Am nearly well, and have great reason to believe I shall get entirely cured by continuing to take the HEART REGULATOR.

Hayes' Title.

However varied may be the opinions concerning the validity of Hayes' title to the Presidency there is not a question in the minds of either Democrats or Republicans upon one important point, viz.: the unquestionable right of Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines to the title of the Standard Remedies of the age. Listen to the voice of the sovereign people:

New Orleans, June 10, 1878.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Your Pleasant Purgative Pellets seem to be particularly adapted to the wants of the people in this warm climate, where bilious affections are particularly prevalent. I regard them as the best cathartic I have ever tried. Yours truly, John C. Henderson.

Boston, Mass., May 14, 1878.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Your Golden Medical Discovery has cured my boy of a Fever Sore of two years' standing. Please accept our gratitude. Yours truly, Henry Whiting.

There is no pain, no matter how severe nor what the cause, that cannot be partly or wholly relieved by Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used internally and externally. It is the most powerful remedy known to medical men.

Hon. C. R. Parsons, Mayor of Rochester, was radically cured of Bright's Disease by Craig's Kidney Cure. Depot, 42 University Place, N. Y.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—Farmers, Families and Others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. TOBIAS' VENETIAN LINIMENT, for the cure of Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Croup, Colic and Seasickness, taken internally (it is perfectly harmless; see oath accompanying each bottle) and externally for Chronic Rheumatism, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Cuts, Burns, Swellings, Bruises, Mosquito Bites, Old Sores, Pains in Limbs, Back and Chest. The VENETIAN LINIMENT was introduced in 1847, and no one who has used it but continues to do so, many stating if it was Ten Dollars a Bottle they would not be without it. Thousands of Certificates can be seen at the Depot, speaking of its wonderful curative properties. Sold by the Druggists at 40 cts. Depot, 42 Murray street, New York.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, OCT. 17, 1878.

THEODORE REED, - - - Editor.

Hon. W. G. Colerick's official majority for congress in the 12th district is 7,502 over Studebaker, who was supported by Republicans and Nationals.

The following returns of the state election are official: Shanklin (dem.), 194,491; Moore (rep.), 180,755; James (nat.), 39,446. Shanklin's plurality, 13,736.

That overwhelming republican majority in Ohio has dwindled down to 3000, while the democratic majority in Indiana is steadily increasing as the official returns are sent in.

In Pennsylvania the political fight is waxing warm. The Democracy are calling on help from Indiana, in the way of public speakers. Hendricks and other prominent Indiana Democrats will lend their aid.
